We shall not, ever so partially, forestall our obliging correspondent, and dull the appetite of our readers by attempting even a condensation of the commencement exercises as pnblished in our exchanges. We shall not do these things, because our correspondent aforesaid will do ample justice in manner and matter to both Davidson and Peace. The exercises, let us merely say, passed off pleasantly and satisfactorily. Col. D. K. McRae's lectnre on "Genius and Talent" was delivered and was pronounced inimitable. Mr. A. White delivered the Alumni address. The student orators acqnitted themselves well, and the prizes were duly awarded. Maj. D. J. Devane, of Wilmington, was elected Alumni orator for Commencement of 1880.

RETIREMENT OF DR. WM. BROWN.

The valedictory of Rev. Dr. Wm. Brown appears in the last issne of the Central Presbyterian. He retires from the editorship after a laborions and faithfnl service of eighteen years, with the kindest regards of his cotemporaries, and we add of those to whom he has been throngh his paper a weekly visitant for so long a period. The heartiest good wishes of all attend him and will continne with him in his retirement. A single word as to the ability with which he has discharged his dnties or as to the effectiveness of his work wonld be snperfinons. The Central Presbyterian has been a recognized power in our Southern Chnrch and beyond, and the Central Presbyterian has been Dr. Brown.

We will be pardoned for expressing the feeling of deep personal regret with which we contemplate the retirement of one, with whom it has been our happiness to act, while acting independently, in such general accord and with such entire harmony; not only so, we desire to record our appreciation of the courtesies of a more direct and private nature, of which throngh him and the partner whom he so gracefully acknowledges, we have been the recipients.

It is gratifying to know that the impairment of vision which necessitates Dr. Brown's retirement, is not of so serions a natnre as to preclnde him from other lines of service for the Master, and most sincerely do we trnst that there are yet reserved for him many years of abnndant temporal and spiritnal prosperity.

DEGREES CONFERRED.

Westminster College conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity npon Rev. W. W. Robertson of Fulton, Mo., in Missouri Presbytery, and npon Rev. Jackson Smith of Armagh, Ireland. Says the St. Louis Presbyterian:

"Westminster has now two cherished representatives in beautiful Erin, having some years ago conferred the degree of D. D. on Rev. Robert Watts, formerly of Philadelphia, now the distinguished Professor of Theology in the Assembly's College, Belfast, Ireland."

We learn indirectly that the doctorate of divinity was conferred by Hampden-Sydney College on Rev. E. H. Harding of First church, Charlotte, and on Rev. E. Wood of North Carolina.

We do not enter into the feeling that disapproves of these titles. Degrees are certainly conferred nnworthily, or at least injndiciously, at times, bnt of late years we can say, that so far as refers to Presbyterian ministers, within scope of our acqnaintance, the titles been most worthily bestowed.

PHYSICIAN'S RETURN OF A DEATH.

Throngh the kindness of Dr. T. F. Wood, of Wilmington, we have before ns a copy of a small book arranged to secure accurate returns of mortality, for incorporation in the tenth census of the United States. The book contains a large number of copies of a blank form of "Physician's Return of a Death," which inclndes the period from Jnne 1, 1879, to May 31, 1881. All items of information necessary to effect the end in view are provided for in the blank, and duly carried ont the plan cannot fail to be most effectnal in secnring accnrate statistics on the question of health and disease. It is designed to place a copy in the hands of every physician in the United States, and a sufficiency of the books are provided by the government for that purpose.

It is explicitly promised that all information obtained from this sonrce shall be held strictly confidential.

Any physician failing to receive a copy should address General Francis A. Walker, Superintendant of Census, Washington, D. C.

THE SCOTTISH ASSEMBLIES.

THE FREE CHURCH.

The General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland met in Edinbnrgh on the 22d May nlt. Rev. J. Chalmers Burns was elected Moderator. Ten collections for various objects raised £20,947, being a falling off of £3,365 during the year; in 353 cases the appointed collections had not been made. The Committee on the Conversion of the Jews reported the baptism of seven Jews during the year. They are flocking to Jernsalem, where there are now 18,000. Much interest was taken in a proposal to overtnrn a decision of the Synod of Lothian and Tweeddale, regarding the holding of religions services on Christmas Day by Rev. Dr. Walter C. Smith. The Synod declined by its action to regard snch services as calling for jndicial action, bnt earnestly disclaimed countenancing or approving them. A committee was appointed to report a plan increasing the size of Assembly Hall. The membership of the General Assembly is 736, being larger than that of the British Parliament or any European or American Legislatnre. A redaction seems to be imperatively demanded by the necessities of the case. The collections for the Manse and Church Building fund was nnsatisfactory. For Church extension which contemplated raising £100,000, all bnt about £3,000 have been raised. Three Glasgow elders contributed £5,000 each to this scheme. The subject of Temperance was made a matter of conference and all shades of opinion were advanced.

The scheme of Education was earnestly discussed and adopted.

"The report of the Committee on Education stated that the income to the education scheme for the year ending 31st March, 1879, was £4350 9s. 1d. The congregational contributions amounted to £1578 7s. 7d.; legacies and donations to £1504 14s. 6d.; interest on investments, &c., to £330; and the sum received from the Ladies' Society for the Religions Improvement of the Highlands and Islands to £939 10s. There had been paid to teachers £2317 18s. 6d., given as a grant towards meeting the expense of providing the new Normal School buildings at Moray House, Edinbnrgh, £1000, and £499 13s., paid as University scholarships to male students attending the Normal Schools in Edinbnrgh and Glasgow."

Great gratification was expressed at the excellent religions training given in the Free Normal Schools. Nowhere was a better religions training to be found.

The Free Chnrch has since the disruption (in 1843), expended six hundred thousand ponnds, nearly three millions of dollars, in religions education. The best method of relieving the sufferers by the failnre of the Glasgow Bank was discussed, and a committee appointed to confer with similar committees that may be appointed. The conduct of the Presbytery of Dalkeith, the members of which nnanimously agreed to give one-tenth of their income for the year to the object, was heartily commended.

The great question before the Assembly was that of Professor Robertson Smith. The Assembly after some discussion on matters of snndry dissents and complaints against a resolution of the Synod confirming a decision of Aberdeen Presbytery sustained the complaints. The Assembly then came to a distinct consideration of discipline regarding Prof. Smith's views as to the Book of Deuteronomy which are not in accord with those of the Chnrch. Dr. A. Bonar proposed the following motion:

"The General Assembly instruct the Presbytery of Aberdeen to meet and take immediate steps for having a libel as regards the second part of the first alternative charge served in dne form up n Professor Smith; they also instruct the Presbytery in the event of their finding the libel sustained either by the admission of Professor Smith, or by adequate proof, to suspend him from his functions, professorial, ministerial, and judicial till the next meeting of Assembly; reserve the final judgment in the case till that meeting of Assembly; and the Assembly now appoint a committee to adjust the libel in view, excluding from it all the parts that are not now applicable, and to report at a future diet of this Assembly."

Principal Rainey offered as a substitnte:

"That having respect to the novelty and perplexity of this case in certain of its aspects, the serious difference of opinion that prevails throughout the Church regarding it, the gravity of the consequences which the disposal of it may involve; the General Assembly resolve, before proceeding further with the libel, to appoint a committee fairly representative of the Church, with power if they see cause, to confer with Professor Smith, directing them to consider the case in all its bearings, with a view to ascertain the best means for arriving at a result honoring to the truth of God, and fitted to secure, as far as may be, all the weighty interests which are at stake, and to report to next General Assembly."

After a lengthy discussion, without acrimony, the vote was taken and resulted in 320 for the original motion and 319 for the substitute.

ESTABLISHED CHURCH.

The Assembly of the Established Church met in Edinbnrgh on same day as that of the Free Church. A full report of the Jewish Mission Committee was made:

"The improvement in the attendance of Jewish children had been most marked in the girls' school at Alexandria, where their nnmbers had risen from forty in 1876 and forty-five in 1877 to 114 in 1878; and in Smyrna, where their nnmbers in 1878 were 130 (thirty-three boys and ninety-seven girls) against fifty-five (ten boys and forty-five girls) in 1816, and sixty boys and girls in 1877. Special attention was called to the fact that no less than 307 parishes had sent no contributions to the scheme during the past year. The total fnnds for the ordinary purposes of the Mission for the year ending 31st December, 1878, amonnted to £5,667 14s. 11d., being £1,428 0s. 2d. more than the income for last year; and the expenditnre for the same period had been £5,010 16s., being £288 5s. 1d. less than the expenditnre for last year. Bnt for the fact that the increase on legacies amonnted to the large sum of £1,163 14s. 6d. the income would have fallen short of the expenditure by £506 15s. 7d.

Robert Reid Rae, who was deposed in 1874, and is now in full communion with the Scottish National church of London (Dr. Cumming's) and who is reported as active and earnest in his labors in a private capacity, asked to be restored to the ministry. The subject was remitted to a committee.

The Committee on Union with other Churches reported having received courteous replies to their communications, but "admit that there is no hope of Union being effected with the United Presbyterian, the Reformed Presbyterian Church, or the Original Secession Church; and they also state that they have no encouragement to continne at present this correspondence with the Free Church, in regard to Union.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

It does seem a little hard that the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church should order its Board of Education not to grant licensnre to a student using tobacco in any form, unless it also forbids the indulgence of its ministers in the same habit.

The street cars in New York city are annoying the church-goers so seriously, that they complain that Sabbath services near the line of railway must be suspended, unless the running of cars on Sunday can be stopped. Churches of the various denominations, Protestant and Catholic are taking steps to effect a discontinnance.

Rev. Dr. Hoge of Richmond has an invalid daughter who has been confined to her couch for ten years past. A telephone has been attached to the pulpit of the Dr.'s church, and by a wire rnnning from the church to the roof and down the ventilator at Dr. Hoge's house, and there connecting with a Bell hand telephone, the invalid on a recent Sabbath distinctly heard the sermon and all the service of prayer and choral praise.

Acheen is a province in the northwestern part of Sumatra and contains about 25,500 sqnare miles. The government is a hereditary monarchy, entirely independent of all ontside control. The religion is Mohammedan. Its capital contains many mosques and other fine edifices. Advices come that the Dutch, who possess the remainder of the island of Sumatra, early in April sent out several detachments which devastated native villages and crops. There has been severe fighting in consequence.

One of our secular exchanges claimed, and made its claim good, to be established that the people of North Carolina might be brought to know each other better. Our great desire is, that Presbyterians throughout our Southern country may be made fully acquainted with all that is transpiring, of a religious nature, in our communion. Nothing else will so effectually draw us together and bind us in the ties of a common brotherhood. Give us then the news. A postal card and a pen, or pencil, is all that is necessary to furnish items for our "News Notes" column. With some degree of pride, certainly with gratitude, we refer to the extent to which we have been favored in this regard. We earnestly request a continuance and increase of such favors.

France and England have agreed not to require the Khedive of Egypt to appoint European Ministers, bnt they will hold him responsible for the consequence of his acts. This sounds very like a resolution, and resolutions without acts consequent, do not amount to a great deal. By the way, speaking of resolutions, we are reminded of the remark in our last Presbytery, by a brother who declined affixing resolutions to his report because he had heard of the "Acts of the Apostles," but had never heard of their resolutions; and this again introduces General Bragg, as reporting from Savannah, during the late war, that he had for its defence, five thousand men and a string of resolutions. The general was a military scientist, and we are at a loss to know what he did with those resolutions.

If the following, which we clip from an exchange, represents the general feeling of the denomination to which it refers, it is well that it should be known. The latter clause we presume is intended to explain the former:

A member of the late Episcopal Convention in Baltimore, Md., said that he would decidedly prefer giving to the Church of Rome than to any of the dissenting sects. He remarked that if a priest came to them from the Church of Rome they were bound to receive him without reordination, "because he had already received the Holy Ghost" (he meant through the Bishop's fingers); but that if a Methodist or any dissenting minister applied to them for admission, he must be reordained because he had not received the Holy Ghost.

Doesn't it strike the reader that these extracts from the Central Baptist and Herald and Presbyter are only too descriptive.

The Central Baptist tells of a woman in Missouri who died recently while holding a letter from a Baptist Church, "According to her own request she was buried with the letter in her hand." And the Central says truly: "This incident suggests the reflection that there are thousands of people who have no other passport to heaven than their church letter." It seems quite certain that many people, who would think it a dreadful thing to be excluded from the church, are living as though the simple fact that their names are on a church roll is sufficient to secure their entrance into heaven; and we fear that in many instances a church letter would be the most conclusive evidence of Christian character that they could produce. Bnt isn't that a very poor ground for hope? Dear Brother, sister, think of it!

The vote on Prohibition in Salisbury township resulted in "No Prohibition" carrying the day by a large majority. At other townships in the same county a similar result occnrred. This surprising outcome is accounted for, in the first named district, by the fact that less than four hundred out of eight hundred voters went to the polls. The Carolina Watchman says as to the result:

"It is still true that the liquor traffic is a curse to individuals and to the community at large, inflicting evils beyond computation. It is still true that it is a crime against the moral and physical well being of society to sustain an institution of this character. And it is still true that while the social and political evils of its continuance will fall on all alike, there is a tribunal where each must answer for himself for the consequences of its perpetnation."

The following from the S. W. Presbyterian seems to be a novel, pleasant and harmless diversion:

"The entertainment given in the lecture-room of the Lafayette Presbyterian church (Rev. Dr. Markham's), on Tuesday evening, June 3d, was an occasion of unusnal interest and success. The concert, vocal and instrnmental, given by the choir and young people of the congregation, manifested taste in the selection and skill in the execution of pieces that were received with pleasure and applause. The tableaux, representing scenes, in Jewish, Roman and British history, varied with groups of exquisite statuary, designed and presented (without rehearsal) by a lady of the church, were pronounced by experienced judges among the finest they had seen. It was a home affair and most creditable to our friends, whom we congratulate on their success."

What shall we say of this advertisement from the Catholic:

"GRAND DRAWING!!—For One Dollar!—A rare chance is offered to those who wish to gain a valuable property, and to have twenty-five Masses offered for their intention. The object of this grand drawing, which was to come off April 14th, but for the reason herein mentioned was deferred till June 10, 1879, is to raise funds to erect a church in the poor bnt promising congregation at Olathe, Kansas. . . . A ticket that entitles the bearer to one share in the 'Grand Drawing' will be sent to those who contribute one dollar ($1) For the spiritual and temporal welfare of those who bny a ticket, induce others to buy, or contribute, however little, to the erection of this much needed church, twenty five Masses will be offered. The winning number will be published in the issne of this paper next after the drawing.

NEWS NOTES.

Rev. Thomas G. Thurston has recently taken charge of the Presbyterian church at Hickory, N. C.

We are pleased to be able to announce that Rev. D. Munroe, of Soddy, Tenn., has been restored to good health, and now, since April last, preaches regularly every Sabbath to his charge.

A friend writes privately from Lenoir, in Caldwell county: Our little church has secured the services of Rev. B. L. Beall, stated supply, he entered on his duties last Sabbath. His family seem to be delighted to get back to their old home.

BURGAW CHURCH ORGANIZED.

The Sustentation Committee, of Wilmington Presbytery, met at Burgaw, N. C., on 12th instant, and on that and succeeding days, transacted such committee business proper, as came before them. By direction of the Presbytery, the way being clear, they on Saturday, 15th inst., constituted the church of Burgaw with thirteen members, from the churches of Pike, Hopewell and Second church, Wilmington. W. T. Bannerman and W. M. Hand were elected elders and S. P. Hand and J. W. Cowan deacons. On Sabbath Mr. Hand was ordained, the others had held offices in other churches, and all were installed. There was much preaching during the session by Rev. Messrs. C. M. Payne, Colin Shaw and G. W. McMillan. The congregations were large and attentive, and the exercises in full highly interesting.

A friend informs us that our statement that Rev. R. Henderson declined considering a call to Lexington church, N. C., was not accurate. We gladly publish the following:

"Mr. Henderson preached for us four Sabbaths with great acceptance, bnt when he left he did not decline to entertain a call; on the other hand he did very plainly intimate that he would consider the matter favorably. Our church will probably act in some way in the matter during the coming week. Our pulpit is at present supplied by Rev. Mr. Watson of Covington, Tenn., a good preacher and a most excellent man. On last Sabbath Hon. J. M. Leach was, on examination, received into our church. Our people are much pleased with Mr. Henderson, and whatever action may be taken will be harmonious."

THE NORTHERN CHURCH ON ROMANISM.

Dr. Patton of Chicago, the retiring Moderator of the Northern Assembly, lately convened at Saratoga, is regarded as a champion of orthodoxy. He bore up the trailing banner of Calvinism, in the contest with Prof. Swing. He was the Ajax of Mr. McCormick's old school organ, the Interior. Our English cousins, casting their eyes over christendom, have selected him as their teacher of Presbyterian theology in London. Hence we turn to his sermon as retiring Moderator with reasonable interest. His topic, the incarnation of the Son, is a vital one, and his declaration that it is the corner-stone of the theology of redemption is sonnd. But when he tells us that we ought to admit to the communion of the Presbyterian Church, as laymen, (not as teachers,) all who hold to Christ's incarnation for man's redemption; and when he makes his own application of this rnle in favor of Trinitarian Universalists and Papists; this seems a new role for a champion of orthodoxy, and a squinting towards Broadchurchism of no little significance. Why, even Mormons hold professedly to the incarnation! So do Campbellites, Perfectionists, and Irvingites! Let Dr. Patton's rnle be applied, and the Presbyterian Church will rival the contents of the great sheet Peter saw in vision.

Dr. Patton's recognition of the popish communion has been virtually sanctioned by his Assembly. This apostasy from the position deliberately adopted by the whole Church, in the great Assembly of 1845, is one of the significant proofs of the relaxation of doctrine and principle, now pervading the Northern Churches. In those better days, our Church truthfully declared, that Rome, being Antichrist, could not be christian; and that her sacraments are invalid and void. Now, when Rome has made herself more than ever an antichrist, and impious usurper of God's prerogative, by her recent doctrines of the papal infallibility and the immaculate conception, these Presbyterians retreat from the testimony of their fathers, and recognize the Antichrist as a christian sister in the family of churches. It would appear that Northern ecclesiastics feel the potent influence of popish votes and numbers, just as their demagogues do. Dr. Patton bases his defection on the fact that there are pions souls within the Romish communion. So, there are pions souls outside all the churches; does this prove that the world is a church of Christ? He has forgotten the distinction which Dr. Hodge so studiously evaded in his sophistical argumeuts for the church character of Rome; between the visible, and the invisible church. The latter includes all of Christ's elect, scattered among all Christian denominations, and outside them all. The former is that organized, human society, professing the true religion of Christ, and governed by his laws. Now Rome, like the great world, may include some of the elect. But as an organized society, she does not profess the true religion, nor govern herself by Christ's laws, nor preach his gospel, nor administer his sacraments. She is farther from Christ, in every distinctive trait, than the mass of worldly people in America to-day. Especially has she blackened herself with the crime—which the profane world never presumes to perpetrate—of sitting in the temple of God and showing herself as God, usurping the incommunicable attribute and authority of Jehovah. This is the era of sham-charity. Such charity towards error and usurpation which God abhors and condemns, is cruelty to souls and disobedience to our Master. The proper object of Christian charity is not hateful error, but the persons and souls of the misguided fellow creatures who have been entrapped into it, and whose miserable state ought to enlist our tenderest sympathies.

REVERENCE FOR THE SANCTUARY.

How shocking it is to see and hear conversation and even laughter in the very vestibule of God's house, and still more within the doors to see persons talking, reading, and otherwise diverting themselves until the services begin! We are not very old, and yet we can remember when such things were never known in the Presbyterian church, and would not have been tolerated. The evil, indeed, we are happy to say, is not universal, but it is extensive enough to deserve notice and call forth rebuke. We can never honor God while we thus profane his sanctuary, even by the permission of such conduct.

An evil heart is the cause of all this evil, but we can suggest some secondary causes which ought to arrest attention. The sanctuary is often used for secular or semi-religious purposes. The power of local association is not small. It is hard to feel solemn and devout in the same house in which we have been entertained by literary discourses or laughed over the anecdotes of a temperance lecture; and most of all is it hard to engage in holy worship in the very same room in which we have almost reveled in a fair or a festival; and some persons are expected to do all this.

Education has much to do with the evil in question. Those who were trained to be decorous, quiet and serious in the house of God, seldom overcome the sentiments and practices of their early days. Bnt when children are allowed to come and go at pleasnre, to sit where they choose, and to behave as their companions aronnd them do, it is to be expected that they will learn to regard God's house like any other house, and as a natnral result, to think that God is no more to be honored or revered than any other being.

We are persuaded that this sin of irreverence, which is manifested more palpably in connexion with God's sanctnary than in any other way, is one of the sorest evils of the day, and yet one that can be as easily checked as any other. The ministry and all church officers ought to give especial attention to this matter; and above all, parents need to nse every possible means to beget in the minds of their children a conviction of the paramount importance of this virtne, of reverence for God and all holy things and places, to repress all lack of it as a vice to be ashamed of and reprobated, like falsehood or dishonesty.—Southern Presbyterian.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Sanitarian: A monthly magazine, devoted to the preservation of health, mental and physical culture. June, 1879. A. N. Bell, M. D., editor; T. P. Corbally, M. D., associate editor. $3 per annum. From A. N. Bell, M. D., New York.

Sunday Magazine for July at hand. Frank Leslie Publishing Co. Conducted by Rev. Dr. C. F. Deems. First by long odds among all magazines of its class. About seventy articles and as many illnstrations, besides At Home and Abroad, Editor's Portfolio, &c., &c., and the many articles in these grand divisions. 25 cents single number and $3 a year.

The subject of Prophecy is very important, and whatever candidly and intelligently discusses it is worthy of attention. The Presbyterian Publishing Company of St. Louis have brought out a work entitled Prophecy, and consisting of a series of lectures by Rev. A. P. Foreman, D. D. These lectures are recommended as expressing views entirely sonnd and orthodox, and duly cautious.

"The Catholic Church in the United States; Its Rise, Relations with the Republic, Growth and Future Prospects," by Rev. I. T. Hecker. 1879. From the Catholic Publication Society New York. This is a reprint of an article in the standard magazine, the Catholic World. It possesses significance and value, as giving the Romanist's view of the postnre and progress of his Church, and ought to be generally read. We propose to comment on its statements, but cannot do so this week.

Spiritual Songs for Social Worship, Scribner & Co., New York. This book, edited by Rev. C. S. Robinson, D. D., was prepared in response to nnmerous calls for a popular hymn and tune book. It contains, it is thought, nearly all the best hymns and tunes now used, in social worship, in 553 hymns and 330 tunes. Retail 75 cents, 20 per cent. discount to churches. A single copy will be sent for examination without charge, to be returned if not wanted, or 60 cents may be remitted if the book is retained.

We have received from the publishers, D. Appleton & Co., several of their "Handy-Volume Series" of books, among which are The Rogue, An Attic Philosopher in Paris, An Accomplished Gentleman, Geier-Wally, etc. We have given this class of literature bnt little attention, though some of these books are spoken of as possessing some very pleasant reading. This series embrace biographies and historical sketches. The second book named is said to be exceedingly interesting, containing nothing deleterious to the young mind. The last named, Geier-Wally, is a wild German tale. Altogether, they form a bit of pleasant reading for those who are fond of light fiction.

School History of North Carolina from 1584 to 1879: By John Wheeler Moore. Boards $1, full cloth $1 25. From Alfred Williams & Co., Raleigh, N. C. North Carolinians have too little State pride. We have enough to be proud of, and our children ought to know it, even if their parents choose to remain ignorant. This valnable history comes at the right time to snpply a great want in our schools. It seeks with filial devotion to portray, as well as the necessary brevity of a school book admits, our claim to respect and consideration as a State." Mr. Moore's care and diligence have furnished a book of great interest and value. Were we disposed to find fault with it, we would object to its richness in material. Beginning with the heroic Raleigh, Mr. Moore traces the varied fortunes of North Carolina through proprietary, colonial and revolutionary changes to this date. He shows the character of the formative population that determined our history; pictures the achievements of our gallant yeomanry, and our lofty men, and arrays a mass of facts so creditable to the State that we want our children to know them all. He writes with the bluntness of honest conviction, but without partiality or prejndice, except in his emphatic discrimination against old bachelors, in which he is right, in our opinion. One error he has fallen into, on page 233, about the division of the Presbyterian Church in 1855. It did not occur until after the late war began. Our Superintendent of Public Instruction has approved this book, and the late Assembly has appointed it to be used in our common schools. We hope it will be generally taught at once.

Pet Series: Six volumes, viz: Gertie's Doll, Bessie's Birds, Doll Flora, White Rabbits, Mary's Doll, Baby Gracie. By Mrs. J. Hildeburn. Illustrated. 1879. Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia. These are beautiful little books of some sixty pages each, written in very simple and perspicuous style, and each conveying in a delightful manner some valuable truth. We would like to see the joy on the faces of those who get them as presents; or of Sunday school children who secure them. Sound religious culture will be fostered by them, while the natural stories, that must be mainly true narratives, will charm the little readers.

Hearing and How to Keep It. By Charles H. Burnett, M. D., Aurist to the Presbyterian Hospital, Philadelphia, &c. 1879. 16 mo. cloth, tinted paper, 50c. From Lindsay & Blakiston, Philadelphia. This is the first of the series of American Health Primers, edited by Dr. W. W. Keen, of Philadelphia. It treats of the structure of the ear; physics and physiology of sound and hearing; the chief diseases, injuries, general hygiene of the ear, and proper and improper treatment. It is beautifully gotten up, with excellent illustrations, and is written in clear style, avoiding useless technicalities, and is adopted to the American standpoint in climate, modes of life, &c.

In Memoriam. Discourses commemorative of the Life and Work of Charles Hodge, D. D., LL. D. Published by order of the Directors and Trustees of the Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J. From Henry B. Ashmead, Sansom street, Philadelphia. 1879. This pamphlet of 75 pages, 8 vo. contains discourses by Rev. Drs. Paxton and H. A. Boardman and Prof. C. A. Aiken, with the minute adopted by the Directors of the Seminary at their annual meeting, 1879. Pupils and admirers of Dr. Hodge will welcome them.

Blackboard and Key. W. F. Schneider publisher, Cleveland, Ohio. $3 a year, or $1 a quarter. This is a large weekly sheet, 32x48 inches, on heavy paper, with black ground and white illustrations, in the form and style of a blackboard, and designated to illustrate the weekly International Sunday school lessons for 1879. Those who lack skill as artists will find much help from this board, ready to be used and easily seen in a large room.

ELOQUENT BY MARRIAGE.

A secular journal describes a certain colonel, who is the brother-in-law of Carl Schnrz, as being "eloquent by marriage." There are a good many men in the warm season who may be described as religions after the same fashion. Their piety is represented by their wives. Why able-bodied men should be unequal to the fatigues of walking to church and listening to services, it is hard for the ordinary mind to understand. Especially is it edifying when, after the Scriptnre is read, "Give honor to the weaker vessel," the weaker vessel stands up and repeats her Creed, and then kneels down to say her prayers, while the athletic head of the house remains seated throughout, and fans himself assiduously with the only palm-leaf within reach.—Churchman.

Rev. J. H. Moore was installed pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church of Savannah, on last Sabbath afternoon, by Rev. S. S. Law, assisted by Rev. S. W. Blain and Rev. R. O. Grant, the Committee of Presbytery. The attendance was very large, and the services were solemn and interesting.—Christian Observer.

The United States Court at Savannah has decided in favor of the validity of will of the late Miss Telfair, of Savannah. Miss Telfair made large bequests to the Independent Presbyterian church in Savannah, the First Presbyterian church in Augusta, the Historical Society, and for various charitable purposes.—Southern Presbyterian.

A friend from Kosciusko sends some very gratifying intelligence. The Lord has been visiting His people there, and a gracious outpouring of the Spirit is the result. Many persons have been converted, and the cause of religion has been greatly refreshed. We trust that the good work may go on and prosper.—S. W. Presbyterian.

A correspondent writes to the Observer that the Presbyterian church at Canton, Miss., which suffered so heavily in the yellow fever is recovering. Valuable additions have been received to the membership, and the congregations are large. The prospect is for good health and good crops the coming season, and thus relief from the most pressure.

The little church at LaGrange, Ky., struggling into existence, has lately enjoyed a season of refreshing from the Master's hand. The faithful pastor, Rev. Gilbert Gordon, closed a meeting on Friday night, 6th inst., during which there were some four additions on profession, and a quantity of good seed sown, and the church greatly revived. During the whole meeting he had the efficient help of Mr. J. H. Hooper, and at different times the assistance of Rev. S. M. Neel, of Shelbyville, Rev. James B. Converse and Rev. E. O. Guerrant, of Louisville. A pious Cherokee Christian lady has donated a lot for a church, and they now have some eight hundred dollars on hand, and hope, by the assistance of liberal brethren, to be able to build them a house of worship this summer.—Christian Observer.

GENERAL.

Wake Forest College, N. C., has elected Rev. Dr. E. T. Winkler to the Presidency made vacant by the death of Rev. W. Hooper. Rev. W. Wingate, D. D. Dr. Winkler is pastor of the Baptist church, of Marion, Ala., and editor of the Alabama Baptist. He ranks high in his denomination.

At a meeting of the Second Advent Church in Caldwell county, N. C., on 1st instant, the Advents urging the necessity of public discussion upon the peculiar doctrines of their church, with any, who differ in opinion with them, were publicly told by Rev. J. C. Cowan, of the M. E. Church, South, that he had never been fully able to see the necessity of such debate, and therefore he felt no inclination to be involved in such discussion, but that any of the Advent brethren seeing such necessity, can be accommodated by taking up on themselves the entire responsibility of becoming the challenging party, and should such be the case, the said J. C. Cowan assured them that under well defined rules and regulations of public debate they should be met, provided that a representative man be selected by them, one on whom they were willing to hang their case.—Presbyterian Press.

NORTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Notwithstanding the unanimous request of the Northern General Assembly to the Rev. Dr. Patton, that he would not resign his chair in the Presbyterian Theological Seminary of the Northwest, he has done so, to take effect in April next. He will assume the Professorship, to which he was recently elected, in the Presbyterian Theological College of England.

Death has been busy among the ministers of the Northern church. Rev. J. B. Wilson, of Buffalo, died at Delantic, N. J., on the 25th nlt.; Rev. Samuel B. Smith, of Carlisle Presbytery, died in Gettysburg, Pa., on May 23d. On the way, returning from the Northern General Assembly, Rev. Lorenzo Westcott died. He was Professor of Theology in Howard University, and had been in infirm health for some time.

The Presbytery of New York, at a late meeting, passed the following resolution: "The Presbytery having, through the mercy of God, been enabled to relieve most of its churches of debt, and being desirous to the exercise of its oversight of the churches to guard against embarrassments in the future, resolves that sessions and boards of trustees of the congregation be informed, that the Presbytery expects to receive notice before any moneys are borrowed and secured on the property of the congregation in which they hold office."

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

David Blair, of the Conemaugh Presbytery, is the senior minister of the United Presbyterian Church. Ordained October 1, 1818, he is in the sixty-first year of his service.

BAPTIST.

The Rev. W. S. Tucker, for four years pastor of the Baptist church at Hopkinton, resigned on Sunday, May 18th, closing his labors with the Baptist denomination. He will join the Episcopal Church.

METHODIST.

One cent a day from each member of the Methodist church at Dunelien, N. J., is expected to pay the church debt.

Dr. J. M. King has hunted out fifty members of Methodist churches who are now residents in Harlem, but some of whom for years have had no visible connection with any church. He has received their letters and added them to St. James' Methodist Episcopal church.

The New York Christian Advocate says that the appeal for $100,000 for work upon the frontier meets with favorable responses from all parts of the country, and nearly $20,000 have been pledged already.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The Second Congregational church at Greenfield, Mass., has imported a ballad horn from London and makes music a prominent feature in the Sunday services.

Eleven of the Sunday schools in Brooklyn have over 1,000 pupils each on their rolls. The largest is Rev. Mr. Eggleston's "Christian Endeavor," where 1,800 children are taught by 131 teachers.

The Rev. Mr. Shears, until recently the Baptist pastor at Galesburgh, Mich., has joined the Congregational church at Augusta.

The late Captain Josiah Pratt, of Essex, Vt., left a sum of money to support a school for the benefit of the children of the church members, $5,000 to be used for the school-house. An annuity of $300 was also left for improving and instructing the church choir.

EPISCOPAL.

Eight Mormons were confirmed by Bishop Tuttle at Plain City, Utah, in February last, in the presence of a large audience, a majority of whom were Mormons.

The Standard of the Cross, which is a leading Episcopalian newspaper, says that among the clergymen and missionaries of the Protestant Episcopal Church, are 223 converts from Judaism.

There is a difficulty in St. Timoth's Episcopal Church, Philadelphia, between the Low and High Church parties, and the former have gone to court. Their bill of complaint urges irregularity in the election of twelve vestrymen on Easter Monday, and further, that the High Church respondents endeavor to place the worship in said church under the charge of the Society of St. John the Evangelist, of Cowley, England, and have called or are about to confer on the Rev. Oliver S. Prescott the position of rector, and desire to introduce novel forms of worship, contrary to the usual custom of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the U. S. A., and to allow the inculcation of strange doctrines and ritual not in accordance with the canons of the said Episcopal Church. The complainants pray that a receiver may be appointed.

REFORMED EPISCOPAL.

The Rev. M. D. Church, former pastor of St. John's Reformed Episcopal church, in Chicago, Ill., has accepted a call to Emmanuel church, Cincinnati, O.

WHERE THE STRENGTH LIES.

The real strength of every church is in its blessing of the Holy Spirit. If this is abundant it will be able for every work. It will gather in the sinners and make itself felt in surrounding reform, precisely in proportion as it is pervaded by the power given it from above. If we were not all, as Christians and congregations, so starveling in our condition, we would do more for the conversion of the world. —United Presbyterian.

A DESIRABLE ARTICLE.

We verily believe that it would be rendering any family a very great service to introduce into it Kitto's Cyclopedia. This Cyclopœdia is the work of John Kitto, D D , F. S. A., author of the "Pictorial Bible," the History and Physical Geography of Palestine, and editor of the Journal of Sacred Literature, etc., etc.

It is arranged expressly for Sunday School Superintendents, Teachers and Bible Students, and embraces a complete and authentic description of all the characters, customs, countries and events mentioned in the Bible, and those connected with them in Egyptian, Persian, Assyrian, Grecian and Roman History. Including the period of over four hundred years between the Old and New Testaments, to which are added many valuable tables, and the products of the latest researches in Biblical literature, together with the knowledge gained by the explorations and discoveries of eminent travellers. The whole illustrated with numerous cuts, maps and full page engravings from the best authenticated models and designs that antiquarian research and ancient monuments can produce.

By special arrangement we can furnish this work well printed and bound in cloth, with the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN one year for $4 50—or to any new subscriber, or any one, sending us a new subscriber, at $4 00 for paper and cyclopœdia. Publishers price is $4 50.

THE MAP OF PALESTINE.

We have sent out this map quite extensively, and it has, we believe, given universal satisfaction; at least, no complaints have been made, and many have expressed hearty appreciation.

It is 28x42 inches in size and sold by publishers at $1 00.

We furnish gratis with one new subscriber at $2 65.

Mrs. MARTHA M. PHIFER, wife of Mr. W. F. Phifer, died in Charlotte, N. C., on the night of June 1st, 1879.

To those who knew Mrs. Phifer it would be superfluous to mention all those graces and virtues which made her character so lovely.

For many years she walked with God. and the closing scenes were undimmed by any doubt—undisturbed by any fear.

Her life was holy—her death was peaceful. Could one wish for more? E. H. H.

IN MEMORIAM.

Departed this life, in Winston, N. C., on the 29th of May last, Mrs. ELIZABETH CARTER BROWN, in the 69th year of her age.

She received her higher education at the Salem Female Academy, when her home was in her native county Caswell, lived for years in Davie county, and spent the close of her life near the scenes of her early training, and where reside three of her four surviving children. She early professed faith in Jesus Christ as her Saviour, under the ministry of Dr. N. H. Harding, and joined the Presbyterian church in Yanceyville; and her husband, Dr. John E Brown, dying over 30 years ago, and leaving her with five minor children, some of them quite small, she was soon made to feel that she had chosen the good part for time as well as for eternity. Her husband's dying desire that those whom he was about to leave fatherless should be raised up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, became the great end of her efforts and prayers, and she had abundant reason to rejoice, as she was wont to do, in the faithfulness of a covenant-keeping God who declares himself to be a father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widow in his holy habitation Four surviving children, two sons and two daughters, are members of the church of her love. and both the sons are ruling elders, one in the 1st Presbyterian church of Charlotte and the other in the Presbyterian church of Winston, and all the children of her deceased son are also members of the church.

Her life's task was well done, and the results are living memorials of maternal prudence, affection and devotion, and of Christian instruction, faith and example; and her declining years were overshadowed by a rich experience of Divine grace, and by the tender and unremitting care of her loving offspring As she neared the end of her earthly pilgrimage her thoughts became more fixed on the things beyond, and those who were on terms of intimacy with her could easily mark the ripening of her character for the higher life, even in one of her quiet and modest nature which shrank from the public exhibition of its inner emotions Weeks before her last illness she said to a lady of the writer's family that she was then spending very happy nights with her Saviour—a troubling cough kept her awake, and the sleepless hours were made delightful by thoughts on the love of Jesus, and by communion with her Divine Lord Her mortal sickness lasted but a few days, and the surprise to her family was not one to her. She seems to have been calmly anticipating the end, her worldly affairs had been carefully and minutely arranged, and everything even in her chamber and wardrobe, showed the preparation of one meditating a long journey and ready for the summons to leave at any hour; and during all her illness down to its last stroke, her mind was clear, her heart fixed, and her hopes brightening with anticipations of the inheritance of the Saints in light.

Every step now to the boundary line of time and eternity was brighter and more joyful and all beholders were deeply impressed with the truth and reality of the Christian faith. The spirit brightened with the decay of its earthly tabernacle, the aged pilgrim was seen to be comforted by a Divine rod and staff as she went down into the valley and shadow of death, and she who by nature, and in her bodily strength was most unpretentious, became more and more joyful in religious exercises as she faded from the world, and to the moment of its sudden and painless departure, her soul gave stronger and more fervent expression to her trust and delight in him "who loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood." "The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. xv.: 56 57. C. H. W.

THE TIDY HOUSEWIFE.

The careful tidy housewife, when she is giving her house its spring cleaning, should bear in mind that the dear inmates of her house are more precious than houses, and that their systems need cleansing by purifying the blood, regulating the stomach and bowels to prevent and cure the diseases arising from spring malaria and miasma, and she should know that there is nothing that will do it so perfectly and surely as Hop Bitters, the purest and best of all medicines See other column.

EXTRACT FROM LETTER OF DR. WM. T. HOWARD,
Of Baltimore, Professor of Diseases of Women and Children in the University of Maryland, dated August 1st, 1873.

Dr. Howard compares these Waters with those of the celebrated Greenbrier White Sulphur, West Virginia, and adds the following:

"Indeed, in a certain class of cases, it is much superior to the latter. I allude to the abiding debility attendant upon the tardy convalescence from grave acute diseases; and more especially to the Cachexia and sequents incident to Malarious Fevers in all their grades and varieties, to certain forms of atonic dyspepsia, and all the affections peculiar to women that are remediable at all by mineral waters. In short, were I called upon to state from what mineral waters I have seen the greatest and most unmistakable amount of good accrue in the largest number of cases in a general way, I would unhesitatingly say the Buffalo Springs, in Mecklenburg County, Virginia."

EXTRACT FROM LETTER OF DR. HARVEY L. BYRD.
Of Baltimore, late Professor of Women and Children in the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Maryland. Dated Baltimore, September 21st, 1877.

"During my stay at the Buffalo Lithia Springs, as resident physician, for the season just closed, I had ample opportunities for observing the action of the waters of the several Springs on different constitutions and the two sexes, and I have no hesitation in expressing the opinion that, in the large majority of chronic Female Diseases, and especially those connected with the Uro-Gential Organs, they have no equal as a medical agent in the whole range of Therapeutic application. In Leuchorrhœa, Amenorrhœa, Dysmenorrhœa and Cystorrhœa, their action may be regarded as almost specific. From my experience with the action of those waters, I regard them as possessing a degree of curative power and an extent of adaptation in chronic diseases found in no other mineral water of which I have any knowledge, and I believe they might be used in almost all cases of chronic disease, with benefit."

EXTRACT FROM LETTER OF DR. JOEL WATKINS,
Of Charlotte Court House, Va., of April 1st, 1877.

"I have been acquainted with the Buffalo Springs, in Mecklenburg County, Va., for a number of years, and have frequently witnessed its healing powers. It is efficacious in as many different conditions of the human system as any mineral water or medical agent of which I have any knowlege, but its crowning glory is its efficacy in Female Diseases; and in the obstructions and irregularities to which young females are subject, particularly when connected with, or dependent upon indigestion, I consider it almost a specific."

FOR THE FAMILY.

Why?

Why does the bud that is near to its breaking
Wake sweeter smiles than the full-blown rose?
Why does the dream on the verge of awaking
Stir deeper truths than a deeper repose?

Why does the love that is broken with parting
Lift itself higher by the fulness of pain?
Why is the incomplete rapture of starting
Close on completion we never attain?

Why? For a boundless, unsatisfied longing
Lies deepest down in the warm human heart;
Ever with this are the sympathies thronging,
Ever by this do the heaven flowers start.

Grow by our Sprng: we can follow you wholly
Only as far as its instincts are sent;
Summer's a fact that is hidden and holy;
We have not seen it—we are not content.

Sambo's Sam.

BY EDWARD BAND.

"Bress him, honey, bress him! Don't de nuffin wrong as yer knows of. Don't yer tell a lie. Don't yer run if yer get caught."

"No, thir."

"Sure, Sam?"

"Thure."

Sam was Sambo's child. The two faced one another with expanded optics, their mutually delegated souls shining out of their ebony surroundings, and responsively grinning like two pumpkin lanterns out of the shadows of the night.

Sam seized the rope of his sled and pulled it down Pearl street. It was a yellow piece of handiwork, each of its two runners gay and frightful also with an immense red dragon. It is needless to say that it was the effort of that celestial artist, Chung Foo, sometime laundry man, Pearl street. The work had been done to square up Chung's candy account at Sambo's shop.

"Dat am a lubly boy," said Sambo, gazing after Sam.

Nature had given Sam a head and a body suggestive of a big drum mounted on another drum a good deal bigger, and his legs were short, stout and drum-like also. If he had laid down upon the sidewalk he could have rolled down hill much faster than he could have walked.

"A lubly boy," Sambo persisted in thinking, and then turned into his snug quarters.

It was this child of Sambo now going down the street, closely resembling the duck tribe in his gait. The coasting ground was a little risky. It was in the immediate neighborhood of a boy enemy, Biddy O'Tooles. She had been so much annoyed by the boys as their sleds banged against her fence, and had received so many snow-balls from their careless hands when hanging out her clothes (she ran a laundry) that she only waited a favorable opportunity to let an explosion drive along under the whole line of the race of boys. Murderous Guy Fawkes was in the plump face of Biddy O'Tooles

Biddy O'Tooles' gate was open the morning of our story, a fact noticed by her arch-enemy, Pompey Jones. He was spry as a cat, sly as a fox, and slippery as an eel. In his moral perceptions he was almost as obtuse as those animals. Pomp was a great marksman. No boy at a roll could pop off more birds from the street telegraph wire. No boy could send a stone more neatly through Biddy O'Tooles' attic window. Like a bee to his hole, or a bullet to the bull's eye, went the missiles of Pompey Jones. He now made a proposition to Sam, and at the same time giving a sly wink to the other boy coasters.

"Sammy, how are ye? Want to earn two cents jest holdin' on to yer sled and havin' a ride? There, you turn round and sit so, back to the front of yer sled," he added, dropping on the backs of the two red dragons. "You sit so, and I'll give ye a push. It won't hurt."

Sam hesitated.

"Two cents, you know, chile."

Pomp held up two old-fashioned coppers about as big as the shields the Greeks carried at Troy. One would exhaust a mine.

"Big ones, you know, Sammy. Make a soul happy! Look!"

Sam wavered badly.

"Big ones, and all yer own, boy!"

Sam yielded. With a grin he seated himself for the fatal ride. Pomp pointed the sled skilfully so that it would be likely to shoot through the opened gate into Biddy O'Tooles' yard, and likely also to knock into confusion a basket of linen that had just been brought out.

Away went Sam, innocently grinning, across the street, over the sidewalk, through the gate, plump into Biddy's basket. Such a yell of delight as went up from Pomp and his corps of spectators! Sam began to pick himself up from the mass of linen, struggling out of its snowy wealth, possibly suggesting but hardly resembling Aphrodite rising out of the foam of the sea.

"Run, boys, she's comin'!" shouted Pomp, spying his old enemy, Biddy, at the window.

Nobody, though, ran very far but the guilty one. The rest stayed and looked on from a safe distance.

"Run, Sammy," cried a spectator, in sympathy with Pomp's victim.

"No, thir!" shouted brave little Sam.

He found he was in a trap, but he meant to stand by and look after the damages.

"Arrah! arrah! villain! I'll catch ye!" came the stormy salute from an upper window, and down came Biddy as fast as two hundred pounds weight of flesh would permit her.

Sam didn't budge an inch.

"I'm thorry," he said, "I didn't thee it, and here ith money for it."

He held out the big coppers like a Greek giving up two beloved shields.

Three things astonished Biddy: Sam did not run; Sam was sorry; Sam offered to pay damages. Had Ovid's "Golden Age" dawned in the history of the race of boys?

"Twan't him, mum! 'Twas another feller steered him, and he couldn't help himself," called out the voice of a juvenile spectator at the gate.

Biddy was still more surprised.

It was an interesting sight. Sam was manfully holding his ground, his eyes lighting up with a miniature exhibition of fire-works, and in his hand was the reparation money. Biddy O'Tooles' two hundred weight of humanity was planted opposite him, like a big columbiad before a fat little poodle.

Biddy quickly came to a conclusion.

"All right, Sammy. It won't murther my clothes. Keep yer cints," said the magnanimous Biddy.

"Hurrah for Biddy O'Tooles!" came up a shout from the gate. "Hurray for Sammy!" and his juvenile admirers planted him on his sled and pulled him to Sambo's "store," presenting him as the boy that did not run. The generous and opulent proprietor in his delight rewarded each crowing urchin with a long stick of molasses candy. Off they went, gay as a line of knights armed with golden lances.

Biddy and the boys were all good friends after that.

As for Pomp, his mother executed a lively tune upon him with a small rattan, until, with all his heart, he wished it might be another boy catching it or else another woman laying it on.

—Golden Hours for March.

The Praying Clerk.

A New England merchant doing a large business requiring several clerks, a short time since, missed several articles of value from his store. He determined to watch the habits of these young men to discover, if possible, which one, if either of them, was not trustworthy.

There was one of them who appeared particularly active and faithful. His dress was inferior to that of the other clerks, and he was evidently not particularly popular among them. The merchant learned that this young man remained for half an hour or more after the others left, with the door of the store locked. This circumstance awakened his suspicions, and he arranged a plan to conceal himself in the store, so that he might discover what occurred when the clerk supposed himself to be unobserved. Having sent the young man upon an errand just before the hour of closing, he entered his place of concealment. The door was locked, as usual, at the proper time.

The clerk at once began to sweep and put the establishment in order. While waiting for the dust to settle he was seen to go behind the counter, and taking something from beneath it, place it in the breast of his coat.

The merchant was now alive to discover what had been taken, and what was to be done with it. The young man went to the window and sat in silence a few moments, apparently examining the package which he had taken from his breast.

The merchant was not long left in doubt. His clerk soon fell upon his knees. He saw that it was the Bible he had been reading. And now he offered aloud a simple and touching prayer for himself, his mother and sister, his employer, and particularly for a brother clerk who, he feared, was yielding to temptation. After he had finished dusting he left the store, unconscious of having had a human eye upon him.

It is easy to believe that the merchant was deeply affected by what he had seen and heard. The clerk's salary was increased several hundred dollars a year, and he was given the position made vacant by the discharge of another, whose criminal acts had been discovered.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Stonewall Jackson.

It was the end of a bleak November day, the fires of railway ties extending in a long line either way as far as the eye could reach, made still more neutral by contrast with their ruddy light the dun gray fields of stubble and the woods in which the gorgeous panoply of the earlier season was paling into russet and ashy tones. The work was over and we were waiting with impatience for the order to take up the line of march back to camp, for the evening air struck chilly through our tattered and threadbare jackets, and we had eaten nothing since early morning. Moreover, a wild rumor had spread abroad that an issue of fresh pork awaited our return, and though the long habit of expecting nothing good until it came secured us against any disappointment, there were not wanting tender memories of short biscuit to raise our anticipations higher than we cared to own. Thus preoccupied we are fain to refer to a distant cheering further down the line to the tidings of the coming rations, and we gather by the roadside in order to get off the more promptly when our turn shall arrive. The sound grows more and more distinct every moment, and now, far down the road, some moving object can be discerned in a cloud of dust which travels rapidly our way. Nearer and nearer it comes, louder and yet more enthusiastic ring the shouts, and now we make out in the dust the figure of a single horseman with a clump of others trailing off into obscurity behind him—Jackson is coming. A moment more and he is here, going at almost top speed, his hat is off, his hair blown back from his broad forehead, his eyes dancing and his cheeks aglow with excitement and the rush of the keen air. And now the cheers grow deafening and hats swung more wildly still as the men of the Foot Cavalry recognise their leader. The cavalcade passes by like a whirlwind and disappears in the dust up the road, cheered to the very last lagging courier of the escort, for we are in a good humor now with ourselves and all of the world. And as we step briskly out upon our homeward march the air feels fresh and invigorating, and the miles seem shorter than they were in the morning even the beloved biscuit is of minor consequence and the promised pork pales beside the thought which fills us, we had seen Jackson. And we got the pork besides.—"Johnny Reb" papers in Scribner's for June.

The Victoria Cross.

The Victoria Cross, which has just been granted to the defenders of Rorke's Drift, was instituted during the Crimean War, the Royal Warrant founding it being dated 20th January, 1856. The object of the decoration is to distinguish individual instances of merit and valor in the army and navy, but in cases where a large body of men have performed some specially daring action in which all are reported to have behaved with equal courage, a certain number of officers, non-commissioned officers and men are selected by their comrades for the decoration. The Cross is suspended from a blue ribbon in the navy, and from a red one in the army, and carries with it annuity of £10 to all except commissioned officers. In the event of any one who has already received the Cross performing such acts of bravery as would have entitled him to it, a clasp or bar, to be worn on the ribbon, is to be granted, such bar to carry with it an additional annuity of £5. No instance of the grant of the bar is, however, on record. The warrant granting the Cross provides that it shall be given only for bravery in the presence of the enemy, and to members of the army and navy only; but both these provisions have been infringed, as private O'Hea, of the First Battalion Rifle Brigade, received the decoration for courage and devotion shown in removing gunpowder from a burning railway van in Canada; and during the Indian Mutiny at least three civilians, Messrs. Mangels, Macdonnell and Kavanagh, obtained the gun-metal cross. It has also been conferred upon one volunteer, Major Heapy, of New Zealand, for gallant conduct in helping wounded men under a heavy fire, but it is remarkable that the decoration has never been bestowed upon a native of India, in spite of the numerous acts of heroism and self-devotion recorded of our Sepoys and Sowars.—London Weekly Review.

The Child-Dike.

Holland is a beautiful country, full of green fields, with cattle and sheep grazing in the pastures, but there are few trees and no hills to be seen. The ground is so flat and low that two or three times the sea has rushed in over parts of it and destroyed whole towns. In one of these floods, about two hundred years ago, more than twenty thousand people were drowned. In some of the towns that were flooded not a creature of any kind was left alive.

A large part of the water that came in at the time of that flood still remains. It is known as "the Maas," and in one little part of it there is a little green island—a part of an old dike or dam—which is called the "kinder-dike," or child dike, and it got its name this way:

The waters rushed in over one of the little Friesland villages, and no one had any warning. In one of the houses there lay a child asleep in its cradle—an old fashioned cradle, made tight and strong of good stout wood.

By the side of the cradle lay the old cat, baby's friend, probably purring away as comfortable as possible. In came the water with a fearful roar. The old cat, in her fright, jumped into the cradle with the baby, who slept through all the turmoil as quietly as ever. The people were drowned in their beds. The house was torn from its foundations and broken in pieces. But the cradle floated out on the angry sea in that dark night, bearing safely its precious burden.

When morning came there was nothing to be seen of the villages and green meadows. All was water. Hundreds of people were out in boats trying to save as many lives as possible, and on this little bit of an island that I have spoken of what do you think they found? Why, that same old cradle, with the baby asleep in it and the old cat curled up at her feet, all safe and sound!

Where the little voyagers came from and to whom they belonged, no one could tell. But in memory of them this little island was called "kinder-dike"—the child-dike—and it goes by that name to this day; and this story is told to thousands of little people all over Holland as a remarkable instance of God's providence.—Nursery.

Scott's Abnormal Mental Powers.

It is known but two well that, during the later years of Sir Walter Scott's life there came with bodily prostration a great, but not constant, falling of his mental powers. Some of the phenomena, says the Cornhill Magazine, presented during this part of his career are strikingly illustrative of abnormal mental action occurring even at times when the mental power is, on the whole, much weakened. "Lucy of Lammermoor," though not one of the best of Scott's novels, is certainly above such works as "Count Robert of Paris," "The Betrothed," and "Castle Dangerous." Its popularity may, perhaps, be attributed chiefly to the deep interest of the "ower true tale" on which it is founded; but some of the characters are painted with exceeding skill. Lucy herself is almost a nonentity, and Edgar is little more than a gloomy, unpleasant man, made interesting only by the troubles which fall on him. But Allen Gourlay and Caleb Balderstone stand out from the canvas as if alive; they are as life-like and natural, yet as thoroughly individualised as Edie Ochiltree and Meg Merrilies. The novel neither suggested when it first appeared, nor has been regarded even after the facts became known, as suggesting that Scott, when he wrote it, was in ill health. Yet it was produced under pressure of severe illness, and when Scott was at least in this sense unconscious, and nothing of what he did in connection with the work was remembered when he recovered. "The book," says James Ballantyne, "was not only written, but published, before Mr. Scott was able to rise from his bed; and he assured me that, when it was first put into his hands in a complete shape, he did not recollect one single incident, character, or conversation it contained! He did not desire me to understand, nor did I understand, that his illness had erased from his memory the original incidents of the story, with which he had been acquainted from his boyhood. These remained rooted where they had ever been; or to speak more explicitly, he remembered the general facts of the existence of the father and mother, of the son and daughter, of the rival lovers, of the compulsory marriage, and the attack made by the bride upon the hapless bridegroom, with the general catastrophe of the whole. All these things he recollected, just as he did before he took to his bed; but he literally recollected nothing else—not a single character woven by the romancer, not one of the many scenes and points of humor; not anything with which he was himself connected as the writer of the work." Later, when Scott was breaking down under severe and long-continued labor, and first felt the approach of the illness which ultimately ended in death, he experienced strange mental phenomena. In his diary of Feb. 17th, 1829, he notes that on the preceding day, at dinner, though in company with two or three old friends, he was haunted by "a sense of pre-existence," a confused idea that nothing that passed was said for the first time; that the same topics had been discussed, and that the same persons had expressed the same opinions before. "There was a vile sense of a want of reality in all that I did or said."

In the Jaws of a Lion.

I was out after porcupines, and was lying down one night near a porcupine's hole waiting for him to come out. I had no gun, but only my hunting knife and a knobkerrie, with which to knock the porcupine on the nose; for that, you know, kills him at once. I did not hear a sound until I found the grass near me move and a lion put his paw on me and lifted me up. The brute pressed his paws into me, but luckily my leather belt prevented his teeth from damaging me, and he carried me by holding on to my belt and coat. If either of these had given way I should have been laid hold of in a far rougher manner. A lion is like a cat in one thing; he can hold a live creature in his mouth and not damage it, just as I have seen a cat carry a mouse. I knew the nature of the lion well enough to know that if I struggled I should have my neck broken or my head smashed in an instant, so I did not struggle, but quietly drew my knife and thought what best to do. I thought at first of trying to strike him in the heart, but I could not reach that part of him, and his skin looked so loose that I feared I could not strike him deep enough, carried as I was. I knew it would be life or death with me in an instant, so, turning myself a bit, I gashed the lion's nose and cut it through. The lion dropped me as I should drop a poisonous snake, and jumped away roaring with pain. He stood for an instant looking at me, but I did not move, and he did not seem to like to carry me again. More than once he came up to within a few yards, licking the blood as it poured from his nose; but there I remained like a stone, and he was fairly afraid to tackle me again. I know a buffalo and an ox are very sensitive about the nose, and a cat if just tipped on the nose can't stand it, so I thought a lion might be the same, and so it proved.—Among the Zulus.

Damage to shipping and cargoes $70,000, and to Atlantic Petroleum Company $500,000 to $800,000.

A Wise Deacon

"Deacon Wilder I want you to tell me how you kept yourself and family so well the past season, when all the rest of us have been sick so much, and have had the doctors running to us so long."

"Bro. Taylor the answer is very easy. I used Hop Bitters in time and kept my family well and saved large doctor bills. Three dollars worth of it kept us all well and able to work all the time, and I will warrant it has cost you and most of the neighbors one to two hundred dollars apiece to keep sick the same time. I guess you'll take my medicine hereafter." See other column.

PRESBYTERIANISM IN NORTH CAROLINA.

BY REV. J. RUMPLE.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF FAYETTEVILLE.

On the right bank of the Cape Fear river, at the head of steamboat navigation, stands the city of Fayetteville—the metropolis of the North Carolina Scotch. The town was once called Cross Creek, from the fact that two creeks crossed each other within its corporate limits. The first settlers being from Scotland, and many of them from Campbellton, Argleshire, when their town was laid out in 1762, they called it after the place of their birth, so that Campbellton-on-Cape Fear might recall the scenes of Campbellton-on-Kintyre. The site of this village lies between Cross Creek and the river, and is now still a small village. When the Marquis de la Fayette paid the town a visit in 1784, as a token of their admiration for his character and gratitude for his services, the inhabitants changed the name of their town to Fayetteville.

Though the town has never been a very large one and has lost much of its former prosperity in consequence of the diversion of trade into other channels and the removal of the United States arsenal, it is still an interesting place, both from its present condition and its historical associations. This town was once the home of the celebrated Flora McDonald, the preserver of Charles Edward Stewart, the young Pretender, after the disastrous massacre of Culloden Moor. This was in 1745. Twenty-eight years after this (1773) Dr. Sam Johnston and Mr. Boswell of Auchinleck spent some time with Allan and Flora McDonald, at Kingsburg, in the Isle of Skye. Dr. Johnston, who was a great admirer of royalty, was greatly gratified at being put to sleep in the same bed that the Pretender occupied when he was the guest of the Laird of Kingsburg. Allan McDonald and Flora were then contemplating a removal to North Carolina on account of pecuniary embarrassments, and in 1775, just as the American troubles were beginning to appear threatening, they arrived at Cross Creek and settled there. Their house was situated on the street leading from the market house to the court house, on the right hand, just before reaching the creek. It was burnt down in the great fire of 1831, but the outlines of its foundation could be discerned for many years, and the site is probably well known to the inhabitants of the present day. After a short stay in Fayetteville the McDonalds moved to Cameron's Hill, a Barbecue congregation, twenty miles from Fayetteville, and from that point they moved across the Pee Dee into Anson county. The husband of Flora, Capt. Allan McDonald, served under Gen. Donald McDonald in the battle of Moore's Creek bridge, in New Hanover, February 27, 1776, and, along with his General, was captured and confined for a season in Halifax jail. Gen. McDonald was paroled in a month or two by order of the Provincial Congress, and Capt. McDonald obtained his liberty about the same time, and not long after his release he and his wife Flora and the family embarked for their native land; and in her native land the heroine of Skye breathed her last, March 15th, 1790, after a life checkered with many strange vicissitudes. The McDonalds were Presbyterians, members of the Church of Scotland.

In the early days of Campbellton there was no Presbyterian church or Presbyterian preaching in the village, for none of the immigrants had accompanied their countrymen in their exode over the Atlantic. Robinson and Macklen may have paid them a visit, and it is related that the Rev. James Campbell, the minister of Barbecue and Bluff, and afterwards the Rev. Mr. Crawford preached at Cross Creek with acceptance, in occasional visits. For forty-five years they seem to have been destitute of the stated means of grace; and the wonder is that they did not lose, not merely their Presbyterianism but their very Christianity itself, in the lapse of nearly half a century. In the year 1791 they secured the services of a stated minister for the first time. The Rev. David Kerr, from the Presbytery of Temple Patrick, Ireland, came over at that time and established a high school in Fayetteville, and began regular preaching in the court house on the Sabbath. He received $400 for teaching and about the same amount for preaching. Mr. Kerr did not administer the Lord's Supper during his residence here, nor is it known that he ever administered the ordinance of baptism. Indeed, he was rather a teacher than a preacher, and ultimately abandoned the Christian ministry, and even renounced Christianity itself. Being chosen the first professor in the University of North Carolina he removed to Chapel Hill in 1794.

In the early part of the year 1800 the Rev. John Robinson, a native of Sugar Creek, in Mecklenburg county, began to teach and preach in Fayetteville. He soon organized the church, and ordained elders for its government. These first elders were Robert Donaldson, Duncan McLerau, David Anderson, Duncan McAuslin, Archibald Campbell and Col. John Dickson. The ordinance of the Lord's Supper was celebrated for the first time September 6, 1801. The church then numbered seventeen members. There was a great improvement in the moral and religious tone of the community under the ministry of Mr. Robinson, and, no doubt, had his stay been prolonged much more visible fruit of his ministry would have appeared. Though the salary of Mr. Robinson, consisting of about one thousand dollars, half derived from the church and half from the school, was an ample one for the times, yet the two employments of teacher and preacher became burdensome, and the connection was dissolved by mutual consent.

Andrew Flinn, then preaching at Hillsboro, a licentiate, a native of Maryland, but brought to Mecklenburg when little more than a year old, and reared in Sugar Creek congregation, was invited to serve them. He took charge of the church about the 1st of January, 1803, and was ordained and installed by Orange Presbytery in June of the same year. Previous to this time the ordinance of baptism was administered to the children at home. Mr. Flinn changed this custom, and on the 22d of April, 1804, he administered the ordinance publicly to Wm. Stedman and George Tillinghast, and the other parents present came forward and congratulated the parents of the infants. The new pastor was zealous and active in his ministerial work, and many were added to the church under his ministry. His income, also, was liberal, amounting to about twelve hundred dollars from the church and the school. But finding, like Mr. Robinson, the double duties of his station too onerous, he resigned and went to Camden, S. C., afterwards to Charleston. For a number of years Dr. Flinn and his church were well known through the South.

After Mr. Flinn's departure, about the beginning of 1806, Mr. Robinson returned to Fayetteville and remained three years longer, and his labors were crowned with success. But again the labor of the two offices became oppressive, and Mr. Robinson returned to Poplar Tent and began again his work there, near the first of January, 1809. Here he remained, laborious, successful, honored, beloved and revered, till his death in 1843.

In 1809 the Rev. Wm. Leftwich Turner, who had for three years served the people of Raleigh as teacher in their academy, and "pastor of the city," removed to Fayetteville and began preaching and teaching. He began preaching November 20th, 1809, and opened his school January 1st, 1810. Not long after he began his labors here the pastor's heart was rejoiced by a precious revival of religion, in which thirty-one were added to the church. Mr. Turner was aided by the venerable Dr. Hall of Bethany in these meetings. But this earnest man of God was not spared long to labor for this church. He was called to rest October 18, 1813, and as he approached the solemn hour of death he exclaimed, "O death, where is thy sting; O, grave, where is thy victory?" Mr. Turner was to have opened the first meeting of the Presbytery of Fayetteville at Centre church on the 21st of October, just three days after his labors on earth were ended, and the duty assigned to him by the Synod was discharged by the Rev. Murdoch McMillan.

His brother, Jesse H. Turner, became his successor that same year. It was the time of his pastorate here that the 1st church was erected, the corner stone being laid April 21, 1816, with Masonic rites. Dr. R. H. Chapman, president of the University, delivered an appropriate address, and Mr. Turner offered the dedicatory prayer.

This church stood for fifteen years, until, one Sabbath day in 1831, a disastrous fire swept away a large part of the city, and with the rest the Presbyterian church. Another church was speedily erected upon the same site, the afflicted people receiving sympathy and substantial aid in building a new church, from other churches in various parts of the country.

Mr. Turner remained here until March 1st, 1819. From and after May, 1819, the Rev. Messrs. Wm. D. Snodgrass, R. H. Morrison and J. G. Hamner each ministered to this church about three years, and in the order named. This brings us down to about 1828, when Josiah Kilpatrick, a son of Rev. Jos. D. Kilpatrick of Third Creek, a licentiate of Concord, settled in Fayetteville. But his course was very brief, the Great Shepherd calling him higher just as he began to feed his flock. After this Rev. Henry A. Rowland ministered to the church for three years. After Mr. Rowland's resignation the Rev. James Douglass was secured as the pastor of the church in the fall of 1833. Mr. Douglass was a native of Augusta county, Va., and was one of the most laborious, zealous and successful pastors that ever labored on the Cape Fear. Though it is more than forty years since he was called to his eternal home, his memory is still fresh and precious in the hearts of many, not only of those in Fayetteville but of others who have wandered far from their old home. His admirers do not claim that he was a man of great genius, or superior to many others in knowledge or acuteness, but at the same time they hold that few preachers could excel him in the power to interest and instruct a congregation, or to lead people to walk in the right way. The great secret of his success was his deep-toned piety and his manifest earnestness and sincerity. His discourses were faithful, pungent and affectionate. As a pastor he was diligent and active beyond his strength. His earthly labors were closed by death in August, 1837.

The D. McNeill Turner succeeded Mr. Douglass in 1837 or 1838, and left the church in 1840. Mr. Turner went first to South Carolina, thence to the Southwest. Returning to North Carolina he labored for some years teaching and preaching in Mecklenburg Presbytery, but is now laboring in Texas.

On the 1st day of March, 1841, the Rev. Adam Gilchrist began his labors in the Fayetteville church. Mr. Gilchrist was a native of Charleston, S. C., and was born April 10, 1805. He embraced religion while going to school in Morristown, N. J. He was graduated from Dickinson College, Pa., and from that place went to Princeton Theological Seminary, where he took a complete course in divinity. His first pastoral charge was Walterboro, S. C. From this place he came to Fayetteville in the prime of his life, 35 years of age, and devoted himself to his great work. He was a man much beloved, amiable in his disposition, scholarly in his attainments and impressive in his preaching. He was a modest, genial man, exemplary in all life's relations, and had a long, successful pastorate of twenty years. By his amiability, kindness and spirit of conciliation, as well as by his acceptable manner of preaching, he was enabled by the divine blessing to heal and reconcile differences and dissensions. Under his ministrations the church grew in numbers, and the spirit of brotherly love was fostered. His church numbered 283 communicants in 1856 and 315 in 1860. From 1859 his health declined, and on the 27th of March, 1861, in the house of his only surviving child, in Lake City, Fla., he fell asleep in Jesus. His sepulchre is among his people in Fayetteville, and his memory is still fragrant among the members of that community.

Mr. Gilchrist was succeeded by the Rev. John Milton Sherwood in 1861, who remained pastor of the church until early in the year 1868. Mr. Sherwood was a native of Guilford county, N. C. He was of Methodist extraction, but he imbibed the principles of Calvinism in the study of moral philosophy under the Rev. Jesse Rankin, in Lexington, N. C. After completing his course in the Seminary in 1852 he assisted the Rev. Mr. Gretter in Greensboro, and after the latter's death continued to preach in the Greensboro church until July 1st, 1854. He was then called to be pastor of the church of Washington, Beaufort county, and was ordained and installed December, 1854, the Rev. Drs. Jas. Phillips, Alex. Wilson and Drury Lacy taking the leading parts in his installation. From Washington he was called to Fayetteville. Mr. Sherwood was a modest, retiring, not to say a timid man. He wrote and preached a clear, well expressed and instructive sermon, but his modesty kept him from occupying a prominent place in the debates of the Synod and Presbytery. He was beloved by the brethren and enjoyed their confidence to the fullest extent. During the years of his pastorate in Fayetteville he drifted into the place of editor of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN. In 1868 he resigned his pastoral charge of Fayetteville church and devoted his time to editorial work, and his Sabbaths were spent in preaching to three country churches. He died at his residence, near Fayetteville, January 6, 1872, and his grave is in Fayetteville. He was held in high esteem by the people whom he served, and the churches constituting his last charge have erected a handsome monument to his memory.

The Rev. H. G. Hill, the present pastor, began his labors in Fayetteville March 15th, 1868, coming from Oxford, Granville county. The church in 1878 reported 182 communicants and $2,033 raised for church and benevolent purposes.

DISCIPLINING OF DANCING.

June 14th, 1879.

MR. EDITOR:—Dr. A. W. Miller was certainly right (in a late issue) in his construction of the Assembly's late action about dancing. And this Assembly was equally right in its construction of previous action of our Assemblies. Sessions have the right to discipline by actual process, for the worse forms of this dissipation, after milder measures have been tried in vain.

But this is not the same as saying that the late Assembly should not have gone farther. We believe it should. It ought to have completed the testimony of previous Assemblies, by enjoining process before the sessions, after all milder remonstrance has failed for "round dancing." This and this alone would be consistent with the former declarations, and with the whole teaching of our Church. Of course our position cannot be sustained, unless this extreme form of the amusement can be shown to be positively sinful.

Our first reason then, is that whatever may be said of other dances, the "round dance" is, according to the word of God, as expounded in our constitution, a positive sin. We are now under the New Book. That constitution says that in interpreting the precepts of the Bible as to what is right or wrong, we agree to accept the teaching of our Confession, and Larger and Shorter Catechisms, as declarative of what we deem the Bible intends to allow and disallow. Well, if the larger catechism enumerates a given act as among the sins prohibited by Scripture, we as Presbyterians are pledged by our constitutional compact, to hold that the Bible intended to declare that act a sin. This is clear as a sunbeam. Now we find the larger Catechism in Ans. 139th enumerating as sins forbidden by the 7th commandment, "lascivious dances and stage-plays." It is true that "round dance" had not then been publicly practiced among professed Christians; but also because worldly conformity and laxity of morals had not yet grown so insolent as to venture such things within the pale of the Church. Yet this chronological circumstance does not in the least obscure the clearness of the teaching of our constitution. It is a recognized rule, that the "meaning of the law is the law," and that in ascertaining the meaning of a stipulation, honesty requires us to take it "in sensu imponentis." In plainer words: that meaning which the men who enacted the stipulation intended to put into their own words, remains the meaning of the law; and so is virtually the law. Now let any man place himself in the position of the members of the Westminster Assembly. Let him remind himself of their well-known views on Christian morals. Let him reflect that while the Christian party in the England of that day (which was represented in that Assembly) eschewed all dancing, the only dances which even the cavalier-party then used were "cotillions," "minuets," quadrilles," and possibly some "reels." Let him imagine the Westminster Divines spectators of a modern "German" and imagine himself as asking them: Reverend Fathers, is that what you had in your minds as a specimen of a "lascivious dance?" There is not an honest man in America, who does not know the Westminster Divines would have answered "Yes, that is one of them." Thus it is confessed that these "round dances" are such things as the Westminster Assembly meant to declare breaches of the 7th commandment of God. But the meaning of the law is the law; and all Presbyterians have now covenanted with each other to regard such acts as condemned by Scripture, as the Westminster Assembly judged to be condemned by Scripture. There is but one honest way for any among us to relieve his conscience of the obligation of treating "round dances" as positive sins: this is to procure an amendment of this 139th answer in the Larger Catechism. But the act, if sinful, is a public sin; and therefore it has all the circumstances making a sin such as ought to be suppressed by actual process. Supposing that all milder admonitions have been vain; for we repeat, we advocate as strongly as any man, the resort to all possible private advice, and even entreaty, before the last appeal is made to judicial process.

The attempt has been made, and even with an affected show of virtuous indignation, to evade the conclusion by saying that the charge above made against "round dances" is indelicate. Its defenders would have men believe that he who calls the indecent thing, however guardedly by its right name, offends against public decency! We remember an old maxim, that "actions speak louder than words." If we who protest cautiously and guardedly against the familiarities accompanying this amusement, sin against decency, what shall be said of the persons who publicly perpetrate them? How can their indelicacy be more clearly proved, than by the fact, if it be a fact, that the truthful description of them is indelicate? The amount of impudence expressed in this sophism awakens only contempt in the clear, honest mind, and is regarded as another symptom of the demoralizing effects of the abuse.

2. The Assembly ought to take this positive ground against "round dancing," because by doing so, we shall be virtually rid of the whole trouble of dancing at this time. As our worldly Christians now go, it is these "round dances" which constitute the temptation and fascination of their balls. Let the church courts make it clear, that no one can be a Presbyterian and go to this extreme; we shall practically have little more trouble about any sorts of dancing. Again: these amusements shade off from the innocent towards the criminal by many gradations. If it is obvious that there are milder forms of the amusement, which may be innocent, and so ought not to be made ground of process; it is equally obvious that there ought to be a bar interposed between our church-members and the criminal extreme. Thus for comparison: while there are several grades of temperate drinking which ought not to be prosecuted, there certainly is a last grade of drunkenness which the Church must prosecute. Since it is the Church's duty to arrest the dancing-sin somewhere, as all avow, the least the Church can do is to draw her line at this lowest extreme of the dissipation. It is the lowest point on which she can set up her standard against a danger universally confessed; if she cannot set it up here, she can have no standard at all. The action we commend makes the maximum allowance of Christian liberty, and is the minimum tribute of fidelity the church authority can make to Christ's law.

3. The Assembly ought to enjoin process in the cases described, because her present position, merely permitting such discipline if sessions choose to take the responsibility, will practically defeat all discipline. Sessions will excuse themselves from taking the responsibility. Actual process is a painful arduous task for a church-court. The performance of the duty requires great moral courage. The majority of men are moral cowards. Hence after the larger number of sessions and pastors have availed themselves of this discretion left them by the Assembly, to shirk their duty—as notoriously they do—their example will make it almost impossible for the brave and faithful pastors and sessions near them, who desire to do their duty, to do it to any good purpose. That courageous man of God, Dr. Miller, knows that when he proceeds to carry out his views of duty conscientiously in his own charge, the odious comparisons made between his course and that of less determined church rulers, with the criticisms and carpings of those who will criticise because his consistency is a rebuke to their weakness, will increase the difficulty of doing real good a hundred-fold. And when this remissness shall have become the reponsible cause of these unjust difficulties obstructive of his just discharge of his duty, the cry will be heard that his severity is "disturbing Israel." Thus the logic of the wolf will be repeated, who charged the lamb with muddying the rivulet; yet the lamb was down stream! so that demonstrably, if any muddying of the stream occurred, it must have been the wolf that did it himself.

Does any man deny that the government of our churches ought to be impartial and uniform? This evasive action of the Assembly, if it resulted in any discipline at all, would produce a government unequal and variant in different churches under the same law. One session might use the discretion allowed it to discipline what it regarded as an extreme case of the dissipation. The neighboring session might decide that an identical case in its charge was not "extreme." Is this a fancy sketch? Alas no! Here now is a very plain logical dilemma. If the Assembly had in its mind no specific conceivable case involving such aggravations as to make it just ground of process, then the Assembly had no right to grant to any session a discretionary power to discipline. In doing so, it has clothed a court inferior to and responsible to itself, with a discretion to invade the Christian liberty of Christ's people. If on the other hand, the Assembly did have in its mind some specific conceivable case of dancing, such as to be justly disciplined, it ought to have defined that case, and to have used its constitutional authority to say to the inferior courts: "When that case arises proceed to judicial discipline." And if the Assembly knows of such conceivable cases, and knows that according to Christ's law as expounded in our constitution, they are disciplinable sins, is it not a delinquency for her to legislate around about them, and confer on inferior courts a discretion of connivance? In such a case,—if such a case there is—the Assembly is bound to have a mind of its own. Its present attitude is congregational, and not presbyterian.

It is to be wished that the Assembly had exercised its common sense in answering to itself the following questions: If a similar discretion were expressly allowed church sessions as to disciplining or not disciplining other current sins common in the world around us, as lying or theft, how much discipline should we have for these after a few years? Let us suppose the Assembly speaking thus to the church-courts: "We regard lying as a practice of evil tendency, whose prevalence in our Church is to be deplored and admonished; we desire church sessions to use all the means of instruction and advice to suppress it; and we admit that lying, in its extreme forms, may be subject of actual process; to which last remedy sessions may, in their discretion resort, if other means fail, and they judge the case in hand involves the aggravations." He who knows how painful a duty discipline is; how weak human nature is; how plainly this nature, indolent and cowardly, will argue that each special case of lying fails to come quite up to those undefined aggravations which the Assembly had in its mind, knows very well that under such legislation, it would become as impossible practically to discipline for lying in the Presbyterian Church, as the Assembly is now making it to discipline for dancing.

4. It is the very duty for which Assemblies exist. "To the General Assembly belongs the power of deciding all controversies respecting doctrine and discipline." The least scope of power which these words confer must be this: to interpret authoritatively the meaning of the existing constitution as to doctrine and discipline. For, if this be denied, then the Assembly has no power whatever in these premises; but the constitution says expressly that it has a power here. It has been argued that the Assembly cannot exercise its interpretative power so as to define the judicial duties of the lower courts, except when it is sitting judicially as an appellate court on a particular judicial case, brought before it from a lower court. People are blinded here by the erroneous comparison with civil courts. It may be that the Court of Appeals of the State of North Carolina cannot make an authoritative ruling (or does not) save in such cases. This is because it is nothing but a court of appeals. Our Assembly is something else besides a court of appeals; it is the supreme legislature also of our Church, as to all legislation explicative of the will of God towards our Church (which is the only legislative power which can belong to any church-court in any form). Again, the Assembly shall give its instruction in all cases submitted to it in conformity with the constitution of the Church. This unquestionably points to more than one way of bringing a case under the Assembly's interpretative authority; the constitution itself enumerates four ways.

Again, the other position is preposterous, because if, a new form of committing a sin forbidden in principle by the constitution should intrude itself into the Church (a case which evidently may arise), then the Assembly could not do its duty of providing for the judicial suppression of this sin until after some session had, judicially on this new case, decided it and sent it up to the Assembly by appeal or complaint. But no session could lawfully act on such new case, until after the Assembly, the supreme authority, had authorized action. So that this notable argument would cousign the Church precisely to the absurd position of the "foolish fellow" of the Greek fable, who resolved that he would never more go into the water until after he had learned to swim! If the Digest and Records of our Assemblies are to be of any force these furnish examples enough in our favor.

Make no man your idol, for the best man must have faults, and his faults will insensibly become yours, in addition to your own. This is as true in arts as in morals.

GOD'S CARE.

Not a brooklet floweth
Onward to the sea,
Not a sunbeam gloweth
On its bosom free,
Not a seed unfoldeth
To the glorious air,
But our Father holdeth
It within His care.

Not a flowret fadeth,
Not a star grows dim,
Not a cloud o'ershadoweth,
But 'tis marked by Him.
Dream not that thy gladness
God doth fail to see;
Think not in thy sadness
He forgetteth thee.

Not a tie is broken,
Not a hope laid low,
Not a farewell spoken,
But our God doth know.
Every hair is numbered,
Every tear is weighed
In the changeless balance
Wisest love has made.

Power eternal resteth
In his changeless hand;
Love immortal hasteth
Swift at His command.
Faith can firmly trust him
In the darkest hour,
For the key she holdeth
To His love and power.

OUR CATECHISM DAYS.

BY REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

A rising young lawyer at the New York bar writes me that his early training was of that same orthodox pattern that some of us who are older ones enjoyed. He says: "On Sabbath evenings we youngsters in my Presbyterian father's house all sat around and went through the Catechism from 'The chief end of man' to 'What doth the conclusion of the Lord's Prayer teach us?' When I went courting a good old lady tried me with 'What is effectual calling?' and I answered straightaway, so that she concluded I must be 'the right sort of a young man.' My father used to tell me, when I was grinding through the Catechism, that I'd find the good of it when I got older. I have found it, so I mean to teach it to my own children."

My lawyer friend is not the only man who has found the good of being well grounded in the Westminster Catechism. I assisted lately in the Presbyterial examination of a candidate for licensure. He gave the leading answers in the exact language of that wonderful compend of sound doctrine. The Presbytery were thoroughly satisfied with his orthodoxy, and nothing in all his Seminary course was of more practical value to him than those lessons taught him at his Ohio father's fireside out of the Catechism.

How well I remember my own boyish tugs at it, and how weary I was when I reached "That estate of sin and misery into which man fell." We youngsters thought it rather dry fodder. Our eyes often wandered over into the more engaging pages of "The New England Primer," such as the narrative of John Rogers' martyrdom, and the dialogue between the Youth and the Devil, and those immortal doggerels commencing with

"In Adam's fall
We sinned all."

That New England Primer constituted a large share of our juvenile literature; for in a rural farm house children's books were scarce fifty years ago. My own reportorium embraced "The Life of Catherine Brown," "Robinson Crusoe," the "Walks of Usefulness," and the well-thumbed "Primer." It had a cover as blue as its theology; but its wood-cuts were marvels of art in our childish eyes. How often we counted the tier of hapless "bairns" who stood ranged around John Rogers' stake! and were never quite sure whether the "nine small children" included "the one at the breast." Blessed book—we knew it all by heart. Of all its miscellaneous contents, the only portion which sticks by us yet, is the Shorter Catechism. That has been our sheet-anchor of orthodoxy, our compend of divinity, our safe-guard against heresy, our perpetual answer to all who asked us a reason for the faith that was in us. To that form of sound words we have held fast with as tenacious a grip as a Churchman holds to his Prayer-book, or a Scotch Highlander to the plaid of his clan. In fact, the Bible, John Bunyan, and the Catechism, constituted the dairy which supplied the "sincere milk" that fed our unsophisticated childhood.

Has a half century of boasted progress made any improvement on that diet? Is there a hack-load of Sunday school books that weighs as much as Bunyan? Has "advanced thought" ever got one inch beyond the Westminster Catechism? Can any theological professor of these days construct a definition equal to the answers to the questions "What is God?" and "What is Repentance unto life?" Perhaps it is a natural infirmity to think the former days were better than the present; but this we do know, that those Catechism days laid solid foundations for many an after-growth of godly faith and honest living. Among "the things that cannot be shaken" is the theology of the Westminster Catechism.—Evangelist.

HOW TO PRAY.

How shall we order our prayers so that they may be accepted? Go to him in infinite lowliness and trustfulness. Let the mind and soul rise into his blessed presence, and speak to him. As he is ever and always whispering to you and saying, "Ask of me," "Make known your requests," "Call upon me," "Come to me," so make your responses to these great words and say, "Lord, I do ask of thee—I do call—I do come—I do tell thee all. Be merciful to me, and always help me as I need." Thus "converse" with him. His words to us poor sinners may be considered perpetual words. They are not merely once spoken, but always spoken. In these same blissful promises, first uttered to the ancient saints, he is ever and always speaking—speaking to thee. Let your responses be equally constant. Be always conversing with him. Tell him everything. "Pour out your heart before him." Tell him all your secrets—your keenest, deepest trials—matters which you withhold from your dearest earthly friend. Talk with him of everything that interests you, and forget not that he is more deeply interested than you in those same matters. Does he care for the sparrow? Does he number the hairs of your head? Does he love you with an inconceivable love? Then fear not to walk and talk with him evermore!—Zion's Herald.

THE WORK OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Eternal life is said to consist in the knowledge of God, and of Jesus Christ whom he has sent. To impart this knowledge is the work of the Spirit. He enables us to see the glory of God, as it shines in the face of Jesus Christ. It is this discovery which produces holiness. By beholding His glory we are transformed into his image, from glory to glory. When Christ was thus revealed to Paul he was instantly converted from a persecutor into a worshipper of the Lord Jesus. And this is the history of every conversion from that day to this. It matters not to the blind that the heavens are flooded with glory, or that the earth is clad with beauty; and it matters not to the spiritually blind that God has clothed Himself in flesh and dwelt among us. But when the spirit opens our eyes, then the beatific vision breaks in upon the soul with all its transforming power; then we become new creatures in Christ Jesus.—Dr. Charles Hodge.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

From the Loudon Weekly Review:

Professor Smith was to have preached in Dundee and Broughty Ferry last Sabbath, but he wrote to say that as the judgment of the Assembly points so directly to his immediate suspension from ministerial functions, he thinks it proper that he should not preach.

Rev. Mr. Fergus Ferguson, of Queen's Park U. P. Church, presided at the prayer meeting of the Gourock U. P. congregation on Wednesday night, and expressed his sympathy with the effort of Rev. Mr. Macrae to bring the creed of the Church into harmony with the Scriptures. Two things were necessary to the healthy existence of the Church—the truth and liberty. He trusted Mr. Macrae would yet be restored to his office, as his loss would be severely felt by the U. P. Church. Mr. Macrae was present.

A southern Waldensian Presbytery met at Rome last week. The most interesting feature of the proceedings was a report of a missionary journey to Southern Italy, presented by the Reverend Pons, of Naples, full of varied and onrious anecdotic interest. It read like a striking commentary of Milton's celebrated ode, showing how the Church of the Valleys, long pent-up in its Alpine fold, was now carrying its regenerating influence into those distant parts of Italy where, three centuries ago, the light of its purer religion was extinguished in martyred blood and ashes.

The Presbytery of London in conference with the College Committee, in communication with Prof. Patton relative to the Barbour chair, expressed their cordial approval of the proposal that steps be taken to found an endowed lectureship, to yield £300 per annum in perpetuity, and to be held in the first instance by the Rev. Dr. Patton at his pleasure during the tenure of his Professorship; said lectureship to involve a short annual course of not more than eight lectures; the details as to subjects embraced, the number of lectures, and the place of delivery, to be received for future arrangement by the College Committee. There can be no doubt, from the readiness with which the guarantee was responded to, that the yearly sum attached to the lectureship will be speedily converted into a permanent endowment. The intention is that the proposed course of lectures should be delivered, in successive years, in such centres as London, Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and, if opportunity offer, in Oxford and Cambridge, so as to make them, as widely as possible, helpful among intelligent and thoughtful audiences, to the defence and confirmation of the Christian faith.

On Sabbath afternoon a large congregation in the French Protestant Church, St. Martin's-le-Grand witnessed the reception of a convert from the Roman Catholic faith in conformity with the quaint and impressive rites of the old Hugnenot liturgy. Additional interest was given to the event by the fact that the convert was a French lady of position and high literary attainment. The pastor of the congregation, the Rev. G. G. Dauzgars, who for the last thirty-six years has held the position, officiated, and explained towards the close of the service that this was but one of many accomplished and prospective changes of faith, the natural and logical outcome of the great religious movement recently initiated amongst creed-professing classes of France, where the dominant Ultramontane Church was gradually, although imperceptibly, losing the hold which for ages it had maintained over the masses of that land. In many instances the proselytes, afraid to avow their Protestant predilections at home, from the social ostracism and domestic persecution which such a severing of old ties not infrequently involved, were compelled, he said, to come to this free country and make open profession of the reformed Evangelical faith. He was happy to announce that his Church had witnessed of late, and particularly within the last twelve months, many such desirable accessions from the ranks of the Roman Church.

The Spanish government has ordered energetic measures to obtain satisfaction from San Domingo for the outrage to the Spanish flag in the arrest last winter and subsequent execution of two insurgent Dominican Generals, who had taken refuge on board a Spanish vessel at Puerto Plata.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 25, 1879.

THE COLORED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN NEWBERN, N. C.

Our readers will remember that B. B. Palmer, a colored candidate, was licensed by Orange Presbytery in April, 1878. In May he began preaching to the colored people in Newbern, as it was thonght to be an important field for the establishment of a Presbyterian church, in the midst of a very large colored popnlation. A number of them requested the movement. He continued his labors with great faithfulness and exemplary piety, under all the disadvantages and hindrances incident to a new enterprise, amid a poor people, for eight and a half months. On Sabbath, 24th November, 1878, a committee of Orange Presbytery, with Rev. L. C. Vass, pastor of the Newbern church, as chairman, fiuding the way clear, organized Ebenezer chnrch with eleven members. Three ruling elders were chosen, viz: John Randolph, Sr., Julius Willis and Geo. H. White; who, after careful study of the Confession of Faith, were ordained and installed by Rev. L. C. Vass, on Sabbath evening, December 15th. Licentiate B. B. Palmer fonnd it necessary to leave this infant church in February, 1879. For abont two months the elders faithfully conducted services, with such occasional ministerial help as they conld obtain. They then secured the services of Licentiate A. A. Scott, a gradnate of Lincoln University, who is now laboring zealously and acceptably for them, and the congregation is steadily growing. On Sabbath, 15th Jnne, eight adults were received on public profession of their faith in Christ; two adults (one probably over sixty years of age) and two infants were baptized, and the Lord's Supper was administered. Rev. L. C. Vass conducted the services, assisted by Mr. A. A. Scott.

Thus this colored Presbyterian church numbers twenty members, and their ontlook is encouraging. Several persons are ready to join, bnt were prevented from doing so on the Sabbath named. They have been worshiping in a public school honse, by permission of the School Committee. But they need and must have a building of their own soon: yet are nnable to procnre one themselves. Are there not benevolent servants of our Lord, blessed with abonnding wealth and professing special interest in the welfare of our colored popnlation, who will now help these good people? They are doing what they can nobly; and the First Presbyterian church in Newbern has been liberally contributing to sustain the daily work, in connection with the aid given by our Sustentation Committee. All know that the colored people are poor. They must for some time have annual assistance in supporting a pastor and meeting current expenses. And we repeat, they must have a neat church building. We sometimes fear that rich people will only give their money where it will make a name, and coldly pass by any modest enterprise like this, that needs only $1,200 or $1,500. But this will do more good here than $100,000 in some other places in a church or college. A grand work is open here for our Lord, if once it is well established.

We will gladly receive and forward to Newbern any sums committed to our care for this great cause, either for current help or for their building. Who will send the first check $500 or $1,000? Success here will not only make Christians glad, bnt the angels will sing over repenting sinners. May the Devine Head of the Church bless abundantly this youngest of churches in Orange Presbytery, and give them favor with richer brethren at home and abroad.

IT SUITS US.

We must confess to a certain degree of satisfaction in the course which the Church Messenger has evidently marked ont for itself. Clearly it does not intend to perch npon a grand and lofty pinnacle of arrogance, and not even recognize the existence of the sects. Its recognition, indeed, judging from its last issue, is very much that of the war-painted Indian who recognizes the white man as likely to furnish an elegant scalp; but then it is a recognition that can hardly fail to make things move around lively, and during these long summer days that is a desideratum. We are prepared indeed to welcome almost anything, while the thermometer ranges among the nineties, if it only raises a brisk little breeze.

Our cotemporary makes a strike at the Presbyterians for a lack of nnity, and cites the numerous divisions among them because of tweedledees and tweedledums. Well, be it so. If people can't agree it is infinitely better to separate than to live together in incessant jangle and discord. Our Episcopal friends hold in what they are pleased to call the Church, opinions more variant than any that divide the Reformed churches. The extremest Low churchman is farther from the highest Ritualist than the former is from the Presbyterian, or the latter from the Roman Catholic. That kind of nnity is not according to our taste; bnt then, de gustibus non est disputandum.

Our friends aforesaid have a sovereign mode of preventing disintegration. A little girl once explained how she got into bed so quickly by saying, "I get all undressed and blow out the light, and then I cry, 'Rats! rats!' and that frightens me so that I jump right into bed as quick as a wink." Whenever the Low Churchmen begin to get too much disgusted with the Remaining tendencies of their brethren the cry is raised, "Schism! schism!" and that frightens them so that they huddle together like a flock of sheep. They mean well, our friends do, and we duly respect their intentions, but they labor under the heavy hallucination of believing that their little body is the Church. It is funny. The child who draws a figure with all sorts of a head, four or more impossible legs, and an inadequate tail, fully believes that it represents a horse, and is as well pleased as if it was the finest production of Landseer himself. In the latter case, however, it is a visual imperfection which time will correct; in the former a disordered imagination, or a tangential offshoot from the truth, which age seems only to confirm. In either case they are well out of the way.

The rap at the Presbyterians is a gentle love tap compared to the blow at the Baptists, especially the Hard Shell variety. We shall leave our Baptist brethren to look out for themselves. If a little sect of 160,000 (?) in North Carolina cannot hold their own against a big Church of 5,000, they shall have no help from us.

RELIGIOUS INTOLERANCE IN AUSTRIA.

The secretaries of the Evangelical Alliance report acts of intolerance on the part of the Austrian Government, which are in the highest degree snrprising. The acts indeed, so far as the government is concerned, seem as yet rather to be permitted than ordered, and they are surprising, since bnt a short time ago Austria bid fair to range under the banner of papacy; at least to assnme a position of independence of papal control.

At a place near Prague a few persons calling themselves the "Old Reformed Church" have been forbidden to admit to their family worship, any one, not even a servant, who is not a member of the family, and the police have forced their way into houses to require compliance in this regard. The Attorney General of Pragne even maintains that grace shall not be said at meals, should a stranger be present. The adherents of the "New Church" at Vienna, who have had services for ten years, were last autumn forbidden to hold any services at all; and another Protestant community received orders not to allow non-members to attend. Last March the Congregationalists connected with the American Missions were forbidden to hold services in Pragne, or Graz in Syria. The Free Church of Scotland and the Baptist church at Vienna have been forbidden to hold services but in the English language. No attempt has been made in any case to bring charges of a moral or political character against any individual. The secretaries of the Alliance call attention to the anomaly of Austria in thus acting while she conjoins with Great Britain and the other powers in demanding the establishment of religious liberty in Servia, Roumania, Bulgaria, &c.

THE NEW EDITORS.

The Central Presbyterian appears in charge of Rev. W. T. Richardson and Dr. J. C. Southall. Their address to the patrons of the paper is a plain direct statement of conservatism and orthodoxy in their views, and their aim is thus expressed:

"It will be our effort to make this paper a faithful exponent of the views and doctrines of the Southern Presbyterian Church, and to defend these views and doctrines will be one principal aim in the conduct of our journal."

NOON-DAY PRAYER MEETING.

A Noonday Prayer Meeting has been organized in Wilmington, N. C. All persons so disposed meet for prayer at 12 M. of every day, at the Seamen's Bethel, and continue together till a quarter past 1 o'clock, or such less time as any may choose. We hope that this meeting will be regularly and generally attended, and will be glad to know that like services have been organized in other places.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

To save any possible unpleasantness, we beg that our friends will not send us accounts from the springs narrating the peculiar advantages and benefits connected with particular resorts. We throw open our advertising columns to all such—for a consideration.

The Normal School Chapel at Hill is in full blast under very encouraging circumstances. In connection with the "Peace" exercises, "No. 6." gives the points, and they are given well.

Prince Louis Napoleon, son of Louis Napoleon, and nominally Prince Imperial of France, who a few weeks since joined the British army in Zululand, was killed while reconnoitring. The prospects of the Bonapartist's party in France had become well-nigh desperate, and this ends them. Yet it is not impossible that some one of the remote scions of the Bonaparte stock may arise in time and again occupy the throne of France.

Mr. Spurgeon related, lately a very striking incident of providential interposition occurring in his experience:

He well remembered a little old woman, woman, poorly dressed, coming into the vestry some years ago at a time of great straits, which not a soul in the world knew, not even a deacon of the church; and she said to him in the most strange way, "Thus saith the Lord, Behold I have commanded a widow woman there to sustain thee." She put down £50 on the table, vanished, and he had never seen her since. He never knew her name even, and never should, perhaps, until the Day of Judgment. He supposed she would be in heaven now; it was some years ago, and she was very old then. Things had happened so, and his impression was that they would occur again.

We have given up our space to two sermons—both good—and our readers will probably agree that the space has been used to the advantage of the institutions referred to, which was to be expected, and are very pleasant reading, withal. We wish to add here that our columns contain the advertisement of Mrs. Baldwin's Augusta Female Seminary, at Staunton, Va., which certainly has very superior claims—and also of Maj. Lynch's school at High Point, and of Mr. S. W. Hughes' school at Cedar Grove. The reputations of these gentlemen are established. See advertisements of both. We call special attention to the advertisements for situations as teachers.

Our good Bro. Battle of the Tarboro Southerner has not favored us with a copy of his address entitled "Pests of the Press," which was delivered before the State Press Association. We would like to have it, and would ask for it, but for excessive modesty, or some other reason. It was good. The secular press say so, and though we must confess it is so easy to confess the sins of others—though we must confess, in cases more or less rare, they do say what is not—not strictly rectilineal, still in this case, they are no doubt, fairly, squarely and perpendicularly plumb. The "Pests of the Press"—what a fine chance for a play of an editor's feelings, and Bro. Battle has the finest kind of feelings and plenty of them. Will not some friend send us a second-hand copy?

A. When will you have your revival?
B. On the tenth of next month.
A. Why wait a month? Why not now?
B. Oh, well, because Mrs. X can't come before the 10th.
A. But if everything depends on Mrs. X., to whom shall we ascribe the power and the glory?

A case might be supposed, it is not at all unsupposable, that a church has secured a female revivalist, and matters are moving on as previously anticipated, fixed upon and determined. Another church in the same city, anxious for a revival, keeps perfectly cool, calm and self-possessed, longing and waiting for—what think you? A female preacher. What an attitude that would be, for a Christian church. And when the lady comes and the predestined revival comes off—what is to be will be, you know—whose revival is it? and to whom shall be the glory?

A fanatical sect of women, known as the "Hallelujah Lasses," and associated with some men equally lost to reason, have for sometime past figured prominently in Wales. They have been engaged in tramping the country and singing "Hallelujah songs," and gained many converts. A branch which they call the "Salvation Army" has lately opened what they call a "Salvation Factory" in Leamington. The following gives some of the results of the preaching of this sect and tends to explain its character:

Last week a novel sale took place at Blyth, an auctioneer having offered for public auction (for the benefit of whom it may concern) a large collection of "Hallelujah idols," comprising poultry, canaries, parrots, birdcages, dress rings, meerschaum pipes, a variety of ladies' and gentlemen's dress ornaments, and a miscellaneous group of other articles, which had been given up by parties in this district on their conversion by the "Hallelujah Lasses." There was a numerous attendance at the sale.

NEWS NOTES.

Rev. Mr. McKay of Griffin, Ga., preached in the Presbyterian church at Concord, N. C., on the 15th inst., and Rev. Dr. Nall of Alabama was to have preached on last Sabbath.

In addition to degrees mentioned last week as conferred, we find that the Southwest Presbyterian University conferred the title of D. D. npon Rev. J. D. McClintock of Mississippi and Rev. J. K. Hazen, Secretary of Publication, Richmond, Va. Hampden-Sidney conferred LL. D. on Rev. Dr. B. M. Smith of Union Theological Seminary and D. D. on Rev. Thomas Wharey of Virginia.

The Iredell Gazette tells us that Rev. W. R. McLelland preached on Sabbath, 15th inst., at Mooresville, N. C., and on Tuesday he and his estimable lady returned to their home in Texas with the best wishes of all.

At the closing exercises of Scotia Seminary, for colored girls, Rev. L. McKinnon and Rev. C. H. Wiley addressed the school in a manner that evinced a hearty interest in the welfare of the colored people. Dr. E. H. Harding—the note was crowded ont at the time—made a capital talk to the students of Biddle Institute (for colored young men preparing for the ministry) a short time ago.

PASTOR FOR OLD STONE CHURCH.

Last Sunday week Rev. Alexander Sprunt preached at Augusta church, which is now vacant, and last Sunday, at an informal congregational meeting, it was unanimously decided to give him a call. On Sunday there will be a regular congregational meeting, which Rev. R. C. Walker has been requested to moderate, for the purpose of making ont the call in full, and the congregation hope to have Mr. Sprunt with them by the first of July.—Staunton Vindicator.

[The church above referred to is a large and very important field for work. We do not know that Mr. Sprunt will accept, bnt we trust he will, and we unite with his other friends in rejoicing at his prospect of usefulness.—Ed. N. C. P.]

NEW CHURCH ORGANIZED.

GRAHAM, N. C., June 16.—DEAR EDITOR: The committee appointed by Orange Presbytery to organize a church at Company Shops have just discharged that duty. The committee, consisting of Rev. J. H. Fitzgerald, Rev. B. W. Mebane and Ruling Elder W. C. Donnell, met at Company Shops on Sabbath, June 15, and after divine service proceeded to organize a church composed of twenty-one members. John Anderson and John W. Rippy were made ruling elders, and T. S. Robertson and John Brown were made deacons in the usual way. The infant church starts on it's career under very favorable auspices. Most of its members have recently been brought into the church, and there met with the Lord's people for the first time on yesterday. The writer witnessed a very affecting scene: The joint heads of an interesting family came forward to unite themselves with the people of God. When the father announced his intention that morning, after a sleepless night, the joy and delight in that family brought to my mind the joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth. May God pour out His Spirit upon this band, and grant that it may be a faithful church—a candlestick to hold up a bright and shining light. May the blessed Saviour walk in the midst of this infant church, and hold its spiritual authority in his right hand, and make all of its members faithful unto death. Brethren, pray for us.

B. W. M.

On the 18th thirteen persons were received (ten on profession of faith) into the Presbyterian church at Liberty, Va. All ages, from quite young to very old, were represented. Rev. Dr. J. B. Adger, of South Carolina, was present. Rev. F. S. Mallsby, D. D., is pastor.

THE CONCERT AT PEACE INSTITUTE.

Under the management of Prof. Baumann these annual entertainments have become proverbial in Raleigh for their excellence, and the large chapel is always crowded to its utmost capacity and spacious halls and passages of the building are filled with the overflow of the great throng attracted by the feast spread for the lovers of the art. The concert of 1879 formed no exception to its predecessors, and but increased the well-earned laurels of this far-famed institution and its enthusiastic and talented professor. It is not a very rare occurrence for a professor of music to command the admiration of his pupils by his skill, but to win not only their respect, but love, is not so common. No one can visit Peace Institute without discovering this high tribute paid to Prof. Baumann, and finding that he is not only admired as a skilled instructor in his art, but esteemed and loved as a faithful friend, a polished gentleman, and a sincere, earnest and humble Christian. During the late commencement he was threatened with an attack of dangerous illness, and in the anxiety manifest on every hand it was apparent that he was not only valued bnt loved.

The programme consisted of eighteen pieces of music, vocal and instrumental. Each piece was of high order. In all the lengthy programme there was not one ordinary or commonplace piece. Among the instrumental pieces there were the following brilliant specimens:

Marches Militaire (i, iii). Schubert.
Semiramis (overtnre). Rossini.
Dinorah (sinfonia). Fasanotti;

They were rendered by eight performers npon four pianos. In this music the uniformity of touch and concord in time and movement were remarkable; and when the listener reflected that sixteen hands were engaged in furnishing the thousands of notes that contributed to the whole, its unity was simply marvellous.

There were several piano solos. Their excellence was so marked that it is difficult to select any for distinction above its companions. Perhaps it may not be saying too much to single ont for special commendation Miss Rnmple's execution in "God Save the Queen," by Gottschalk.

The vocal music was exceptionally fine. The chorus "Queen of the Night" (Smart), by the vocal class, manifested very plainly the thorough training of the young ladies; the harmony of voice and movement was delightful. The two leading voices in the concert were Misses Nora Phillips and Nannie Burwell. Miss Phillips has a rich, full and elastic mezzo soprano, which at one time charms you with its softness and at another surprises you with its volume and power. Miss Burwell's soprano is very clear and sweet, of peculiar timbre, perhaps the word sympathetic would most accurately describe it. She has just such a voice as one would wish to hear render his favorite ballad. These two ladies sang two beautiful duets in which their voices blended to the best advantage. "Trust Her Not," by Balfe, and Deh Conte (from Norma), by Bellini. In the "Lost Building" (Centemeri) Miss Burwell won the hearty applause of the audience and Miss Phillips gave abundant evidence of the extreme cultivation her naturally fine voice had received, by her splendid rendering of Benedict's celebrated "Carnival de Venice."

Among the striking evidences of the excellence of the instruction given in music at Peace even the most careless will notice the perfection of accent, of time, of distinctness in articulation; the purity of tone, espe-especially upon sustained notes; the evenness as well as purity; the softness of the high notes, particularly in the diminuendo so difficult in execution; the distinctness with which each note is defined; the clear cutness, so to speak, of one from the other, especially in ascending or descending the scale. Music can be passably good without these characteristics, and it is rare indeed that they are to be found, bnt when once seen they are appreciated they explain why the papers in speaking of Prof. Banmann so frequently call him the "faithful and conscientious" teacher.

THE LADIES ARE MOVING.

RALEIGH, N. C., June 11th, 1879.

To the Lady Members of the Several Presbyterian Churches in Orange Presbytery:

DEAR SISTERS: The lady members of the First Presbyterian church in Raleigh, have formed themselves into a Home Missionary Society, to aid the evangelistic work, and other Christian enterprises, in Orange Presbytery; and to be under the control of the Presbytery.

Their desire is to embrace every lady member; and that there may be nothing to prevent one cent a week entitles one to membership. And if that small sum should be a burden, as in some cases it may, they are sure that it will be the pleasure of those who are able to give membership to those who are not. The object being not alone the advantage to the general work from the small contribution, but also the religious comfort of the members from their associations in the society, and the the religious pride which every one will fee in being a member of the society with all the sisters.

It is allowable also for the gentlemen to contribute, and be considered as honorary members, and it is encouraging to see their anxiety, and the pleasure and liberality with which they contribute.

Besides the advantage of the Association to the members themselves, they expect the contributions to be considerable.

Supposing that our sisters of all the churches would like to unite with us in the common design of forming a society in each church, our society has instructed me to offer this Christian greeting and to invite co-operation.

Affectionately,

MARY E. KRAUL, Pres't.

P. S.—Will not all the lady members of all the churches in all the Presbyteries in the State unite with us? M. E. R., Pres't.

MR. EDITOR: It will be seen from the above circular that the ladies of the First church of this city are thoroughly aroused on the important subject of Home Missions. It is to be hoped that their worthy example in lending a helping hand for the purpose of supplying the gospel to the destitute places of our own land may be emulated by every church in our State. They have made the assessment on each member exceedingly low—only one cent per week—enabling thereby all to become members and showing too, evidently, that they do not despise the "Day of small things." The work must commend itself to all who feel an interest in the cause of Christ; and with earnest, united action eternity can only reveal the great good that will result. We know that an appeal for this cause to the ladies of Orange and other Presbyteries throughout the State will not be made in vain when they consider the important end to be accomplished. W.

THE CHARLOTTE INSTITUTE FOR YOUNG LADIES.

The pleasant city of Charlotte, always awake and astir in her business relations, always alive with fresh enjoyments in her social circles, loving music and cultivating it with artistic relish, loving letters and acknowledging their charm and influence, loving money and pursuing the art of money-making with keen avidity, yet not averse to money-spending, as may be seen in the many elegant equipages that each day throng and enliven her streets, and in the tasteful and substantial homes of her people—this pleasant city of Charlotte, as it is, cherishes as one of her most valued possessions the Institute for Young Ladies. This institute was founded by Rev. Robert Burwell and his wife, of sainted memory. Since Mrs. Burwell's death and the removal of the Messrs. Burwell, father and son, to Peace Institute, it has passed through several administrations. At present it is under the superintendence of Rev. Wm. R. Atkinson, with every branch of education taught in a girl's school, in the charge of teachers of tried and well known ability. Many of those teachers, especially those of the English branches, are from our midst "and to the manner born," speaking with sweet Southern tongue the "English undefiled" in its strictest purity.

The teacher of drawing and painting has had the advantages of thorough training in the best art schools in the country, and has an admirable familiarity with the best studies and best modes of instruction that at present obtain in her department. In addition to the usual lessons in pencil and crayon drawing, oil and water colors, sketching from nature is taught, and the most delicate and exquisite ornamental painting on China, wood, slate, &c., that now finds such favor with the lovers of the beautiful. No department has given more pleasure to the pupils than the art department under the charge of Miss S. A. Sherman of New York.

That most important and attractive department in a girl's school, music, is under the direction of Dr. Alays Bidez, a gentleman who, during his residence in Charlotte, has won the highest esteem from all who know him. A thorough gentleman and a musician of the highest order, he not only carefully, patiently and conscientiously goes through the routine of giving lessons, but constantly elevates the taste of his pupils, reveals new beauties in their studies, unfolds the æsthetics of music and advances their ideas by a daily progression. As a teacher of singing Dr. Bidez has met with decided success, developing and training voices with great skill and gratifying results. His department has been steadily growing in interest and favor since the opening of the school in September last, and is now the largest and most popular in the Institute.

Mr. Atkinson, the principal of the school, whose name is the synonym for energy and strong purpose, is the ruling spirit of the whole establishment. His pupils have the utmost confidence in him and respect for him. Teachers and pupils alike rely implicitly upon him, and his presence everywhere inspires life and activity. As a teacher his forte is to make truth entirely transparent, and to stimulate every mind under his influence to its very highest working capacity. He is determined that his school shall be second to none for thoroughness and completeness. The pupils have just passed through a most searching written examination on all the studies of the year. The writer remembers so often attending the closing exercises of different schools where the interminable lists of distinctions were read, and the wonder was who were left not distinguished. In this school a distinction is not an empty compliment, but is a thoroughly deserved honor whenever conferred.

To prove the bona fide character of these written examinations and the high standard of instruction which warranted such tests of the pupils' attainments, the Principal submitted both the examination papers and the work of the pupils thereon to the Professors of Mathematics and Latin at the Carolina Military Institute, both of whom expressed the surprise that young lady pupils should be subjected to such rigid examinations, and gratification that they should so successfully pass them. These professors gave our Institute their written testimonial that "the instruction there was as careful and thorough as that afforded in our best male schools, and that the 'distinctions' and 'proficiencies' awarded must be good criteria of the attainments of those who receive them."

As to the home department of the school, nowhere can there be a better, sweeter, more wholesome home for girls, presided over by one not too old to have forgotten a girl's pleasures and troubles, nor too young to guard them from temptations or warn them of dangers. Mrs. Atkinson, herself no stranger, having once dwelt under this same roof as a pupil during Mrs. Burwell's life, brings now, that she herself is the home centre of the school, the experience gathered there from the teachings, the wisdom, the example of her who made the school so eminently successful in past days. To us in Charlotte no greater praise can be spoken. During the last summer vacation, just before the school opened in September, the building was thoroughly repaired and painted and renovated, the grounds put in order, and many conveniences added. Now it is one of the pleasantest places in the South. The rooms are warm and dry and equable in winter, and in summer are cool and air, are surrounded by trees and flowers, and in Charlotte.

Time forbids that we mention in detail the Latin, French and German classes, or the calisthenic and kindergarten exercises. Each language is carefully and thoroughly taught and every department fully provided for.

The initial year of this school closed on June 10th, with a concert given by the pupils under the direction of Dr. Bidez. The evening was unpropitious, the sky black with clouds and a heavy rain falling, but a large audience gathered in the chapel at the appointed hour. The room was ornamented with the drawings and paintings of the pupils of the art department, many of them of no ordinary merit and all evidencing most thorough teaching and careful finish. The usual heavy wreaths of cedar around the rostrum gave place to a lighter and more classic arrangement of oak leaves, which, with a lavish wealth of flowers, made the stage look like a lovely bower. The selections of music were nearly all new, the programme was carefully and tastefully arranged, and the pieces rendered with an accuracy, delicacy and spirit that told of unwearied training and diligent practice. The singing was particularly fine and gave great pleasure to the audience, which was the most quiet and appreciative ever witnessed on a similar occasion. Not a whisper disturbed a single performer, and yet each one felt and knew she had the sympathy and appreciation of the listeners. One of the pleasantest features of the concert was the playing of a pretty waltz by four very little girls, whose feet could not pretend to touch the floor, on two pianos. Admirably they kept together, and well deserved was the round of applause they received at the finale of their performance.

In an interval of the music Mr. Atkinson read the list of distinguished pupils and the roll of honor.

Thus ended the first year of the Charlotte Institute for Young Ladies under Mr. Atkinson's administration. With the full confidence and sympathy of the community in himself and in his teachers it is hoped and believed that the year to come will be marked with still more pronounced success and still greater progress. A CHARLOTTE LADY.

PEACE.

I was one of many who attended and enjoyed the late commencement of Peace Institute in Raleigh. The Raleigh papers give such full and excellent reports of all their schools that it seems superfluous for anyone else to write another line about them. But I recollect that the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN goes to a good many homes where the Raleigh papers do not, and many of our people will be glad to know that "Peace" is still going ahead, and her exhibitions were never better, nor her prospects brighter.

I was at at the kindergarten exhibition on Monday afternoon, and wish that all who are inclined to turn up their noses at the kindergarten could have seen that beautiful and interesting spectacle. Thirty dear little children going through these exercises perfectly, and showing such practice in mental arithmetic and geography, and Bible, as might put some grown persons to the blush. All their pretty little works, too, so well done; the school house built for the kindergarten near the central building of Peace so well arrayed and so attractive. I was "carried away," as the school girls say, with it all. But happily I came back in time to enjoy the calisthenics at night. This, too, was a beautiful and animating sight. The drill was perfect, and the girls were lovely. Miss Mattoon, their teacher, has carried the system far beyond that of Miss Fowler, who, we all thought, was first rate in her day. There is more spirit and grace in the exercise in Miss Mattoon's hands.

The address on Tuesday night, by Mr. Smith, was listened to attentively by a large audience. It was a little ont of the ordinary run of such affairs. "Dreams" was the subject, not in itself novel but novel in the application to the present time, place and circumstance. The music this evening was good, bnt only a prelude to the grand concert of the next night. Peace concerts are so uniformly good, the character of the music and the superiority of the performances are so well understood that they attract a crowd of all denominations, both from the city of Raleigh and from abroad, such as no other school can command. Prof. Baumann may be proud of these annual testimonials of the situation in which he is held as a teacher. The singing and the instrumental music all evinced the care and skill and taste that had drilled and guided the performers. A concert at Peace is a number one entertainment. When you have heard the music there are the paintings and drawings to admire, all well worth looking at. And when you are tired of looking and admiring there are the fine halls and the porches, and the best company in Raleigh to enjoy them with.

Our own people may feel secure that Peace Institute is all that it claims to be, all they could wish it to be. The management was never more thoroughly organized, nor more successful, nor more deserving our confidence and gratitude.

Your readers will be glad to hear that the University Normal School is opened and once more in a full tide of successful and enthusiastic administration. On Tuesday morning President Battle, Profs. Ladd, Mangum, McIver, Winston, Tillett, Redd, &c., &c., opened the school with about seventy-five in attendance. The students have been arriving in crowds to-day. The programme is much as last year's, involving every hour of the day in one pursuit or another, with a grand total result of much enjoyment, improvement, and happiness to all parties.

I have not yet seen many of the former pupils. The faces are mostly new so far. But I write only the third day. Miss Coe organized the kindergarten again in the University library, which has all its ball room decorations still hanging round. The blue and white hangings are not only pretty, but they protect the library from dust and sun. Prof. Tillett occupies the chair filled last year by Mr. Page—of the English language and Shakespeare. Prof. Tomlinson who was here in '77, and has lately returned from Europe, will teach grammar, &c., &c. Many will be glad to know that Prof. Hotchkiss will lecture again.

Every one looks cheerful and happy. Prof. Maugum says it is a marked feature of the school that it obeys the apostolic injunction to "rejoice always" with such a will. Mr. President is cheerful, the professors are all cheerful, the ladies are all cheerful and the gentlemen are all cheerful and the sun shines cheerfully upon them all. Will not the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN come up and take a look at it, and see what a good thing persistent work is, combined with persistent cheerfulness?

THE ANNUAL COLLECTION FOR THE INVALID FUND.

OFFICE OF HOME MISSIONS,
Baltimore, June 25, 1879.

DEAR BRETHREN: We come again to make the Church's annual appeal in behalf of her aged and infirm ministers, and the widows and orphans of her deceased ministers. The collection for this object is appointed for the first Sabbath of July, and we trust it will be unusually liberal, as there is great need that it shall be. We do not know what stronger plea to urge than simply to state that over one hundred families are dependent for aid upon your gifts, and to let these mute recipients of your bounty stand before you as the powerful advocates for your liberal benefactions. Among them you will see aged men bowed under the infirmities of years who have devoted a half century of laborious and self-denying work to the service of the Church, and who, while waiting their Heavenly Father's time to enter upon their reward, have none to whom they can look for support but God's people. In this goodly company you will also see honored matrons who have stood beside their honored husbands as they bore the heat and burden of the day, giving them comfort, encouragement and strength in their labors, but who, having been bereft of their earthly support, are clad in the garments of mourning, and while patiently awaiting the will of the Saviour depend upon your beneficence for the necessaries of life. And then the dear little children who, in the mysterious wisdom of a gracious God, have been deprived of their earthly guides and guardians, and who have now to be fed, and clothed, and educated for usefulness in the Church and the world, complete the company, and turn to you for tender regard and assistance. In the name of the Church and of the Church's adorable Head, our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, we ask you to send cheer to these expectant hearts by supplying their pressing and urgent wants. The Executive Committee have for some years past been unable to minister to their comfort as was needed because of want of means. It is therefore much to be desired that your gifts shall at this time be more liberal and more general than ever before. It will indeed be a bright day for the Church if the collection now to be gathered shall be sufficient to meet all the needs of those for whom it is intended. If every one will do what he can for this object we feel sure the Committee will be amply supplied with funds for this noble purpose.

With Christian regards we remain most truly yours,

RICHARD MCILWAINE,
J. LEIGHTON WILSON, } Secretaries.

P. S.—It is requested that ministers shall read this letter to their congregations and Sabbath school superintendents to their schools, and that as far as possible our Christian people who may not have the opportunity of contributing otherwise will send on their gifts directly to our office.

Four persons made a profession of faith and joined the Presbyterian church at Rayville, La., on the fourth Sabbath in May. Rev. D. A. Campbell, pastor.

The Presbyterian church at Newnan, Ga., served by Rev. James Stacey, D. D., assisted by Rev. N. Bachman, of Tennessee, has been greatly revived. Twenty-six persons have been added to the church.

Three new members were received on profession of faith, one a gray-headed man over sixty years of age, into the Presbyterian church at Bellehaven, Va., at the first communion on June 1st. The church is supplied by Rev. R. D. Stinson.

Rev. C. H. Dobbs is in charge of the Presbyterian church at Robinson, near Waco, Texas. Eight additions were received last month.

Rev. A. J. Witherspoon writes to the Southwestern Presbyterian: I desire through our newspapers to acknowledge the sum of five dollars, received from Mr. Alexander Sprunt, of Wilmington, N. C., to constitute himself a member of the New Orlean's Seaman's Friend Society for the year 1879. This is the first fruits of the action of our late General Assembly, recommending the cause of seamen to the prayers and alms of our people, and we confidently expect the harvest to follow. A number of persons at the General Assembly received certificates of membership, and said that they would make an effort to have them filled, and send them, as Mr. Sprunt has done, by postal order.

The collision which, a short time since, was anticipated between the King of Burmah and Great Britain, through the authorities of British Burmah, was happily averted, but the insane conduct of the despot towards his own subjects has not abated. THE TIDY HOUSEWIFE.

The careful tidy housewife, when she is giving her house its spring cleaning, should bear in mind that the dear inmates of her house are more precious than houses, and that their systems need cleansing by purifying the blood, regulating the stomach and bowels to prevent and cure the diseases arising from spring malaria and miasma, and she should know that there is nothing that will do it so perfectly and surely as Hop Bitters, the purest and best of all medicines. See other column.

A DESIRABLE ARTICLE.

We verily believe that it would be rendering any family a very great service to introduce into it Kitto's Cyclopedia. This Cyclopædia is the work of John Kitto, D D., F. S. A., author of the "Pictorial Bible," the History and Physical Geography of Palestine, and editor of the Journal of Sacred Literature, etc., etc.

It is arranged expressly for Sunday School Superintendents, Teachers and Bible Students, and embraces a complete and authentic description of all the characters, customs, countries and events mentioned in the Bible, and those connected with them in Egyptian, Persian, Assyrian, Grecian and Roman History. Including the period of over four hundred years between the Old and New Testaments, to which are added many valuable tables, and the products of the latest researches in Biblical literature, together with the knowledge gained by the explorations and discoveries of eminent travellers. The whole illustrated with numerous cuts, maps and full page engravings from the best authenticated models and designs that antiquarian research and ancient monuments can produce.

By special arrangement we can furnish this work well printed and bound in cloth, with the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN one year for $4 50—or to any new subscriber, or any one sending us a new subscriber, at $4 00 for paper and cyclopœdia. Publishers price is $4 50.

TO AGENTS.

It will not be practicable to write to each one of the Agents of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, and ask them to continue their exertions. We now make the general request, and take occasion to thank them and all other friends for the disinterested kindness so fully and so constantly manifested in the past.

Suddenly of heart disease, SAMUEL JOHNSTON, aged 65 years.

Mr. Johnston was for many years a consistent member of Poplar Tent church. He loved his church and was willing to spend and be spent in her service. It is in a great measure his earnest efforts that Poplar Tent is indebted for her parsonage. His place in Poplar Tent will be very hard to fill. He was expecting to do much this fall and relieve her of debt. But his work is done. The Master has called him. We miss him, we mourn, but do not repine. The Judge of all the earth has done well.

J. H. THORNWELL.

A good and useful man has fallen. We are in sorrow. JOHN WOLFE, Esq., a ruling elder in Sharon, departed this life at his residence near Charlotte, May, 26, 1879, at the advanced age of 82 years.

It is with great heaviness of heart we chronicle the demise of such a lovely Christian and efficient officer. But to contemplate a Christian character so uniform, so symmetrical, and so amiable, produces emotions of pleasure and gratitude. Humanity rarely inherits so many excellencies, and so few infirmities as were associated in the character of the Nestor of the Sharon session. Wise in council, conservative in action, patient in delay, mild but firm in government, he established a desirable reputation, and exerted a widespread and salutary influence throughout the entire sphere assigned him by Providence. His calm, evenly, consistent deportment emitted a fragrance, which readily indicated the source from whence his treasures were supplied. His life was not simply consistent. He adorned his profession.

Mr. Wolfe believed he was converted in early life, but he did not make a public profession till after he passed the meridian. His father's large family were all Methodists and he resided in a community of like faith; but to a part of his creed he could not conscientiously subscribe, indeed, against it he believed it was his duty to testify. So he waited, hoping the developments of Providence would open a way. At length his lot was cast in six miles of Sharon, where with joy and gratitude, he identified himself with the people of God who inculcate principles accordant with his own.

As a ruler in the house of the Lord, he discharged his duties faithfully, without offending the governed. Like Abraham he commanded his house, reared his children in virtue and duty; and was permitted to enjoy the exquisite pleasure of seeing them all members of Christ's spiritual family. And so prominent was he in the community, as a peace-maker, that his agency was solicited far and near to reconcile the strifes and animosity which passion and selfish interest had excited. His majestic proportionate Christian character, his calm, dignified bearing, his countenance, his eye, his utterance, (both as to matter and manner,) commanded the reverence, and controlled the feelings of all. And yet he was so unassuming, so retiring, so unaspiring as to be unconscious of the power he exerted.

His secular avocation was husbandry. And to this calling he brought the same clear, solid discriminating judgment. His soil, home, stock and implements were good; and constantly improving. Taste, discretion and thrift were everywhere apparent. His barnes were filled with plenty. He reared, educated and endowed a large and interesting family: and yet could and did yearly contribute liberally to the treasury of the Lord.

Mr. Wolfe was endowed with a remarkable talent and taste for music vocal and instrumental. And all his family were amateurs. His home was the scene of frequent sacred concerts. And under his liberal patronage the devotions of Sharon were greatly improved. With truth to instruct the understanding, he associated the concord of sweet sounds to arouse and engage the feelings. His was not merely an emotional religion. But he regarded a religion without feeling as inoperative and void. He was a great lover of music and cultivated it for its inspiring agency in the public and private worship of Jehovah. His last illness was painful and protracted. In the severe paroxysms of pain he frequently endured, his family often mitigated his sufferings by repeating his favorite devotional compositions, inspiring and elevating the soul above the infirmities of the body. And when vocal utterance was no longer possible, his quivering lip would vibrate in harmony with those majestic numbers as they rolled up to the throne of Jehovah. Thus this beloved disciple literally and sweetly sang away his soul into the embraces of his blessed Redeemer. The power to utter vocal sounds is all of earth we take with us out of this world. And as our venerable father possessed it in such a high degree, and enjoyed it with such an exquisite relish: we apprehend it is no ordinary happiness he now enjoys in the Kingdom of eternal light and glory.

"How blessed the righteous when he dies!"

CHARLOTTE INSTITUTE.

SESSION BEGINS SEPTEMBER 10, 1879.

Testimonials as to the Thoroughness and High Standard of the Instruction at this Institute for Young Ladies.

"C. M. I." CHARLOTTE, N. C., May 19th, 1879.

We have personally inspected some of the examination papers of the Charlotte Institute for Young Ladies and the work of the pupils upon them. The examinations are searching, and the pupils' work gives evidence of instruction as careful and thorough as that afforded in our best male schools. We are satisfied that the Distinctions and Certificates of Proficiency awarded by the Institute are good criteria of the attainments of those who receive them. From our knowledge of the Principal's success here and elsewhere in the instruction of young ladies, we cordially recommend the Institute to those who seek a thorough education for their daughters.

WM. CAIN, Prof. Math., &c., "C. M. I."
M. M. HARGROVE, Prof. of Latin, &c., "C. M. I."

Having personally inspected the examination papers of the Charlotte Institute for Young Ladies and the work of the pupils upon them, I am prepared to pronounce the course extended and the instruction thorough. I think the papers would compare favorably with those handed in by the best male schools of the State. A certificate that a pupil had successfully passed such examinations would be sufficient evidence of her attainments to any one who knew their character.

WM. W. CARSON, Prof. Mat., Davidson College, N. C.

"Having long known the Rev. Wm. R. Atkinson, as a student of the South Carolina College, subsequently of the University of Virginia, and (from personal examination of his work) as a successful teacher of Mathematics and the Natural Sciences, I can very cordially give my testimony to his fine culture, and to his skill as an accomplished instructor.

Mr. Atkinson is an honor to his profession, and his School is well worthy of the patronage of those who seek a thorough education for their daughters. CHARLES S. VENABLE."

University of Virginia, July 13th, 1878.

[From Charles B. Bradley, Professor of Thorough Bass, and Band Master, Dana's Musical Institute.]

"Prof. Aloys Bidez has for two years been my fellow teacher in Dana's Musical Institute, Warren, O. I have known him all the time to be faithful to his duties and painstakings in his department which was that of the Piano. This department greatly improved under his care, either through his peculiar method of teaching, or through the studies and musical works he introduced. He has always won the respect and friendship of every one of his pupils through his firmness and kindness. He has shown himself proficient in Thorough-Bass, Harmony and Orchestration; and when at one time he was in charge of the Vocal Department of this Institute, he also proved himself a thorough teacher of Vocal Music.

[From Rev. C. B. Hulbert, President of Middlebury College, Vermont.]

"It gives me pleasure to commend Miss Susan A. Sherman as a lady of high personal culture, and especially accomplished in her chosen profession as an Artist. A niece of the celebrated Boston Artist and Portrait Painter, Albert G. Hoyt, Esq., she early caught an inspiration from his works, and manifested something of his genius. The fine opportunities she has enjoyed from early youth, the excellent school in which she was drilled in art-culture, and the long experience she has had as a teacher, with its acknowledged success, combine to make her a rare acquisition to any Institution of Collegiate Training."

C. B. HULBERT.

N. B.—The entire corps of the able and experienced teachers of the last session have become permanently connected with the Institute. For terms or any information address the Principal,

THE BUFFALO LITHIA WATERS,

For Malarial Poisoning, Especially Hepatic Diseases and Malarial Fevers.

Testimony of Distinguished Medical Men:

MALARIOUS FEVERS.

Extract from Letter of Dr. Wm. T. Howard, of Baltimore, Professor of Diseases of Women and Children in the University of Maryland, of August 1st, 1873.

Dr. Howard compares these waters with those of the celebrated Greenbrier White Sulphur, West Virginia, and adds the following:

"The Greenbrier White Sulphur Waters will be recognized by all informed upon such subjects as one of the most noted Mineral Fountains of the World.

"Indeed, in a certain class of cases, it is much superior to the latter. I allude to the abiding debility attendant upon the tardy convalescence from grave acute diseases: and more especially to the cachexia and sequels incident to MALARIOUS FEVERS IN ALL THEIR GRADES AND VARIETIES."

* * * * * * * * * In short, were I called upon to state from what mineral waters I have seen the greatest and most unmistakable amount of good accrue in the largest number of cases in a general way, I would unhesitatingly say the BUFFALO SPRINGS, in Mecklenburg county, Virginia."

—o—

Extract from Letter of the late Dr. Thos. P. Atkinson, of Danville, Va., Ex-President State Medical Society, dated August 15th, 1874.

"The Buffalo Lithia Waters have unquestionably displayed great power in the peculiar diseases of the warm, miasmatic regions of the South, which may be grouped together under the general head of Malarial Cachexia, covering Hepatic Engorgements, Enlargements of the Spleen, Jaundice, &c."

"It is not pretended that these Waters possess any anti-periodic properties, such as belong to Quinine—At the same time, however, it is unquestionably true, that in the intermittent and remittent fevers in a chronic form, they have in numerous instances, given relief in cases which had obstinately resisted all the anti-periodic drugs of the shops. From my experience with them, I feel fully warranted in saying that, with rare exceptions, whenever disease is found originating under malarial influence, a potent remedy may be found in this water."

—o—

Extract from a Letter of Dr. John C. Coleman, of Halifax county, Va., (prior to the War a surgeon of the U. S. Navy, now retired) dated near Scottsburg, Va., January 1st, 1879.

"Perhaps no claim made for the Buffalo Lithia Waters is more thoroughly established than that they are a powerful antidote to malarial poison in all its forms and varieties. In that large class of disorders, included in term Malarial Cachexia, embracing Engorgement of the Liver and Spleen, Jaundice, Indigestion, Dropsies and Neuralgias, of which the warm malarious districts of the South are so prolific, the action of these waters as a general rule is most decided and happy, and oftentimes astonishing. In Chronic Intermittent and Remittent Fevers, they are especially efficacious. I presume there is no season at these Springs in which some cases of this character do not find relief from these Waters, which have before baffled the healing art."

—o—

Extract from Letter of Dr. Alfred Plumber, of Manson, N. C., dated March 16, 1874.

"I have known the Buffalo Springs of Mecklenburg county, Va., for twenty-five years, and have sent many patients to them. In Chronic Intermittent and Remittent Fever, and in all diseases originating in malarial poison, I have found their action almost that of a charm. I have sent young ladies to these Springs so enfeebled from this influence as to be scarcely able to walk across a floor, and in a few weeks they would become so invigorated as to be able to dance half of every night."

—o—

These springs open for guests the 1st day of June. The water in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, $5.00 per case at the springs. Springs pamphlets sent to any address.

TALBOTT'S PATENT SPARK ARRESTER

The Invention of the Age.

It does not destroy the draft.
It does not interfere with cleaning the tubes.
It will not choke up, and requires no cleaning.
It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable, as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape).
It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.
It is simple and durable and can be relied upon.
It can be attached to any boiler.
No planter should be without one of them. Insurance companies will insure gins and barns where the Talbott Engines and Spark-Arresters are used at same rate as charged for water or horse-power.

FOR THE FAMILY.

The Look.

"And the Lord looked upon him and said 'Go in this thy might.'"—Judges vi.: 14.

I looked upon the olive grove,
What comfort could it bring?
The fruitful vine, once full of speech,
Was but a common thing.
Up to the gorgeous skies I gazed,
Down to the silvery sea,
On to the purple sunset heights.
But all was dumb to me.

Then back I turned to the vanished days,
When Christ his love revealed—
To messages of hope and peace,
His faithful hand had sealed.
And well I know, "for me he died,"
But yet no rest could be,
Until my drooping heart could sing,
"My Saviour lives for me!"

I looked upon my wounded feet,
So often led astray;
I strove to count my countless sins
Forever put away;
I looked on everything but Him
In desolating grief,
And found! O heart what could'st thou find
Of solace and relief?

Then sat I down before the Lord,
That He my need might see;
And helpless, hopeless, speechless, then
My Saviour looked on me
Oh look of life! Oh, might of love!
My heart that glance returned.
And meeting 'neath his heavenly smile,
With joy and ardor burned

Just so, my sweet and sovereign Lord
On Peter looked before;
He, in the strength of that one look,
Denied his Lord no more.
But followed Him in life to death;
Lord, let me do the same!
Yea, let me go in this thy might,
Strong in Thy Holy Name.

The Whole Class.

"It is such a rainy day I don't believe I'll go to school," said Charles B— to his mother.

"Why, my son? You are not afraid of the rain. I hope?"

"Oh, no!"

"I thought you loved to go to school."

"So I do when the other boys are there; but you know that Willie and Frank are out of town, Joseph is sick, and it is so very rainy the others cannot come so far."

"Then I should think that there would be all the more need of your going to encourage your teacher."

"Yes, I know it; but it is rather hard on a boy to be the whole class in school."

"Don't you have your lessons learned?"

"Yes, but to tell the truth, it gives the teacher such a chance to ask me close questions when she has me all to herself."

"Well," said Mrs. B— to Charley, after he had returned home from school, "were you the whole class to-day?"

"I was the only scholar."

"Was it as hard as you thought it would be?"

"Why, no, it wasn't. The teacher said, 'Charley, it is hardly fair for you to answer all the questions, so you may ask me every other one.' So I did, and it was very nice. Sometimes she got to asking me home questions, too, and before I knew it I was talking just as easy as could be. I never had such good recitations as these all by myself."

In after years Charley looked back on that rainy day in school, when he represented the whole class, as the turning point in his life, for from it he learned the habit of perseverance under difficulties.—Banner.

The Orphans.

"Are you asleep, Susie?" Whispered a half sobbing voice, coming from a sorrowful looking little boy, as he bent over his sister's bed.

"No, Benny; what's the matter; does it hurt you yet where he whipped you?"

"Yes, awfully; and I'm so hungry. He wouldn't give me any supper. I'll tell you I won't stand it; I'm going to run away."

"And leave me, Benny? I should die in this old poor-house alone;" and Sue raised herself in the bed, and looked mournfully out of the large window.

"Let's run away together! Wouldn't it be nice if it was summer? Then we could go off in the woods where nobody could find us, and pick berries and nuts to eat, and have a splendid time.

"Hush, Benny; talk low, or you will wake up some of the others. You know it isn't Summer, and we would freeze and starve to death if we left here now!"

"I'd rather freeze to death than to be treated as I am; and I am about starved now," replied Benny half crying.

"I'll tell you, Benny. My teacher told us last Sunday 'that every-thing belongs to God;' and she told us once, if we prayed real earnest he would answer our prayer,"

'Don't you think, Susie," interrupted Benny, looking wistfully out at the clear blue sky, lighted by myriads of bright stars, "that that big dipper up there is where God keeps all his good things, like nice cakes, and pies, and honey?"

"Oh, no! of course he don't; but I think he keeps his money in it; and perhaps if we pray to him very hard he will just drop us down some. Then we could do just as we wanted to, and have everything we pleased. I should have lots of dolls, and little carriages, and dishes, and you a dog, and some tools, and a sled, and—O Benny, let's kneel down and pray this minute!"

Down went four little knees, clasped were four little hands, closed were four little eyes, and earnestly moved four little lips. God listened to their petition, and answered it in his own wise way.

After their prayer was said they crept softly to the window and looked anxiously up at the great dipper in the sky. Suddenly they clasped each other's and Susie whispered joyfully, "He did hear us! He did hear us! He did hear us! I saw something bright fall on the big stone house over there."

"I guess he didn't drop it zackly straight, or else the wind blew it away a little, said Benny. "How shall we ever get it?'

"We'll have to wait till morning, and sly off some way and just tell the folks that live there all about it, and ask them to let us go up and get it. We must go to bed now, though, so we can get up real early; and I'll tell you, Benny, may be we won't ever sleep in this old poor house again," as she kissed him good night.

Mr. Herman Rock, the owner of the "big stone house," was a soured, desolate old man. Once he had been different, when his sweet wife and child were alive, but since their death he had grown crusty and miserly. So people were rather afraid of him, and left him mostly to himself and his maiden sister, who kept house for him and was his only friend and companion. On the morning following the beginning of this story, as Mr. Rock and his sister Celia were taking their morning meal in their great clean kitchen, there came a timid knock at the door, and on opening it who should appear before them but little Susie and Benny from the poor house! The children both seemed very much frightened at first, but soon Susie summoned up courage and related the story, about their lonely condition—how they were abused, their prayer and the bright thing they saw fall on the house, and then asked permission to take a ladder and climb up and get their treasure. She told her story so simply and innocently that the two listeners' faces first wore an amused expression, which soon softened into one of pity, and the icy fetters that had long bound Celia Rock's heart soon melted away in a flood of tears, as she took the little ones in her arms and lavished on them many kind words and fond caresses.

"Give them some breakfast, then come into the sitting-room," commanded Mr. Rock in a hoarse voice as he left the room.

Celia Rock knew by the changed look and excited appearance of her brother that something uncommon was about to occur, but she was not prepared for what happened when she came before him

"Celia Rock," said he, walking hurriedly across the room, "you and I have shut out the sunlight from our lives long enough; we have locked up our talents long enough; we have hid away our gold long enough. Let us now undo the shutters and let in the sunlight; unfasten the rusty bolts that bar in our talents and improve them; dig up our gold and make use of it, that we may be as dippers, full of good things, in God's hands to drop blessings and comforts to his little children."

So Susie and Benny did find the gift God sent them—not in a bundle of gold on the top of Mr. Rock's house, as they had expected, but in a pleasant home inside. And when in after years they prayed for blessings, which seemed so bright, they added trustingly—remembering the past—"answer, Father, in thine own way."—Northern Advocate.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Careless Meteor.

In the northwest corner of Emmett county, in the township of the same name, State of Iowa, bordering Minnesota State line, a meteor of unusually large dimensions recently fell. A correspondent of one of our Western contemporaries who has visited the place thus describes the meteor and the scene attending its descent:

It was about 5 o'clock in the afternoon that a terrible, indescribable noise was heard, scaring the cattle and terrifying the inhabitants for twenty miles about. There was a line of yellow-reddish smoke-colored haze, inside of which was an infernal rumble, as, at the rate of fifty miles a second, this strange, howling monster, or wonder, came toward the earth with a roar and a crash that fairly shook the earth.

Before it struck there was an explosion, terrible to hear and suggestive of the final dissolution of all things, and then, with a shock and a thud, something struck. Men ran to the spot to find that, at a point within thirty feet of the county line, the sod had been torn as though ripped by lightning, and that a hole was left in proof that someth ng had gone in there out of the way. Chunks of sod were thrown forty rods away from the hole, which, on being dug into to the depth of fifteen feet, ten feet of which distance was in solid blue clay, revealed a lump of metal resembling iron mixed with silver. The hole was dug larger, and by means of chains the mineral was taken out and found to weigh 431 ponods It is two feet long and about sixteen inches square, i a ragged chunk can be called square. Another chunk, weighing 32 pounds, fell not far distant, plowing up the sod within twelve rods of the school house near the residence of John Barber. Another piece, weighing 156 pounds, was found embedded five feet in blue clay.

There is trouble here over the find. One man, who owns the land, declares that the property is his, while the man who first found it says it is his by right of discovery. The same is the case in each instance. Suits at law have been entered by the owner of the soil against the men who dug them out, and who have hidden their treasure where the officers of the law, as yet, cannot find them.

These are the facts. Now what is the thing that fell, and where did it come from?

S. N. R.

To this the editor the La Crosse Democrat replies that it was undoubtedly a meteor, or a fragment of a comet thrown out by explosion, and following its orbit perhaps for thousands of years, till, losing its momentum, it came within the atmosphere of the earth, and was then, cooling as it whirled through space, attracted to the earth, and, rushing with terrible speed, drove itself into the soil, as above described. The material of which meteors are composed is known as meteoric iron, a useless, burned metal, resembling cinder of iron, but utterly useless except as a curiosity.—Scientific American.

The Best Left Out.

"Oh, they don't know how to live," said little Miss Walton. "They make calls, and receive company, and go to church to cut out underclothes for the poor; they drive, and do fancy work; they go to the mountains and to the seashore, and somehow the time is cut into little bits, and it is all gone, and the best is left out."

The best of life she meant. And what is the best? Undoubtedly that which gives health and force to the spirit. We are animals; we are social beings; we are spirits. The spirit is the motive power of the whole nature, as the water or the heat is the motive power of the machine. And yet we let the fire burn low, and the stream run almost dry, while we polish the machine and plan for its adornment and well-being. As animals we make sure of food and clothing; as social beings we gather around us friends, and multiply social ties; as spirits we hunger and thirst, and pine to powerlessness. And so the best is left out.

Power flows from within outward. The best is within. It is this tendency to starve the spirit through giving all our attention to the outward that gives sorrow oftentimes its healthful potency. We receive a terrible wound, and it is impossible for us to carry on our life plans. We are obliged to sit in sorrow and solitude, and in this enforced quiet the angels come and minister to us. The spirit is fed. And so persons sometimes say "I was never so happy as during the time of my greatest sorrow." Inward life, the life, flowed in because the outer had received a check. God's ancient people were in the wilderness when the manna fell for them; and many a blessed miracle has been wrought for the inhabitants of the wilderness of sorrow.

But how shall we plan our ordinary life so as not to leave out the best? No one person can answer this question for all. No one can answer it wholly for himself or herself. There are, however, some axioms that apply to spiritual hygiene.

In the first place, every woman should have some time to herself. Silence and solitude are wonderful healers. Women are exquisitely sensitive, and they are wounded and put out of tune by the constant attrition incident to modern life. In this inharmonious condition a mother cannot decide what is best for herself or for her children. She is drifting steadily away from sanity. Every woman needs some intellectual food, at least every woman with an intellect. Brilliant young girls graduate from our seminaries and colleges with honor, and thereafter subsist mentally upon a light novel now and then, and the newspapers. It makes but little difference whether the woman is rich or poor. I believe there are as many unhappy, unhealthy women in one class as the other. There is always some person or some circumstance to enslave women who will be enslaved. And the bonds grow firmer the longer they are worn.

A book that I lately read contained this suggestive sentence: "What is called physical strength is not physical strength at all; it is in the soul."

Many women are sick in soul and do not know it. And how can it be otherwise when from their spiritual regime "the best is left out."—Christian Union.

A Glimpse at Jenny Lind.

And, before I quit the theme of song and singers, let me mention a glimpse that I caught before leaving London of one of the celebrities of the past. On leaving the home of Mme. Albani, I ordered the street to look at the dwelling of Jenny Lind. The house stands back from the street, and a garden that must in summer be a very bouquet of flowers and verdure extends in front of it. A bust of the great singer, life size, and in marble, stands in the large bay-window that fronts the garden And beside the bust sat an elderly lady in a white mob-cap and white cashmere shawl, engaged in partaking of the afternoon cup of tea that forms so prominent a feature in English social life. She was talking to some one in the room, and as she turned to the window I saw again the face that I had last looked upon crowned with roses and lighted with inspiration, on the stage of Tripler Hall, twenty-eight long years ago. Under the disfiguring cap the fair hair, now plentifully streaked with gray was soon rolled back in precisely the same fashion as that which set all the girls in America to twisting back their tresses in those bygone years. In other respects Jenny Lind has greatly changed. Few could have recognized in the pale, worn lineaments of the elderly lady the well-nigh angelic countenance of the greatest singer of our day and generation. I permitted myself but one glance, not wishing to violate, even by a look, the sanctity of that tranquil home. I am told that Mme. Lind-Goldschmidt, as she styles herself, is very eccentric and peculiar. She still interests herself in music, being the leader of the Bach Choir, a private association, to which some of the first ladies in London belong; and so severe is she in her requirements, and so strict in demanding their fulfilment, that her high-born pupils are often tempted to rebel.—Philadelphia Telephone.

Flower Gardens for Children.

It is desirable on many accounts that children should cultivate flowers rather than fruits or vegetables. Most children are fond of flowers, and all can be taught to love them, and the herdler and commoner sorts at least do not tax the energies so heavily in cultivation as either fruits or vegetables. As children acquire strength and skill they may gradually be entrusted with the care of vegetables or fruits; but they must be taught to use the products of their little gardens as a means of conferring happiness on others. But of all the lessons to be learned in a garden the most valuable is the art of observing; for so varied, so delicate, so minute, and yet so unerring are the operations of nature that, though the closest study must fail to fathom her mysteries, the rewards of such study are so rich, so surprising, that even the student of tender years is perpetually stimulated to fresh researches This interest in natural objects, once awakened, will prove an inexhaustible source of pleasure. Flowers, however, form not the only study to be pursued in the garden. The sun, air, winds, rain and dew, birds, insects, the peculiarities of soil, all may be studied from nature's ever open, but too often unheeded page. —Scottish-American Journal.

The Autophone.

Prof. Gaby of New York has just completed a very curious and wonderful musical invention, which enables those totally unacquainted with music to execute either on the organ or piano the most difficult piece with the precision and expression of skilful performers. In this device, called the autophone, the keys of the ordinary organ or piano are furnished with a very sensitive apparatus for moving them by means of a puff of air furnished by the bellows The music, instead of being printed in the usual manner, is prepared by puncturing in a strip of paper a series of holes which correspond to the desired notes. This strip of paper is coiled on a roller, placed inside of the instrument, and slowly unwound by clockwork. As long as the paper is unpunctured no sound is heard, but the moment one of the holes makes its appearance it allows a little puff of air to pass through, which, striking on the moving apparatus, causes the note to sound. The autophone is said to be especially adapted to the organ, as the paper can be made to work the stops as well as the keys.—Christian Union.

Effects of the Perfume of Flowers on Health

"Contrary to a popular belief," says a writer in Cassell's Magazine, "it has been found by an Italian professor that fine vegetable perfumes exercise a positively beneficial influence on the atmosphere by converting the oxygen of the air into that powerful oxidising and, therefore, purifying agent, ozone. The essences found by him to produce the most ozone are precisely those which usage has selected as the most invigorating, such as cherry, laurel, cloves, lavender, juniper, mint, lemon, fennel and bergamot, several of which are ingredients in the refreshing eau de Cologne. Anise, nutmeg, thyme, narcissus and hyacinth flowers, mignonnette, heliotrope and lilies of the valley also develop ozone; in fact, all flowers possessing a perfume appear to do so, whereas those having none do not. This interesting intelligence will be gratifying to all lovers of flowers, and the cultivation of these lovely disinfectants of nature should be promoted in all marshy or foul places."

French troops are engaged in suppressing an insurrection in Algiers. They have been successful in driving the insurgents before them and are pressing on to Medina.

The Raleigh Observer was sold on the 17th inst. to Mr. John C. Blake of Raleigh. Its publication will be continued, and we are glad to learn that Mr. Peter M. Hale will remain the editor-in-chief.

The alarm from the eruptions of Etna and Vesuvius has not yet subsided, and the wires bring news of a violent earthquake near the town of Aci, in Sicily, seven miles northeast of Catania. Five villages in the vicinity are almost wholly destroyed; ten persons were killed and several injured. The inhabitants of the district are fleeing en masse.

Aci Reale is situated on the east coast of Sicily and between Mount Etna and the city of Catania, on a hill of lava. It is built principally of lava, and contains many churches, convents and towers. The population in 1871 was 35,785. Shocks of earthquake occurred also near Santa Venere and Guardia with destruction of buildings and loss of life.

A Wise Deacon

"Deacon Wilder I want you to tell me how you kept yourself and family so well the past season, when all the rest of us have been sick so much, and have had the doctors running to us so long."

"Bro. Taylor the answer is very easy. I used Hop Bitters in time and kept my family well and saved large doctor bills. Three dollars worth of it kept us all well and able to work all the time, and I will warrant it has cost you and most of the neighbors one to two hundred dollars apiece to keep sick the same time. I guess you'll take my medicine hereafter." See other column.

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER
Overwhelming evidence of their superiority over all other plasters. It is everywhere recommended by Physicians, Druggists and the Press.
The manufacturers received a special award and the only medal given for porous plasters at the Centennial Exposition, 1876 at the Paris Exposition, 1878.
Their great merit lies in the fact that they are the only plasters which relieve pain at once.
EVERY ONE SUFFERING FROM
Rheumatism, Lame Back, or Weak Back, Cold on the Chest, Coughs, or any local pain or ache should use Benson's Capcine Porous Plaster and be relieved at once Price 25 cents. Sold by all Druggists.

THE CENUINE
DR. C. McLANE'S
CELEBRATED
LIVER PILLS,
FOR THE CURE OF
Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,
DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.
PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.
DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.
For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.
BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.
The genuine are never sugar coated.
Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.
The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.
Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

ABSTRACT OF MINUTES OF PRESBYTERY OF FAYETTEVILLE—SPRING SESSIONS 1879.

This body met at St. Andrew's church, Moore county, N. C., April 24th, 1879, and was opened with a sermon by Rev. D. D. McBryde, from Mark vi: 13, last clause. Thirteen ministers and twenty-three ruling elders were present during our sessions.

Rev. Joseph Evans was chosen Moderator, and Rev. Wm. S. Lacy and Ruling Elder J. A. McAllister Temporary Clerks.

Absent: five ministers, and twenty-one churches not represented.

The usual committees were appointed by the Moderator.

Rev. Messrs. T. J. Allison of Orange Presbytery and G. M. Gibbs of Concord being present, were invited to sit as corresponding members.

Themes for trial pieces were assigned to Mr. D. A. McLean, one of our candidates.

Ministers and church sessions were ordered to prepare and forward to Presbytery next fall, historical sketches of their respective churches.

A special committee appointed for that purpose presented a report on family worship, which was adopted and ordered to be published in the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN and read from our pulpits.

Rev. D. D. McBryde was appointed commissioner to the General Assembly, and Rev. A. McQueen alternate; Mr. H. H. Hodgin, R. E. of Antioch church, principal, and J. A. McAllister, R. E. of Lumberton church, alternate.

On motion the report of the Treasurer was read and referred to the Finance Committee, together with his book and vouchers.

The Statistical reports were placed in the hands of the Stated Clerk. A special committee, consisting of Rev. Messrs. M. McQueen, J. H. Coble and A. N. Ferguson, was appointed to visit Mt. Carmel, Harmony and Buckingham churches with a view to their employing Rev. T. J. Allison one half of his time, should the way be clear.

Rev. J. H. Coble presented the report of the Committee on Education, which was approved, and the following resolution adopted:

Resolved, That Presbytery urge the pastors and stated supplies to present the claims of this cause to the churches under their care, and to use every proper means, in connection with the elders and deacons, to secure an increase of liberality in support of this cause.

Rev. D. Fairley, agent for publication and colportage, read his report, which was approved, and the resolutions appended thereto adopted, viz:

Resolved, That Mr. L. A. M Lean be again employed by this Presbytery as colporteur for three months, and that he be paid a salary of twenty-five dollars ($25) per month, allowing him besides the usual commission on sales.

Resolved 2d, That all the churches that did not take up the annual collection for colportage last August be directed to take it up on the first Sabbath in May, or as soon thereafter as practicable, and that the money be forwarned to the Treasurer.

Rev. H. G. Hill read the report on Sustentation, which, likewise, was approved, and the following appointments made as supplies to vacant churches:

Mark's Creek—One Sabbath and Sacramenta, J. H. Coble.

Centre—D. A. McRae, one Sabbath; A. McQueen, one Sabbath and Sacraments.

Shoe Heel—D. A. McRae, one Sabbath; A. McQueen, one Sabbath and Sacraments.

Vass—Dr. N. McKay, one Sabbath and Sacraments.

Flat Branch—Dr. N. McKay, one Sabbath and Sacraments.

Mt. Carmel and Harmony—T. J. Allison, one Sabbath and Sacraments.

Long Street—D. Fairley, one Sabbath and Sacraments.

The Committees on Sessional Records reported.

The following report in reference to vacant churches and stated supplies was adopted:

The Committee on Vacant Churches and Stated Supplies recommend to Presbytery the adoption of the following resolutions, viz:

1. That the pastoral relation be established with the least possible delay, when it is practicable.

2. That the semi-annual reports from the churches by the elders and the ministers, whether pastors or stated supplies, is the clearest recognition of Presbyterial authority and control, in reference to the churches and ministers.

3. That when Presbytery assents to the formation of the pastoral relation, or grants a stated supply, it is not for an indefinite time, but subject to the wishes of the parties interested and the judgment of the Presbytery.

4. That the rule requiring annual or semi-annual congregational meetings to reinvite and re-employ these stated supplies be and hereby is repealed.

The action of Presbytery in reference to the new Book of Church Order has already been published and therefore need not be repeated. The final vote stood, 17 for and 17 against it, the Moderator voting as a presbyter.

The Committee on Reciprocal Duties reported favorably in reference to ministers and churches so far as heard from—only 13 churches.

Presbytery adopted the following Narrative to the General Assembly:

The Committee on the Narrative to the General Assembly would submit the following report: The reports from the churches within our bounds are not complete, but give such facts and statistics as enable us to form conceptions approximately true respecting their moral and spiritual condition. We would report to the General Assembly that while some of our churches have been feeble and vacant, arrangements are in progress that we hope will soon result in giving them all the regular ministrations of the word. While there has been no extensive revival of religion, nor powerful outpouring of the Holy Spirit, many of our churches have grown under the stated preaching of the Gospel, and report accessions to their membership varying from one to thirty.

The following particulars indicate a favorable state of things among our churches:

1st. There is a good attendance upon public worship; a general desire to secure regular preaching on the part of feeble churches; the prevalence of peace and harmony, with few exceptions, and more vigorous efforts for a Scriptural observance of the Sabbath.

2d. The contribution of our churches, though not so large as they should be, are more regularly made to the Assembly's objects of benevolence, and a smaller number than formerly, report omitted collections.

3d. Sabbath school work is making gratifying progress, and increased attention is paid to the instruction and training of the children of the church.

4th. Female benevolent and missionary societies are organized within our bounds, and render important aid to our church enterprises; and in some of our Sabbath schools the children contribute regularly to the objects of church beneficence during the periods prescribed by the Assembly.

The Committee on Systematic Beneficence reported as collected for all objects $1,127 22.

The petition praying for the organization of a church at Cameron was granted conditionally, and Rev. David Fairly, Rev. W. S. Lacy and Mr. E. McGilvary were appointed to carry out their wishes, if the way be clear.

An interesting missionary meeting was held and a collection taken up, amounting to $16 05.

Rev. George M. Gibbs was received by letter from Concord Presbytery.

The agent on Sabbath schools, Rev. Wm. S. Lacy, reported on the subject.

Rev. J. P. McPherson was re-elected Treasurer of the Presbytery.

Three hundred copies of our minutes were ordered to be published.

The usual orders on the Treasurer were passed.

Rev. Wm. S. Lacy was nominated for next Moderator.

The usual vote of thanks was unanimously adopted.

Presbytery then adjourned to meet at Sharon church, Montgomery county, N. C., Wednesday before the second Sabbath in October, 1879, at 12 o'clock M.

J. P. McPHERSON, Stated Clerk.

THE ADDRESSES AT CHAPEL HILL.

With inimitable ease and naturalness, Dr. Hoge began with an allusion to the loveliness of the June morning, and the unique position he occupied, by no means taking the place of Judge Thurman, nor even representing himself; and paying a deserved compliment to the honored statesman whose absence all deplored, he won the hearts and attention of the audience at the outset, by his grace, dignity, playfulness, humor and power. For the simple introduction displayed all these traits of the orator.

His theme he announced as "The Nobility and Beauty of an Unselfish Life," and at once riveted attention by the story of good King John, of Bohemia, who, blind and old, at the famed battle of Cressy, with a knight on each side, rode into the conflict and died on the field of glory. The arms of the good King bore the legend "Ich Dien," I serve. And so impressed with his noble character and brave end, was the King of England, accompanied by his son the Prince of Wales, that then and thenceforth the words became the inscription of the arms of the Prince of Wales, and to-day his crest bears the noble legend: "Ich Dien."

A greater than King John, a life more pure, unselfish and illustrious, has impressed on the race the same lesson. For the Man of Nazareth has said: "Whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; And whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant."

Of the duty of service—of living for others; of unselfish usefulness,—of its joy and reward, I wish to speak. In itself it brought the purest pleasure, and in this age, this utilitarian age of eager search for wealth and selfish enjoyments, it was not without recognition. No longer does the hero have to secure for himself and his dynasty a throne and eternal fame by slaughter, intrigue, and conquest. The world approves and rewards those who with unselfish devotion give their powers and themselves to the amelioration of the race.

Who are among the world's benefactors who are thus honored, and are worthy to receive the love of mankind?

First let me name the Patriot Statesman. Then followed a brief delineation of the true Statesman who lived for country—above self, above party, above time; and the faithful description was greeted with sincere and earnest applause.

Second, I would name The Patriot Soldier.

Here Dr. Hoge traversed a well-worn path, yet with marvelous freshness, delicacy and tenderness. He spoke of the brave who slept. The assembly was hushed—a sacred stillness, a reverent awe pervaded the vast audience, as with pathos and power their deeds and unselfish devotions were brought to view—and the passage which was short and most eloquent, was closed with an exquisitely beautiful citation. (I thought from Timrod, but I cannot verify it.) No sound of applause echoed through the hall at its close. The silence and the tears were the best witnesses to the power of the orator.

The third class in the enumeration of the world's benefactors was the navigators and discoverers—those who had opened new worlds to commerce and added to the sum of human knowledge. Dr. Hoge sketched the eminent service (as an illustration) of Commodore Maury—the discovery of a new science and the advantage secured in commercial navigation. The tribute was not only just but feeling and eloquent, and awoke cordial response in the audience.

The inventors were next mentioned—those who had shortened processes of labor, and thereby added to human comfort and human life; those who had softened toil, and given emotion and intellect new paths of duty and new sources of delight, instead of being worn out in tedious and exhausting work.

Nor should I omit from this imperfect list the teacher, said the reverend speaker. To him, next to the mother, is the race indebted—by him moulded for usefulness. In this sphere how eminent, how appropriate, the services of women. Toiling with patient diligence or enthusiastic success, the teachers are surely among the benefactors of mankind, who win the affections and applause of all who appreciate true merit, earnest devotion, sacrifice and genius. They are among the famous, the beloved, and their schools are centres of unending influence.

And, continued Dr. Hoge, if it may be permitted to speak in this presence, and before him—I shall not mention his name—I passed such a school on my way to Chapel Hill. Nestling by the side of the railroad, along which I came, founded and maintained by an honored name is a school, one of your own, known far and near, that deserves to be enrolled with the famous school at Rugby, and stands and must remain only second to that in its influence on the age, and in the affections of all.

(I need not say that this allusion to the famous school at Mebaneville was greeted with "immense applause," and was grateful to every North Carolinian.)

Dr. Hoge next instanced the writers and authors—not merely those who discussed great questions, advanced human learning, and added to knowledge—but the creators of new thought; explorers in the realms of fancy, the great poets and masters of literature. Who can estimate the benefit of the poet's songs, and the love with which Shakspere or Scott is regarded.

The last in the enumeration was the philanthropist—those who give themselves directly to the amelioration of suffering. When we speak of them, we recall Howard and Wilberforce. But not of these I wish to think to-day. There are heroes and martyrs in humbler spheres who exact our heart's homage. Dr. Hoge then in some sketches of graphic power spoke of Mattie Stevenson, the heroine of the yellow fever pestilence; Dr. Chalmers and his ragged schools; a Brooklyn pastor and his work among the poor; the fireman's courage in rescuing the flame-imprisoned. And while some deed of daring would win eager attention and the thunder of the floor, more frequently the pathetic beauty and power of his descriptions would exact breathless heed from all, and the tribute of tears.

Why this instructive admiration of such heroism? why doth the heart of man pay unstinted homage to such exalted nobility? God hath made us so.

Let the human need of honor; the approval of conscience; the smile of heaven and the assurance of divine approbation be our incentive, our hope,—and the glory of service and the blessedness of being blessings to others lure us to this highest and noblest life.

No one can be more conscious than I how poor and unworthy a sketch of a grand speech this is. And now that I have attempted it—writing with many interruptions, without notes, and after an interval crowded with many other things engaging all my mind—I feel as if I should not send it as any account of what Dr. Hoge said. But a feeling that something was due not only to the occasion and the speaker, from the N. C. PRESBYTERIAN, but to so noble an effort itself, (conspicuously so, remembering the circumstances under which it was delivered,) and to the Presbyterian public, interested both in the University and in the triumph of so distinguished a Presbyterian divine—this has conquered my reluctance to send this.

You know very well it is impossible to report or even to describe Dr. Hoge's manner. He spoke without notes and apparently offhand, and most naturally. I have not even hinted, that here and there were tender, playful or humorous touches—passages of rich thought, of majesty and pathetic power, throughout the discourse that moved and thrilled. Indeed I can think of nothing to which to liken his oratory but nature. The wind sweeps along and at its coming leaves dance, and flowers twinkle. But it not only whispers to the violets and rustles through the boughs of sighing elms, but bows the mighty branches of the forest, and prostrates the giant oak. There was playfulness but there was likewise power. There was humor and also pathos. There was the roar of the ocean, and lordly waves rolled shoreward with mighty majesty. But the breakers were crested with fleeting though glorious beauty, there was a changing glint upon the glassy surface, there were foam and light and sparkle, and reflections of sunny skies and fleecy heavens. I heard many, and many both competent to judge and too just to bestow idle compliment, declare that they had never heard such an address within those walls.

After a brief pause, the Alumni Orator, Hon. Samuel F. Phillips, Solicitor General of the United States, was felicitously introduced by F. H. Busbee, Esq., of Raleigh. He read from manuscript. His action was quiet, his voice sonorous, his diction chaste and classic. The address was interesting to all but especially to the Alumni, and he treated very honestly and boldly of the past history of the University, of its successes and the cause and means thereto, and of the defects in previous management. His remarks seemed just and timely, and were full of valuable suggestion for the present. After this discussion he proceeded to a delineation of the character of those who had died during the year preceding. Omitting many with whom he was not closely associated, or whose service had been specially and recently laid before the public, he spoke of Hon. Hugh Waddell, Col. David M. Carter, Hon. Wm. Horne Battle, and Hon. Lewis Bond, of Tennessee.

The exercises at night—that is the public exercises—consisted of orations by representatives of the two literary societies — six speeches in all. They were creditable, (I thought some rather long) and specially to be commended for moral tone, earnestness and general research.

TO CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

Christian worker! pause, and listen;
Christ is seeking thee to-day,
Cease thy labors for one moment,
Solemn words He hath to say.

He is standing close beside thee.
And behold his face is sad,
As he gazeth on thy service—
Which methought would make Him glad.

Such unwearied self-devotion!
Such untiring, earnest zeal!
Such rich eloquence and pathos!
Burning words that wound to heal.

Still the Lord is sadly gazing,
Hark! He now doth question thee:
Listen well, His tones are gentle—
"Dost thou work from love to Me?

Ah! how often, fellow Christians,
Do we need this question still?
As we now from pure affection
Working out our Saviour's will?

If our secret spring of action
Were exposed to mortal view,
Would it bear examination?
Could it be pronounced quite true?

Does not conscience sometimes tell us
That the motive power is wrong,
Of what seems our fairest action,
Of what sounds our sweetest song?

Jesus, Saviour, oh forgive us,
As with shame we this confess;
May our love to Thee grow stronger,
May our love of self grow less.

Oh reveal Thyself so plainly,
That our one desire may be
Just to let ourselves be nothing,
Lost, in love of pleasing thee.

HISTORY OF MT. HOLLY CHURCH, ARK.

Mt. Holly Presbyterian church was organized May 14th, 1845, at the house of Mr. C. L. McRae, by the Rev. Aaron Williams, a domestic missionary, and was first known as the "McRae church." It was the first Presbyterian church organized in this county, and it was composed of fifteen members, embracing the families of Christopher McRae, C. L. McRae, E. W. Wright, S. D. Strain and Charles Chester in this neighborhood, and John R. Hampton near Eldorado and George Phipher in the eastern part of the county. At the organization E. W. Wright, Christopher McRae, C. L. McRae, S. D. Strain and Charles Chester were elected ruling elders of the "McRae church," afterwards named, and now known as "Mt. Holly church." But like the Israelites in the wilderness they were without any stated place of worship or any one to break to them the bread of life. About this time the Rev. W. S. Lacy settled in Eldorado, and was the first minister regularly employed by the congregation. He served as stated supply for two years and first preached in a small log cabin near Beach Creek. Here once each month this small band of worshippers assembled, and in a building almost as "unpretentious as God's first temple" offered to The Mightiest solemn thanks and supplications." Father Lacy still lives near Eldorado, bowed down with the weight of years and bodily infirmities, but with his mental faculties unimpaired, calmly awaits the summons that will call him to a brighter world to which he has so long pointed and led the way. As the centres of the congregation made it more convenient the place of meeting was changed until the winter of 1847, when the Rev. J. M. Hoge became stated supply and the congregation settled permanently at this place. For nine consecutive years he served this church with zeal, with constancy and devotion, and under his ministrations, most of the children of the church who had arrived at years of discretion were brought into its fold. Mr. Hoge was succeeded by the Rev. J. S. Barr who ministered to the congregation for two years and has since gone to his reward. In 1860 the Rev. M. A. Patterson succeeded Mr. Barr and labored among us for seven years. During his ministration the county was convulsed by civil strife, the effects of which were felt even in the sacred precincts of the Church. But we believe that Mt. Holly church was less torn by the contending passions it engendered, than many of her sister churches, and preserving the integrity of its organization during this fiery ordeal, came out still bearing aloft the banner of the cross and only anxious for the spread of the Redeemer's kingdom on earth. In the winter of 1868 the Rev. G. E. Eagleton settled in the bounds of this congregation, and was subsequently installed pastor of this church; which relation existed until January 1877. We note the period of his ministration as making the largest growth in membership—notably the year 1869 witnessing a remarkable revival, in which almost the whole youth of the Church declared "Let others do as they will, we will serve the Lord." The present pastor Rev. E. M. Munroe was installed pastor of this church in June, 1878.

During these thirty-six years of our history as a church we can recount mercies and blessings, trials and afflictions. Let us gratefully acknowledge our mercies and blessings as received from a kind Father's hands, and bowing submissively to our trials and afflictions let us realize that they too are but the chastenings of His love "who doeth all things well." During these eventful years many who started with us, parents children, friends whose names appear on our church book have gone from the Church militant, we trust to the Church triumphant, to join the "General Assembly and Church of the first-born, whose names are written in heaven. Of our elders who have gone to their reward, we would affectionately mention Christopher McRae, Samuel D. Strain, Edward W. Wright and Joseph Lewis. Others of us have been spared by God's providence and for purposes of his own will to see this new temple this day dedicated to his service. "It is by grace we are saved through faith, and that is the gift of God." Let us then this day, from this point in our existence, realizing our responsibilities, endeavor to lead holier and purer lives, and as individuals, and as a Church consecrate ourselves anew to the service of God.

HOME MAKERS.

It is a prevalent idea that woman, and she alone, must always be the home maker. This is her business, it is affirmed, while that of man necessarily lies outside. It is his part to provide the means of support, hers to supply a well-ordered, gladsome, refreshing, peaceful home. There is much truth in this view, but like many other truths, it has been run into the ground from the failure to perceive the other side. A home, like a person, has a dual existence; it has an outer and an inner life; it is formed by the circumstances that surround it and the characters that dwell within it. There is the house with its appurtenances, its opulence or poverty, its comforts or inconveniences, its loaded table or frugal board, its neatness and thrift, or disorder and waste. This is the outer life of the home.

To this both man and woman equally contribute. The division of labor, as usually maintained, is, upon the whole, quite equitable. His lies outside the home, hers within; but both are equally important, equally honorable, equally remunerative in the true sense of the word. Neither his earnings, nor her care, would alone make and keep the home, even in its outer life, while united they supply all its needs. Any shirking on either side is fatal. If the man, through self-indulgence of any kind, fail to do his part the woman will be overburdened, and the family comforts curtailed or destroyed. If, on the other hand, she, through love of pleasure or lack of discretion, neglect the wise ordering of her household, or slide into fashionable extravagance, the result will be equally disastrous. Whatever he the resources, or the style of living they adopt, it requires all the abilities and painstaking of both in their respective spheres, to maintain this external domestic life with prudence, comfort and consistency.

It is, however, in the inner life of the home that we must look for its purest and most permanent happiness; and here also do we find man and woman to be equally necessary and equally responsible. Not the house, however, richly furnished and judiciously arranged, not all the labor and thought of the man in earning and the woman in managing, however praiseworthy each may be, can alone secure a happy home. They are, indeed, indispensable but not sufficient. Not only must hand and brain construct the home, but heart must inspire it. There must be love, patience, self-sacrifice, sympathy, contentment, courage to bear, firmness to endure—in a word, all the qualities that go to make up character. If these be absent, so is happiness, however congenial and satisfactory may be the external home.

Just here a fatal mistake is frequently made. The busy man, wearied with toil and harassed, perhaps, by the events of the day, comes home to find rest and refreshment. He feels that his labors abroad should be recompensed by comfort, ease, and freedom from care at home. This is, perhaps, natural; but he forgets that the wife and mother, if earnest and conscientious, has had her trials and labors also, and is probably in need of rest and sympathy quite as much as he is. The home is, perhaps, so peaceful and cheery that he takes it for granted that its constant inmate must be so too, and thus his thoughts become centred in what his home ought to yield to him, rather than in what he shall do to make a happy home for the family. The truth is, that home happiness is not a harvest for which one part of the household is to labor that another part may enjoy. Each one must plant the seed, and water the ground, and destroy the weeds, and then each one will partake of the bounteous crop. As the husband and wife both contribute to form the external home, they must equally unite to fill it with the living presence of unselfish affection and thoughtful kindness. If either fail in this, if one be always striving to make the home, and the other only to enjoy it, disappointment is inevitable.—British Workman.

WHY GOD DID IT.

At a deaf and dumb asylum a visitor was particularly struck with the comeliness and intelligence of one of the young inmates. He asked him many questions, which were promptly and correctly answered. At length he ventured upon a most delicate inquiry: "Why did God make you deaf and dumb, and me to hear and speak?" The boy took the chalk and wrote, "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in Thy sight." Asylums in which such truths are taught are the supreme ornaments of any nation.—Herald.

A WELL SPENT LIFE.

A minister of the gospel was asked to visit a poor dying woman. The messenger being ignorant, could give no account of her state, except that she was a very good woman and very happy, and was now at the end of a well-spent life: therefore sure of going to heaven. The minister went, saw she was very ill, and after a few kindly inquiries about her bodily condition said:—"Well, I understand you are in a very peaceful state of mind, depending upon a well-spent life." The dying woman looked hard at him and said:

"Yes, I am in the enjoyment of peace. You are quite right; sweet peace, and that from a well-spent life. But it is the well-spent life of Jesus; not my doings, but His; not my merits, but His blood."

Yes. Only one man has spent a life that has met all the requirements of God's holy law, and on which we can rest before God. Yet it is also true that they who most absolutely rest thus through life on the merits of Christ alone, are those who, by his grace, so live as to have the testimony of the conscience to their sincere aim to "live holily, righteously, and godly in the world," and often, as in this case, to win the testimony of others to their "well-spent life."—British Messenger.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

The Pope has consecrated Dr. Woodlock Bishop of Ardagh in Ireland.

The Pope is once more endeavoring to open direct negotiations at Berlin touching the Ecclesiastical Law.

The Abbe Carrier, a chaplain in the army and a chevalier of the Legion of Honor, has joined Father Loyson (Pere Hyacynthe).

The Baptist church in Great Britain has in the last twenty-five years increased in numbers, from 85,000 to 276,000.

Bernadette, the peasant girl of Lourdes, who testified that the Virgin appeared to her in the Grotto to announce the doctrine of Immaculate Conception, has died in a convent at Nevers.

At Ipswich on Friday Mr. F. W. Wilson, proprietor of the East Anglian Daily Times, was presented with a cheque for £900, being the costs incurred in defending the action for libel arising out of the Akenham burial case. This amount was supplemented by the presentation of a very handsome timepiece and two bronze figures. The presentation was made by Rev. J. T. B. Hervey, rector of Shotley, near Ipswich, son of the Bishop of Bath and Wells.

The Hungarian Government has again provoked a conflict with the Protestant Church; it intends to place the Protestant schools under the strict control of the State. The real motive it is said is to Magyarise the Lutheran schools, which are mostly German, the far smaller number being Slavonian; but in order to conceal this tendency the law is extended to the Calvanistic Church. The Ministry has summoned the superintendents of the Protestant Churches, and begged them to give their opinion on the bill. All the superintendents have declared themselves incompetent to pass resolutions in the name of the Church, and they have proclaimed the bill to be an attempt to distrub the tranquility of the Protestant Church.

The old complaint against the French priests for refusing to chant the prayer for the Republic is becoming more frequent than ever. The prayer begins: Domine salvam fac Rempublicam (Lord save the Republic), and Leman, the Republican journal of Haute Savoie, declares that for a month now this prayer for the commonwealth has ceased to be used in any of the churches of the diocese. At Evian, last Sabbath, even at the bidding of the priest, who is evidently an exception in this respect, the choir refused to chant it. Indeed, there seems to be a determination among the clergy throughout France, not only concerning this prayer, but concerning many other things, to bid open defiance to the law of the land.

At Leamington Thomas Maycock, John Cartwright, William Preston, and Joseph Newcomb, members of the "Salvation Army," were summoned for having caused an obstruction in the streets. The defendants, with several others, were marching about the streets singing hymns. They stopped at Oxford street and delivered an address. The defendants asked why a paltry band could be allowed to stand and play in the streets while they were not allowed to give an address, although their object was to reclaim men from drunkenness and sin. The bench offered to dismiss the cases on payment of costs and on defendants promising not to offend again. Cartwright and Preston accepted the offer, but Maycock, who is the leader of the "army," said his conscience would not allow him to do so. He was fined and removed in custody. The "army" afterwards paraded the town singing hymns.

In accordance with the deliverance of the General Assembly, Divine service has been resumed in the St. Columba church in the Gaelic language. There has been no forenoon service conducted in the church since the 9th of February last, when the Rev. Mr. Lang, of the High church, was frustrated in his endeavor to fulfill the Presbyterial injunction of serving from the pulpit of that church the edict setting forth that the Presbytery had resolved that the Gaelic services should be discontinued. The finding of the Presbytery so very much exasperated the greater part of the congregation at that time, that when the Rev. Mr. Mackenzie was proceeding on the following Sabbath morning to conduct the service in English he was so fiercely attacked, after having uttered two or three words, that he was obliged to leave the pulpit amidst the execrations of his congregation. Since that time the keys of the church have mysteriously gone amissing on Sunday mornings.

The average income of each minister of the Irish Presbyterian Church during the year, excluding the sums received from the Sustentation and Commutation Funds, has been about £93; and when an almost equal sum is added from these general funds, it brings up the average income of all, except assistants, to £184. And if the same number of names be erected next year as have risen this year two out of every three congregations of the Church will have a residence provided for their ministers. The average income of each congregation, not including what the ministers receive from the Commutation or Sustentation Funds, is £273. The past year has been a dark one in the world of business, yet the income of the Church is only £575 less than last year, and amounts to £154,377. The report was adopted, as were also those on the State of Religion and Temperance.

The Chaplain of the Imperial family, M. Baner, preached lately a sermon in the Cathedral of Berlin, before the Emperor and the Imperial family, in which he spoke of the present state of morality, or rather immorality, in Prussia, in very strong terms. He said: "Affection, faith, and obedience to the Word of God are unknown in this country, in this our great German Fatherland, which formerly was justly called the home of the faith. On the contrary, it really seems as if it were the father of all lies who now is worshipped in Prussia. What formerly was considered generous and noble is now looked upon with contempt; and theft and swindling are called by the euphonic name 'business.' Marriages are conducted without the blessing of the Church, concluded 'on trial,' to be broken if not found to answer. We still have a Sunday, but it is only a Sunday in name, as the people work during church hours and spend the afternoon and evening in rioting in the public-houses and music-halls; while the upper classes rush to the races, preferring to hear the panting of the tortured horses to hearing the Word of God, which is ridiculed in the press and turned into blasphemy in the popular assemblies; the servants of God are insulted daily."

Kodnnda Row, a young Brahmin, at Colar, in India, has lately become a Christian. He has been for more than a year a master in Miss Anstey's Orphanage. His family reside in Colar, and as he is the first Brahmin convert to Christianity there, the event has occassioned great excitement. This young man had been constantly present when the orphans were being instructed from the Word of God, and after being much exercised in mind for some time, at last desired to confess Christ openly. The baptism took place on March 16th. There was a large concourse of spectators, including the father of Kodundh Row, who had not been apprised of his son's decision, but seemed to suspect that he had a leaning towards the Christian faith. The openly manifested grief of the father and other relatives was terrible, and they made strenuous efforts to secure possession of the young convert. With the help of the authorities, however, order was preserved, and a threatened attack on the mission premises was averted by an interview between Kodnnda Row and his father, accompanied by a female relative and an influential Brahmin. The young man was entreated to return to the faith he had abjured, but firmly resisted all the appeals made to him. His friends departed at last, saying that they would go and perform his funeral ceremonial. The Brahmins assembled in council, and ordered that no Brahmin should serve in connection with the Orphanage, but, notwithstanding this, several of them have continued to do so.

REBUILDING JERUSALEM.—This scheme seems to be now seriously contemplated. Sir Moses Montefiore and the Jews of the old school cast their longing eyes towards the ancient city of their solemnities. Not only has the great Jewish baronet repeatedly journeyed to Palestine, that he might improve the condition of the resident Jews, on whom he has lavished large sums, but he is now working a way for the re-establishment of the Jews at Jerusalem, and with that view has re-commenced the building of that city. He has recently given orders to prepare for cultivation all the land in the front of the Judah Torah houses in Jerusalem. The rocks will be removed, terraces built all along, as it used to be in the time of King Solomon; and divided into twenty-two partitions, so that every inmate of the Torah houses may cultivate the necessary vegetables, &c., for himself and family. Sir Moses has also caused a very large cistern to be constructed in the centre of the field, which will secure a full supply of water for all of them. There will be a beautiful veranda in the front of the houses, so as to protect the inmates from the glare and light of a burning sun. The veranda was sent direct from London. He has also had a new entrance made in the centre of the boundary wall, built a lodge for a watchman, and had a large bell affixed to one of the houses, to give the alarm in case of emergency.

The Jews in Jerusalem, on the whole, are very poor, and just now are suffering great trials and privations; but many of them are beginning to lift up their heads, believing that their redemption draweth nigh.

HOW TO KNOW GOD.

Some years ago a Frenchman, who, like many of his countrymen, had won a high rank among men of science, yet who denied the God who is the Author of all science, was crossing the Great Sahara in company with an Arab guide. He noticed with a sneer that at certain times his guide, whatever obstacles might arise, put them all aside, and, kneeling on the burning sand, called on his God.

Day after day passed, and still the Arab never failed, till at last one evening the philosopher, when he rose from his knees, asked him with a contemptuous smile, "How do you know there is a God?" The guide fixed his eyes on the scoffer for a moment in wonder, and then said, solemnly, "How do I know there is a God? How did I know that a man, and not a camel, passed my hut last night in the darkness? Was it not by the print of his foot in the sand? Even so," and he pointed to the sun, whose last rays were flashing over the lonely desert, "that footprint is not that of a man."

COMMENTARIES AND THE BIBLE.

In the Southern Presbyterian Review for April, 1876, an elaborate and well considered article appeared on "The Professional Study of the Bible." Its author is understood to be Rev. B. M. Smith, D. D. LL. D., the learned Professor of Oriental Literature in Union Theological Seminary, Virginia. After discussing the necessity of thorough scholarship in the Greek and Hebrew for the official expounder of God's Word, and the best methods for attaining creditable, comfortable and useful skill in these ancient tongues, the distinguished essayest considers the proper use of commentaries and their value.

We will call attention to some of the practical thoughts on the subject. No commentary should be to the student the embodiment of perfect wisdom. None should be his Master. Many are unsound in theology, though very learned in textual criticism. Many, especially German commentaries and Sclavish translations thereof, are storehouses of philology, grammar and archæology, but foul with rationalism and infidelity, and full of doubts or denials as to the canon, inspiration and portions of accepted books. Others, sound in Westminster theology, that is true to the Bible, have small merit as critical expositors. A good commentary possesses both critical acumen and healthy orthodoxy. Commentaries should be used as friends to correct or confirm the diligent student in his own researches, and to suggest and assist in solving questions and difficulties which may escape the investigator.

Every student should have the best commentaries, and as many as he can judiciously buy. But he must sedulously prepare himself by faithful study to use these scholarly helps aright. Calvin—now translated into English—is warmly commended by Dr. Smith as facile princeps among commentators. Most old writers need apologies for deficiencies due to the disadvantages of their age and surroundings. They are great with much discount. Calvin needs no "apologetic eulogy," for "he not merely exceeded his predecessors in learning, zeal, charity, activity and successful energy, but he has excelled posterity" as an expositor of God's Word. Luther translated, Calvin expounded. He is entitled to glory in many other respects—as pastor, teacher, reformer and statesman—for the world is enjoying privileges and liberties of which he is the father. Ardent in piety, eloquent in speech, inflexible in his integrity, powerful in personal influence and superhuman almost in wonderful and ceaseless labors, there was none like him in his day, there is none like him to-day. He brought from his study the fruits of immense labor, wide and profound acquaintance with ponderous ancient tomes—into which many great scholars merely dip, and many know better by repute than by personal perusal—and consecrated all to illustrating Divine Revelation. With no parrot-like proficiency in Hebrew, or obsequious masoretic knowledge, and no parade of his vast literary wealth, but with steadfast communion with God, "he grasped with extraordinary power the sense of Scripture, imbued his own language with the spirit of the writers of Holy Writ—and those perused not merely in a version—fully appreciated the value of idiom and usage without being a slave to either, was an etymologist without being a trifler, and a critic without being a pedant." He never approaches the Word of God with the pygmean implements of trifling verbal criticism, but he so enters into the writer's scope and the spirit of the text, that many of his expositions resemble paraphases. This whole discussion of Calvin's merits as a commentator is commended to all who have the copy of the Review. He is a model, though not perfect. Yet "among uninspired men he stands the peerless expounder, advocate and propagator."

Now, while all understand the value of these tools to the professional workman and to every Christian, this difficulty arises: Amid the numerous expositors, all advertised as peerless (!), and with limited ability to buy, which will be best for me to possess? Is there any way by which I can arrive at the peculiar merits and the orthodoxy of each author? It would be an inestimable boon to have, not a book, but a brief and clear statement from a competent, practical and theologically sound scholar, as to the soundest and best critical apparatus for each book of the Bible, and for the whole Bible. Dr. Smith has kindly consented to supplement the essay—on which we have already drawn—by several articles in the PRESBYTERIAN, in which he will give detailed, practical information to guide every student in selecting commentaries according to his necessities and desires. We invite attention to his articles, and are sure they will prove most valuable indicators.

THE COLLECTION FOR THE INVALID FUND.

We published last week the call of our secretaries for this collection on the first Sabbath in July, or as soon thereafter as practicable. No collection ordered by our Church appeals more directly or more strongly to the instincts of an enlightened humanity, not to speak of the sense of Christian duty, than this. Let us think of it calmly, and act promptly, and with that liberality which the case merits. The fund is for the aid of those whose lives are worn out in the service of Christ, or those who are left dependent upon the beneficence of the Church.

We will not multiply words. Shall those suffer who, having given their lives to Christ, in infirm old age are without the necessaries of life? Few, very few, ministers of the Gospel can, in the very nature of the case, leave at their death aught to secure their widows and orphans from indigence. It were a very shame to their brethren, more favored with God's material bounty, to withhold help from them. The call is from Christ himself. He who ministers to His disciples minister unto Him.

The appeal is urgent. Over one hundred families are dependent upon this aid for the necessaries of life. More than one-fourth of these are families of ministers laid aside from their work by age and infirmity, and the rest are families of deceased ministers.

For several years past the fund has been insufficient to meet the just demands upon it. Nearly twice as much as was raised last year is imperatively needed.

Let every church give, and give with unusual liberality.

The Missionary gives these as instances of the need which it is sought to relieve:

"An aged and infirm minister, already a beneficiary of the Invalid Fund, has made a touching appeal to the Presbyterial Committee for increased aid. The circumstances stated are, in short, as follows: He is now 74 years old, having preached nearly fifty years; he is, and has been for four or five years, totally unable to do anything for his own support; all his family are dead except two sons; the only one of them who has been, in years, able to support him, and with whom he lives, has been reduced to great straits for the necessaries of life by the failure of his crops for three successive years and is now threatened with consumption."

The chairman of another Presbyterial Committee writes:

"I inclose an application just received from —— in behalf of Mrs. ——, widow of the late Rev. ——, who died recently at ——. I feel that we have taxed the Invalid Fund heavily during the past year—I present this application with diffidence. Bro. —— was a good servant of the Lord and his Church while he lived, and went out of the world, literally, as naked as he came into it. As to the need of aid on the part of Mrs. —— I suppose there can be no doubt, and apparently the appropriation she asks will secure to her a home and relieve her of the necessity of asking for further aid. I am sure the committee will do what lies in their power in this case."

From still another Presbytery we receive the following:

"As chairman of the Committee of Domestic Missions for the Presbytery of —— I make application through you for aid to the amount of one hundred dollars, for Rev. — — —, from the Invalid Fund. This brother is now old, and is afflicted with a painful disease which incapacitates him for work. He is poor and needs the help of the Church. Please do what you can for him."

These are but samples of letters we are constantly receiving and we turn to God's people for the means to supply the wants so tenderly portrayed. Let the churches be informed of these cases and that there are over one hundred of the same kind, and it is certain that they will not be backward in bestowing their gifts with a liberal hand.

HOME MISSIONS.

We regard the change of name of that cause of our Church which provides aid for feeble churches in supporting their ministers, or in building houses of worship—we regard the change of name of this cause from "Sustentation" to "Home Missions," as not the least of the many good acts of the late General Assembly. While the cause is the same the title substituted more aptly indicates it.

Now we propose that those who know of needy cases, and of worthy cases, shall use the religious papers to give publicity to the facts. What the people who are called upon to contribute need, to induce liberality, is not so much abstract appeals to their sense of duty, as facts. Like Gradgrind what they want is facts! facts! facts!

Let the people know the circumstances of individual cases; let them know the pressure of the need and the good results which will accrue from help accorded; let them know that those who are to be helped are doing their utmost to help themselves; keep back nothing and do all this without unnecessary words. State cases pointedly and concisely yet fully. It is not necessary in every case to mention names though this is desirable when it can be done. No good can come from ignoring the fact that every one likes to know where and how, as far as may be, the money he contributes is spent. It is hard to let a dollar go, and when it leaves him the average man wants to know where it is gone, that he may follow it as far as he can.

We mean nothing more than to state in a homely way, a principle of human nature, which must be recognized if we would secure liberality towards our Home Missions. Our Foreign Missions, though assuredly not supported as they should be, owe in great measure the success they have attained to the letters of Missionaries giving information as to their plans, their work and their success.

We give here as appropriately following what has been written, the following from a minister in Western Texas to our committee:

Our membership does not ask help without first trying to help themselves. We have only twelve male members and none of them are wealthy, and yet more than seven hundred dollars has been already raised and expended on our building.

The interests that centre in our church here, are important to the cause of Presbyterianism in West Texas.

Ours may be justly considered the out-post of Presbyterianism. We are really on the Texas frontier, and we are the only organized Southern Presbyterian church within a radius of more than two hundred miles. The surrounding country is such as to attract the attention of many who are seeking homes in the far West, and the emigrant train is an almost daily spectacle in our town. Presbyterians are coming out here as well as others, and we want to gather them in as they come and have a good, comfortable house of worship in which to welcome them on the Sabbath. Our prospects are not altogether hopeless. One year ago our little organization numbered fifteen members, one died during the year and we now have thirty (sixteen added during the year.) Congregations are increasing in size and the general religious interest seems to be gradually growing. I know that there are other fields more important than mine, but I feel that the importance of this field can hardly be over-rated. Never have I seen a people more in need of a pure Gospel. If you never were in a frontier country you could scarcely conceive of the ridiculous, foolish harangues delivered under the name of sermons by the preachers who flourish here; the ignorant are misled, and the intelligent, unconverted persons are induced to scoff and ridicule. Christians are fed on chaff or worse, and all need and many are hungering for the true Bread of Life. I tell you these things in order to give some idea of our condition and surroundings, that you may judge of the importance of our field.

We have just learned of the death of Mrs. M. B. Isler, the aged mother of Rev. S. B. Isler. We extend our sympathies to the bereaved brother.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

Major Duncan J. Devane, an eminent lawyer of Wilmington, was chosen by the Alumni Association of Davidson College as their orator for 1880. Major Devane is an alumnus of the class of 1857—the first honor man, we believe, in his class, at any rate the valedictorian. His career has been observed with satisfaction and pride by the tender mother, whose sons now invite him back to honor her annual festival, and to bring some offering of his talents and accomplishments to her altar. It is a graceful and deserved tribute from the Alumni, and one which we are sure the Major and his host of friends appreciate.

The Interior says: A Presbyterian who will balk and kick the dash-board, because he cannot have everything exactly his own way, had better be unhitched and traded off to the Baptists. His field of usefulness in the Presbyterian Church is so limited that he can not stand upon it without overhanging the boundary lines on all sides. Such a spirit, if generally indulged, would disintegrate and destroy the entire efficiency of the denomination.

Which is well enough, though in the trade we see no special reason why the Baptists should be selected. Wouldn't the Tankers do as well?

Peace Institute takes a new departure so far as North Carolina is concerned, in organizing a culinary department of the school. Whether to commend this move or not depends on what our girls are taught to cook. Miss Corson has reduced this matter to a science, made cooking indeed a branch of political economy by her teachings direct and through her publications, and if Peace teaches her pupils to get up a "dinner for fifteen cents" we shall have duly to applaud. To cook a beefsteak to a savory turn, or to get up a biscuit in that peculiarly short style that makes them not long for the outside world, is worthy to be ranked among the arts contributive to human happiness; but then there are crisps, and crulls, and frothe, and fripperies which may carry with them an endless train of ills, and the temptation lies strongly in the direction of their manufacture.

The welfare of nations and the happiness of individuals depend in large measure upon the character of the laws by which they are governed, and the nature of the laws depends upon the dispositions and moral affections of those who make the law-makers. But tempers and other mental and moral characteristics are largely manifestations of the state of health of individuals, and this health is promoted or deranged by culinary operations, and so, we come at last to our conclusion, that the welfare of a nation, and the happiness of individuals composing it, is to a great extent determined by its cooks.

We shall watch the course of the cooking department of Peace Institute with special interest.

We have given our space largely to the commencements. Our correspondent has taken us by his pen to the very doors, we have heard the echo of the applause, and in the distance the band—we have almost seen the pageantry he has described. It is well for us to know these things. These names may yet become famous. Some of them have already in days past been made so. It is gratifying to think that the names hitherto honored are still so worthily worn. At Davidson College the honored men were the sons of men known, loved and honored: Rev. Dr. Harding, of Charlotte; Rev. Dr. Smith, of Greensboro; Rev. Dr. Reid, of S. C.; Col. Little, of Anson; Col. Fraser, of Sumter, S. C.; Col. McIntosh, of Taylorsville; Judge Osborne, of Charlotte; Rev. Dr. Brackett, of Charleston; Gen. D. H. Hill and others, not perhaps so widely known but equally loved and honored as far as known.

Our Presbyterian people feel proud of these names, and thankful that they are so borne in the second and in the third generation. Such is the promise and such is the fruit.

And therefore we have been so generous of space. Commencements come but once a year. And many of our readers will find here their only, or perhaps their most satisfactory account of these literary festivals. And especially do we feel that we should honor our own institution, and report its progress and success, and this not only because our journal is a newspaper, but because it is the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, the paper for Presbyterians.

In the French Chamber of Deputies, M. Jules Ferry, Minister of Public Instruction, made a long speech defending the secular education bill. He denied to Jesuits the right to call themselves Frenchmen, and declared that teaching by religious confraternity constituted the real peril to civil society.

This news comes by telegraph. It is well enough for us, however, to provide against future disappointment by remembering that the change now working in France is rather Anti-Romanistic than directly to evangelical Protestantism. Many most bitter against Romanism have no regard for pure Christianity, but incline rather to Rationalism. Nevertheless, the breaking loose from the thraldom of Romish superstitution opens the way for the entrance of a pure Gospel, and on the whole the prospect is more hopeful. In Germany scepticism is fearfully prevalent. A sermon preached by the Chaplain of the Imperial family before the Emperor gives a deplorable picture of the existing state of affairs. A summary of this sermon will be found in the "Religious Intelligence" on our first page.

The Christian Intelligence says on this subject: The Berlin correspondents of English journals add: "The German clerical newspapers, Protestant as well as Catholic, are writing in a like strain." Berlin, with a population of a million, has only one hundred and ten ministers of religion, both Protestant and Roman Catholic, and the average attendance at each place of worship is below one hundred. House to house inquiries show that in the same city "in less than one house out of eighty is there any regular use or even possession of the Bible." The state of religion and morals in the country is a cause of the greatest grief and anxiety to many of the best citizens. This social deterioration and increase of crime does not come from ignorance. Nor does the prevalence of immorality arise from a lack of artistic and æsthetic culture. Nor is intemperance the cause. The one chief reason for the degeneration of a once noble people is the substitution of scepticism for faith in the Scriptures.

NEWS NOTES.

Seven persons were received by the session upon examiation, into the communion of the First Presbyterian church at Wilmington, N. C., on Thursday last. One other, an invalid lady, had been received a week or two previously.

On every Sabbath afternoon at 4:30 o'clock religious services are held in the open air at Dudley's Grove near Wilmington. We learn that many persons attend who probably would not hear preaching elsewhere. The meetings are conducted in an orderly manner and we trust will continue to be so conducted. All persons are invited to attend these meetings. They are entirely non-sectarian.

The Wilmington (N. C.) Star says:

"The great religious awakening now going on at the Front street Methodist church has resulted so far in great good to the community. Up to this time there have been about one hundred and twenty-five conversions. On last Sabbath fifteen more members were added to the church, embracing those from youth to old age. The revival seems to increase in interest. Rev. Mr. Yates began the meetings about the 1st of June, and was meeting with considerable success, when, after eight or ten days, Rev. Mr. McPherson, of the Society of Friends, came in to help. He was accompanied by his wife, who, while not a preacher, seems to be very efficient in leading the wayward to the path of life."

INSTALLATION AT LITTLETON, N. C.

In accordance with the order of Orange Presbytery, Rev. J. W. Primrose was installed pastor of the Littleton church on last Sunday. Six years ago there was scarcely any prospect of building up a church at this place. There were a few scattered Presbyterians in the vicinity, but not one Presbyterian family could be found in the town. Mr. Primrose, our evangelist, began preaching to a handful of people under a carpenter shed. After awhile he was promoted, and conducted services in the upper room of a store-house. Two years ago a Presbyterian church was organized—and now we have a neat church building and a membership of seventeen. There was a very large attendance at the installation services, and much interest is manifested by the community in the growth of Presbyterianism.

We call particular attention to the fact that this church is the fruit of evangelistic effort. The success which has crowned the efforts of our evangelist proves what might be done, if we should pursue a more aggressive policy. Our whole church needs to be aroused on the subject of Home Missions.

PENITENTIARY SABBATH SCHOOLS.

The Penitentiary Sabbath school in Raleigh, N. C., deserves notice. We have not space for the entire account of its establishment and growth as given by a correspondent of the Raleigh News, but we summarize it. The Sabbath school is conducted under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association, and has been in operation four years. Last Sabbath was an anniversary. A faithful few have kept to the work despite all discouragements. Attendance is voluntary, but nearly every one of the convicts attend.

The Architect and Warden of the penitentiary, Col. W. J. Hicks, in his last report to the Directors and the Legislature, mentions the labors of the Sabbath school workers with high commendation. Hon. B. F. Moore donated a very handsome cabinet organ for the use of the Sunday school and chapel. The General Assembly of North Carolina tendered the thanks of that body to those who had sacrificed their personal comfort and energetically conducted this Sabbath school, and they appropriated fifty dollars to purchase Bibles and other religious books for the school. The teachers now engaged are: A. M. McPheeters, superintendent; S. W. Whiting, assistant superintendent; A. D. Taylor, S. D. Wait, W. Blake, John T. Pullen, John M. Sherwood, P. C. Ennis, teachers.

MT. HOLLY CHURCH DEDICATION.

EDITOR N. C. PRESBYTERIAN—Dear Sir: The people of Mt. Holly, Ark., will no longer worship in the Academy where they have for a number of years been worshiping, for our new church building has recently been completed. The "finishing off" parts, such as hanging the blinds, putting down the matting, hanging chandeliers, arranging organ and sofa, and cushion for the Bible, &c., were accomplished just a day or two previous to the dedication, the ladies, of course, lending a helping hand in these crowning acts. The church is nearer the centre of the congregation than our former place of worship, being situated in a beautiful and pleasant oak grove with good wells of water convenient. Visitors all seem to be well pleased with our new church, and indeed we now have one of the handsomest, neatest and most comfortable church buildings in this section of country.

Our new church was dedicated to the worship of God on last Sabbath (June 15th). The sermon was preached by the Rev. W. T. Howison, of Hope, Ark. Text: John iv:24. "God is a Spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in Spirit and in truth." The preacher discussed three propositions from this text. 1st, "God is a Spirit," 2nd, "God must be worshipped," 3rd "God must be worshipped sincerely as a spirit." The sermon was very instructive and interesting and was highly appreciated by a large audience. Just before the sermon a brief history of the church from its organization to the present was read by the pastor of the church. Just after the sermon Solomon's prayer at the dedication of the First Temple (I Kings viii: 12–20,) was read by the Rev. M. A. Patterson, the congregation standing. The dedication prayer was then offered by the Rev. W. T. Howison. Thus "everything was done decently and in order." Yours, &c.,

E. M. MUNROE.

Rev. J. B. Morton writes to the Christian Observer: "Our church at Elberton was dedicated last Sabbath (the 9th ult.) Rev. T. P. Cleveland preached an appropriate and impressive sermon to a large and appreciative audience; he formerly ministered to this people, and is much beloved by them. Our house of worship is neat and commodious. It has been in process of erection for some time, being delayed for the lack of funds to complete it.

COMMENCEMENT AT DAVIDSON COLLEGE.

After the manner of novelists I begin: It was 8 o'clock, one threatening morning in June, that a party of travelers arrived in the city of Charlotte. They had been traveling all night and were tired and dusty. The unpleasant news was just certified that there would be no outgoing train to Davidson College till 9 p. m. You may be sure that these were not only Trustees, but then and there was held a meeting of the Bored; an improvised connection was made, and in a little more than four hours a carriage and a jersey emptied their five passengers each in the village known as Davidson College.

"Will it rain?" the question asked more than once by more than one during those days of pleasure, was answered from the clouds upon us as we went at a rattling pace along "the old plank," by farms and homes strangely familiar and strangely unfamiliar. For in my day the railroad had not introduced its innovations and changed so much the course of roads and the aspect of the landscape. And in that day, moreover, the no fence law was unknown. However, that ride did us all good.

It was pleasant to note improvement, not only along the road but at Davidson College. New and comfortable houses and the garniture of fresh paint greeted the eye. But the improvement was most marked and grateful in the college grounds and buildings. The "new building," as it is still called though nearly of age, has yet the bare look that is not pleasing to taste, and stands, as one of the enterprising papers that reported Commencement proceedings says, "in doric majesty and simplicity." It sorely needs the companionship of massive and venerable oaks and their sheltering protection. But the trees are coming, bravely, beautifully, and it will not be many years before the broad and spacious campus will be one of the handsomest lawns to be seen. The more unfrequented parts are well set in clover, deep and luxuriant, "where the bee sucks," and the campus lying between and about the halls, revels in softest blue-grass richly shaded, and is prettily laid off in plats and terraces. About the old chapel it is gravelly and bare, but some attention would soon make that neglected but most traversed section of the campus very pretty. Fine trees are already there.

It looks a little odd, yet it is doubtless best, to have the old and the new so interfused, to note the growth, the expansion, from the contracted views and limited resources of early days. The boys of my time will not forget old "Scotland," still one of the most popular blocks on the campus, but with another name, while "Danville" looks as smart and fresh as if it had never held courts, bred callithumps, or echoed to the devout songs of a college prayer-meeting, twenty years ago. But the new building is so massive and grand in its proportions, all else seems dwarfed, and even the halls seem small. The halls, let me tell the public so interested in all that pertains to Davidson College, are prettier than ever. One can find but few daintier rooms (I have seen none) than the Phi Hall. So cool, airy and inviting in June days. But if I were a Eve, doubtless that hall would seem even lovelier, with its warm colors, rich frescoes, and comfortable furniture. There is still friendly emulation, but the warmest and best of feeling between the two.

Let me tell about Commencement. There was quite a full meeting of the Board of Trustees. They are a body of true, earnest men, deeply interested in the good of the College, and continually devising means for its increased usefulness. While much of the endowment was destroyed or reduced by the war, and the income from all sources just sufficient thoroughly to man the institution, they authorized generous offers in tuition to ministers' sons of every denomination, and are considering if it is practicable to reduce the already very moderate expense of a year at college. You may be sure that all that can be done will be for the best interest of Davidson and its extended influence. The same executive committee was elected for the next year, with the exception that in the place of Rev. John Douglas, who asked specially to be excused from the service, Colonel Thomas M. Holt was put on the committee, a wise choice.

Very pleasant reunions were held in the society halls on Tuesday evening, professedly secret, yet enough is known of them to say that they are greatly enjoyed, not only by the students and regular members but by the invited guests.

Wednesday, Commencement commences. The handsome and graceful young gentlemen chosen by their fellows as marshals, in all the glory of rich and showy regalia, arrayed the line of march, from the old Chapel to Chambers' Hall. The Salisbury Band was in attendance. I do not know whether it is the best band in the State, but I judge it may be—certainly the best I have heard for many a long day, and their music on the campus, in the hall, at night or by day, left nothing in that line to be desired.

The orator of the day was Col. Duncan K. McRae of Wilmington. After prayer by Rev. Dr. Scott, formerly president of Washington College, Pennsylvania, Rev. Dr. Hepburn introduced Colonel McRae. Known as he is to you in Wilmington and throughout his native State, I need not attempt any description. His address was on "Genius and Talent," written yet delivered with great freedom and power, and I could not but think interspersed here and there with fresh, vigorous, impromptu additions. It was understood at the reporter's table that he did not wish the lecture reported. Fortunate for us—for we could only listen, entranced. His manner was nervous, slightly dramatic, impressive; his voice, though not full, was clear, incisive, ringing; his appearance dignified and distinguished; his matter—well, adjectives fail. There were fine thought, high culture, elegant scholarship, wide research. But even these did not constitute the ravishing charm of his eloquence, which, to me, lay in the perfect finish of his style—at times ornate, flowing, easy; again terse, abrupt, even jagged—always the very garb for the idea presented. As I listened I thought of marshalled troops, gleaming arms, flying pennons, all with precision, and power, and beauty, sweeping the field. Or else the sentences seemed like a costly array of jewels: cut, polished, glistening. There was oft times the sharp angle of a diamond, also its piercing blaze, while anon the soft lustre of rare pearls ravished the soul. I speak thus of the style. I can give you no idea of it without elaborate citation. A generous use of wide reading and profound and elegant study adorned the address throughout. The applause was most hearty and most appreciative.

The afternoon was given to the Alumni. It is an omen of good that they are more and more interested in the annual reunions, and are called on to contribute to the general joy of commencements. After a brief business session the oration was delivered in Chambers' Hall (the new chapel) before a fine audience, by Anthony White, Esq., of Sumter, S. C. After a graceful introduction, in which an eloquent tribute was paid to the "martyrs of a fallen cause," who had gone forth from these halls at the call of country and duty, Mr. White discussed the claims of intellectual culture in promoting political welfare and social happiness, with special reference to the duties of the alumni of Davidson College in this respect, and the advantages of moral and mental culture the institution afforded. His manner was pleasing, his style finished, and revealed a wide acquaintance with the best English authors. Mr. White is not a professional man, and hence unused to public speaking, being engaged in farming and business, but his address showed that he kept pace with the literature of the day, and both in thought and expression it reflected credit on the author and the occasion.

The evening was devoted to the representatives of the two societies—the contestants for the Fowle medal in oratory. The orators and their themes were:

A. Walker White, Concord, N. C.—"Foundation of the University of Leyden."

C. Richmond Harding, Charlotte, N. C.—"William the Silent."

W. B. Jennings, Bennettsville, S. C.—"The Captive of the Bastille."

J. F. McKinnon, Monticello, Fla.—"Ottoman Rule in Europe."

J. Z. Dunlap, Cedar Shoals, S. C.—"The Legal Profession."

The speeches were all good—thoughtful, earnest, manly. They shewed study and research, and the style was excellent, entirely free from bombast, spread-eagleism and sophomoric eloquence. The themes and the treatment deserve commendation. I may mention as specially praise-worthy the style of Mr. Harding's—the manner of Mr. Dunlap's delivery, and the elocution of Mr. Jennings'.

After the speeches, the medals given by the Literary Societies were awarded by Maj. J. A. Leland of Sumter, S. C., formerly a Professor in Davidson College. Yes, the same "old Col." of ante-bellum days, with the same commanding avoirdupois. He has grown grayer it is true, and the hard hand of war, and of the days since, worse than war—of imprisonment without crime, and reproach without disgrace, has born heavily upon him. But there are still the fire and fervor of old times. His remarks in delivering the prizes were largely filled with personal reminiscences, and hints of Ku Klux persecutions, mingled with humor and good wishes.

The recipients were: (note the honored names:) Philanthropic Society: Declaimer's Medal, H. W. Beall, Lenoir, N. C.; Essayists: D. H. Hill, Jr., Charlotte, N. C.; Debater's: James W. Osborne, Charlotte, N. C.

Enmenean Society: Declaimer's Medal, A. White, Jr., Sumter, S. C.; Orator's: J. Z. Dunlap, Cedar Shoals, S. C.; Debater's: B. P. Reid, Reidsville, S. C.

Later in the evening in the same hall, some personal friends in the Philanthropic Society presented through your correspondent a very handsome medal as a mark of warm appreciation to J. Allison Hodges of Little River Academy—the worthy son of our friend and fellow presbyter, J. P. Hodges, of Bluff church.

Thursday is the day of days, you know. So it seemed at any rate, the neighbor's thought. Train loads from Charlotte and Statesville, wagon and carriage loads from the country adjacent, filled the little town "plumb full" as a Trustee told me, and the mammoth hall could not hold all. The attentive marshals in their silken attire and with their magical wands were kept busy packing away the people. It was a gay and brilliant scene. Beauty, intelligence, accomplishment and culture, added their charms to this gala day and it was an inspiriting sight to gaze on the eager multitude—the array of loveliness and worth that graced Commencement Day.

The exercises were opened with prayer—striking, reverent and appropriate—by Rev. Dr. Miller, of Charlotte, N. C.

The Orator's were as follows:

The Salutatory: B. Palmer Reid, Reidsville, S. C.; Pleasure after Pain: Arthur P. Brown, Liberty Hill, S. C.; The Jews in the Middle Ages: Albert G. Buckner, French Broad, N. C.; General Lee as an Educator: James A. Wilson, Yorkville, S. C.; The American Citizen: James A. Hodges, Little River Academy, N. C.; The Mediæval Knight; James W. Osborne, Charlotte, N. C.; The Philosophical Oration: (Capitol and Labor:) Daniel A McGregor, Wadesboro, N. C.; The Valedictory: Franklin P. Ramsay, Troy, Ala.

The Valedictory indicates the first position in the class, the Salutatory the second, the Philosophical Oration the third. Of these speeches, as of those delivered the night before, I can say, all were good—excellent in matter and in manner; in manner of expression and of delivery. They were characterized by manliness, good sense, good taste, force and decided oratorical culture and power. The moral tone was exalted and pure, the religious character decided. I am sure the College, the Faculty and the Trustees were proud of the sons who went forth—and the world will hear their names some day. The Salutatory was delivered in English (good for that), and after a few words of graceful welcome, Mr. Reid discussed "The Teacher," admirably well. I shall not detail the points or the success of each speech. Messrs. Hodges and Osborne did exceptionally well, and the Valedictory addresses were effective and affecting. Mr. Ramsay discussed with decided power The Law of Growth, and but for a little flavor of sermonic style, it was a very fine discourse.

Here a remark by the way. As an innovation has been introduced in making the address of welcome in English, (instead of an unknown tongue), and only a few words of salutation, why not either abolish the farewelling, or make it brief, and, if possible, cold. No one likes to feel bad and yet one does feel most wretched in bidding every body good-bye in so public and feeling a manner. "And so do his sisters and his cousins, &c." Besides tears are not becoming to most people—men especially,—and no one likes to see the ladies with eyes red with weeping, weeping over College boys! I am in fun you know, but there's a thought somewhere along here.

Before the Vale was uttered the prizes awarded for excellence in various departments of study were delivered by Judge Fowle in an address of marked appropriateness, beauty and power.

The Wiley Medal (Mathematics,) was awarded to Henry L. Smith, of Greensboro, N. C.; The Rockwell Prize (Latin,) to A. C. McIntosh, Taylorsville, N. C.; The Holt Medal (Greek) to J. Porter Paisley, Guilford county, N. C.; The Fowle Medal (Oratory) to J. Z. Dunlap, Cedar Shoals, S. C.

It is but just to the successful knights, and to the institution to state how these awards are given. Dr. Hepburn explained to the audience as follows: The young men stand written examinations on Latin, Greek and Mathematics. The papers signed with fictitious names, are sent to professors in other institutions, or to distinguished scholars elsewhere and these without possibility of bias, decide who are entitled to preference. The Latin papers were sent to the Professor in Erskine College, the Greek papers to the Professor in the Johns Hopkins University, the Mathematics papers to the Professors in Washington and Lee University. Parts of letters from these gentlemen were made public. The various papers were commended in high terms, and the judges expressed surprise in every case at their excellence, and the difficulty they experienced in deciding between them.

The award for oratory is made by a committee judging from the exhibitions given on Wednesday evening. Col. McRae announced the decision, complimenting in high terms all and specially Messrs. Jennings and Dunlap, though the decision after long conference was awarded the latter.

Judge Fowle (welcomed with applause) delivered these prizes with rare elegance and eloquence. To each one he uttered a brief address rich, apt and striking, as he gave the handsome award,—but to the orator especially, a most thrilling and eloquent passage—and to all, in earnest and effective oratory, he spoke of the danger of intellectual culture, not satisfying the craving of man's higher and moral nature, and with a vivid illustration, directed the souls to the living water—freely flowing and at hand.

The degree of A. B. was conferred upon the graduates (whose names I have already given,) the degree of B. S., upon Messrs. Arthur P. Brown, of Liberty Hill, S. C., and W. H. Cozart, Washington, Ga. No honorary degrees were conferred by Davidson College at this Commencement.

Then followed the Valedictory, and the Benediction, and the grand and gallant assembly slowly dispersed—to the sound of sweet music—and with many sad partings and joyous greetings. The Commencement of 1879 is over!

Thursday evening is not on the programme. But the social enjoyment deserves mention, and like a well-ordered dinner, the best comes last. The elegant halls, brilliantly lighted, the lawns and grounds, the strains of merry music, and the soft light of stars, are all, but the mere accessories of the loveliness that has the ethereal enswathement of feminine apparel, including court-trains. In such environment, eliminating the power of heredity, (Adam ever acknowledged Eve's witching ways), it is not difficult to conjecture what might be thought or said or sung.

But without a line from any poet, I close.

DR. SEARS AND THE PEABODY FUND.

The trustees of the Peabody Fund, a Southern endowment by the express will of its donor, selected Dr. Barnas Sears, before a State Superintendent of State schools in Massachusetts, and seated him on a fat salary in the city of Staunton, Va. This, of course, implies that the whole South did not contain a man as fitted as Dr. Barnas Sears to know what white children in the South need.

The newspapers report to us a new departure of the Doctor. The Legislature of the State of Louisiana has been honestly trying to diminish the extravagances of the government by relieving the oppressed tax-payers of the "fifth wheel to the wagon," a State Superintendent of Schools. Thereupon Dr. Barnas Sears issues his ukase from his villa in the charming "city" of Staunton, forbidding the sovereign State of Louisiana to do this thing, under penalty of robbing every child in Louisiana of all share in the benefaction bequeathed them by the excellent Mr. Peabody. To the plain mind this suggests two curious questions: First, where are the reserved rights of States, if they may be thus imperiously estopped by the mere "say so" of a non-resident of the State, residing hundreds of miles beyond its limits? Second, Dr. Barnas Sears informs the sovereign State of Louisiana that if it is his will the whole Peabody fund shall be by him manipulated and dispensed to foster and establish in all Southern States his particular crotchett of universal education on State account. Hence it is that he will punish any State which presumes to modify his crotchett of making the State the parent, even to the small extent of wielding its parental authority through any other agency than that particular one of a handsomely salaried, though useless, "State Superintendent of Education"—a position which Dr. Barnas Sears thinks he graced so highly in his native State of Massachusetts. He will punish this rebellious enormity summarily. How? By depriving every child in Louisiana of the gift Mr. Peabody bequeathed it! Now the query we wish to urge under this second head is this: Did Mr. Peabody say in his will that his object in this bequest was to propagate Dr. Sears' pet theory of State usurpation over the whole education of this Southern people; or to bestow on as many white children in the South as possible the benefits of gratuitous education? Which? We should like to hear the honored trustees of the Peabody fund on this subject. Let us have the will read. If Dr. Barnas Sears has the right construction, then the bequest sinks from the rank of a noble benefaction to an insolent intermeddling with other people's business.

SESSION BEGINS SEPTEMBER 10, 1879.

Testimonials as to the Thoroughness and High Standard of the Instruction at this Institute for Young Ladies.

"C. M. I." CHARLOTTE, N. C., May 19th, 1879.

We have personally inspected some of the examination papers of the Charlotte Institute for Young Ladies and the work of the pupils upon them. The examinations are searching, and the pupils' work gives evidence of instruction as careful and thorough as that afforded in our best male schools. We are satisfied that the Distinctions and Certificates of Proficiency awarded by the Institute are good criteria of the attainments of those who receive them. From our knowledge of the Principal's success here and elsewhere in the instruction of young ladies, we cordially recommend the Institute to those who seek a thorough education for their daughters.

WM. CAIN, Prof. Math., &c., "C. M. I."
M. M. HARGROVE, Prof. of Latin, &c., "C. M. I."

Having personally inspected the examination papers of the Charlotte Institute for Young Ladies and the work of the pupils upon them, I am prepared to pronounce the course extended and the instruction thorough. I think the papers would compare favorably with those handed in by the best male schools of the State. A certificate that a pupil had successfully passed such examinations would be sufficient evidence of her attainments to any one who knew their character.

WM. W. CARSON, Prof. Mat., Davidson College, N. C.

"Having long known the Rev. Wm. R. Atkinson, as a student of the South Carolina College, subsequently of the University of Virginia, and (from personal examination of his work) as a successful teacher of Mathematics and the Natural Sciences, I can very cordially give my testimony to his fine culture, and to his skill as an accomplished instructor.

Mr. Atkinson is an honor to his profession, and his School is well worthy of the patronage of those who seek a thorough education for their daughters. CHARLES S. VENABLE."

[From Charles B. Bradley, Professor of Thorough Bass, and Band Master, Dana's Musical Institute.]

"Prof. Aloys Bidez has for two years been my fellow teacher in Dana's Musical Institute, Warren, O. I have known him all the time to be faithful to his duties and painstakings in his department which was that of the Piano. This department greatly improved under his care, either through his peculiar method of teaching, or through the studies and musical works he introduced. He has always won the respect and friendship of every one of his pupils through his firmness and kindness. He has shown himself proficient in Thorough-Bass, Harmony and Orchestration; and when at one time he was in charge of the Vocal Department of this Institute, he also proved himself a thorough teacher of Vocal Music.

[From Rev. C. B. Hulbert, President of Middlebury College, Vermont.]

"It gives me pleasure to commend Miss Susan A. Sherman as a lady of high personal culture, and especially accomplished in her chosen profession as an Artist. A niece of the celebrated Boston Artist and Portrait Painter, Albert G. Hoyt, Esq., she early caught an inspiration from his works, and manifested something of his genius. The fine opportunities she has enjoyed from early youth, the excellent school in which she was drilled in art-culture, and the long experience she has had as a teacher, with its acknowledged success, combine to make her a rare acquisition to any Institution of Collegiate Training."

C. B. HULBERT.

N. B.—The entire corps of the able and experienced teachers of the last session has become permanently connected with the Institute. For terms or any information address the Principal,

TALBOTT'S PATENT SPARK ARRESTER
The Invention of the Age.

It does not destroy the draft.
It does not interfere with cleaning the tubes.
It will not choke up, and requires no cleaning.
It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable, as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape.)
It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.
It is simple and durable and can be relied upon.
It can be attached to any boiler.
No planter should be without one of them. Insurance companies will insure gins and barns where the Talbott Engines and Spark-Arresters are used at same rate as charged for water or horse-power.

FOR THE FAMILY.

A Wonderful Child.

I've read somewhere about a girl
Whose cheeks are rosy red,
While golden tresses curl on curl,
Bedeck her pretty head.
Her eyes, I'm told, are bright and blue
Her smile is kind and sweet;
The errands she is asked to do
Are done with willing feet.

'Tis said that when she goes to school
She's just the sweetest lass!
So quick to mind the slightest rule,
And prompt in every class.
To girls and boys she's never rude
When all are at their play:
Her "conduct"—be it understood—
Is "perfect" every day.

Where lives this child, I cannot say,
Nor who her parents are,
Although for many a weary day
I've sought her near and far.
If you should ever see her smile,
As o'er the world you rove,
Just hold her little hand a while,
And give her my best love.

A Steel-Trap Story.

A boy is a singular sort of an animal. No two boys are exactly alike. The study of one boy does not insure an understanding of any other boy. Each one is a volume in himself and has to be studied from the first. The points of similarity between any two boys are more than over balanced by their differences. I don't think the old folks knew much about boys when I was young—at least they did not act as if they did. This failure to understand a boy led my mother into at least one serious mistake. I was not a bit curious—in fact had no curiosity that I knew, of, except when my mother called me up and pointed to some particular thing and charged me not to touch it. That prohibition always stirred my curiosity to the highest pitch. If she had said nothing likely I would not have thought of that particular thing, but now that she had charged me to let it alone I wanted to see to the bottom of it at once. If she had always stated the reason for interdicting any given thing I could have stood it better, or, to put the best face on it, I thought so.

They called me meddlesome and mischievous, when, in fact, I was only trying to gain knowledge. The desire to find out why mother had been so particular often got the better of my desire to obey her, and in this respect, I suppose, most boys are alike. Just after I had completed my eighth year I found my mother in the lock room one day, down on her knees, in the darkest corner of the room, busy at something, I knew not what. "Mother, what are you doing?" I asked.

"Setting a rat trap - a steel trap," she answered.

That was a poser. If ever I had seen such a trap I did not know it. What the trap was going to steal I did not know. I knew something about rats, and I didn't see how any trap could steal them.

Words that are the same in sound always perplex one who does not know the difference in the spelling of them. I was in a deep study about that "steal" trap. Mother got up, and pointed to a flat looking piece of iron on the floor, and said, "Now, my son, you must not touch that trap, and don't come about it." I didn't for a long time; but the longer I waited the more I wanted to take just one peep at that innocent piece of iron on the floor in the corner of the lock-room. From the glimpse I had of it I didn't see how it was going to catch rats. I wanted to understand the philosophy of it. So into the room I went. There the trap lay, about as harmless a looking thing as you ever saw. It being too dark to see plainly I thought I would feel it, but lo! before I had hardly touched it, snap it went, with a click and a jerk that frightened me out of my wits. My forefinger felt awful about the first joint. Whether I had the trap or the trap had me I hardly knew; I know I did my best to turn it loose, but I couldn't. I capered over the room worse than a pony in a yellow jacket's nest. I suppose I made a slight noise, as my mother came running, in a hurried and exciting manner, and caught me in her arms and did something—I never know what—but instantly the trap turned me loose and looked as harmless as ever, only it was not in the same shape it was when I first saw it. When I came to myself, there was the churn upset, and the milk all over the floor, and ever so many eggs mixed up with the milk, and a gourd full of soft soap lying around in patches.

"Now," says mother, half in earnest and half in fun, "see what a catastrophe!" I didn't know what that was. I saw no cat about it—indeed saw nothing but that "touchous" little trap. As well as my memory now serves me, it was twelve months or more after that before I had any desire to understand the philosophy of a steel trap, or to know how it caught rats. Now, boys, when told to keep your hands off do it.—Exchange.

"Take Your Religion."

'Good-by," said Uncle John to Will, as he entered the cars for a few weeks' vacation in the country. "Good-by, Will. Got every thing along?"

"Yes, uncle, I think I have. There is my trunk, and satchel, and gun, and umbrella, and—"

"There, boy, I don't mean those traps. They're not every thing."

"What then?"

"O, something more important!"

"I guess I've got money enough to take me there."

"Not that, my child."

"Well, I believe you think I've forgotten my Bible, but I haven't."

"I hope you haven't forgotten that; though, to be sure, it is an easy matter to take it along, just for the respectability of the thing. Mind you use it. But how about your religion? Is that going into the country with you? Many professed Christians take a vacation from their religion just as they do from business. Don't do that, my boy. Take your religion with you. You need it. Others need it too."

"Thank you, uncle."

"Take your religion along!" sounded in the young lad's ears as he took a seat in the cars. It made him feel more courteous to his fellow-travellers. It helped him speak a word to them.

"Take your religion along!" echoed a still small voice as he met old friends in the country village, and it helped him say a word for Christ. It sounded from the church-bell, and prompted him to speak for his Master in the little village prayer-meeting, where a new voice was a great encouragement. It urged him to take the place of an absent teacher, and tell a class of lads how pleasant he found it serving Jesus.

Months have passed since then, but many still thankfully remember the young man who took his religion along.—The Standard.

The Conceited Spider.

In the corner of a garden attached to the house of an old miser a conceited spider had spun her silken web. Each thread was firmly attached to the moss-grown walls or friendly bushes. Within her dreaded castle she daily feasted on the bodies of the unfortunate flies which had chanced to get entangled in the sticky threads. The remains of more than seventy victims lay in the spider's prison.

One morning, as the spider was eating her breakfast, which consisted of the remains of the big fly she had had for supper the night before, a wasp knocked at the castle door. Jumping up from the breakfast table she hurried down the stair-case and opened the door.

"Good morning, Mrs. Spider," said the wasp. "Being anxious for your safety, I have come to warn you to crawl away from the garden as quickly as possible, for the old miser is dead, and some new people are going to take the cottage, and I heard them say that they were going to have the garden put in order and the wall rebuilt, and that, of course, means destroying your home."

"And so you think I am going to leave this strong castle, do you?" said the spider, pointing to the threads that ran from point to point. "Do you not think such ropes as these sufficient to prevent the destruction of that wall?"

"Very well," replied the wasp to the boaster, "if you will not take my advice I cannot help you." So saying, the neighborly insect departed.

The next morning the spider awoke to find the walls of her castle swept away, and in a moment after she was knocked down by the gardener's broom, and lay, bruised and bleeding, on the ground, till a piece of brick from the garden wall, falling on her, crushed her to death.

MISCELLANEOUS.

How a Man Takes Care of a Baby.

In spite of all statements to the contrary, there are men who help take care of their children. They are the kindest and best husbands in the world. They do not wish to see their wives overburdened with care and worry, and they intend to help them a great deal, and actually do. Yet it cannot be denied that their opinion concerning the value of their services and their wives opinion on the same subject do not exactly coincide. One of these good husbands will help dress the children for breakfast, and speak of it with a grandly virtuous air, while the fact is that he only washed the face of one while his wife washed and dressed the other three. He helps get the children ready for church; that is, he buttons Dick's boots and helps Jenny put on her gloves, after he has leisurely and comfortable dressed himself, while his wife ties sashes, and hunts up old gloves, and puts on collars, and curls one's child's hair, and washes another's hands, and in the intervals "does up" her own hair, and saves the baby from the razor, and Jenny's best bonnet from the baby. He stands patiently (?) in the hall as the bell begins to toll, and mildly calls, "It is getting late, Maria." Which fact Maria knows as well as he does, for her hands are trembling so with nervousness and haste that she can barely put a single pin in its right place. Just as the last strokes of the bell are sounding, they hurry off to church, losing entirely the calming influence which comes from a leisurely walk on a fine Sunday morning. He takes the opportunity to remark, with just a shade of reproof in his gentle tones, "I can't understand why it takes you so long to get ready. It really does seem as if with as much as I do to help you, we need not be obliged to hurry so at the last minute. I don't like to see you go up the aisle with your face as red as a lobster," which of course is very soothing to Maria's irritated nerves.

The father cares for the baby at night in very much the same fashion. The mother has lifted the child into her own bed, and back into its cradle again, in the vain hope that in one place or the other he will go to sleep, has brought "drinks of water," for him, rocked the cradle and sung to its uneasy occupant softly and sleepily for an hour, till finally she thinks that if she is to be in this semi amphibious state, half out of bed and half in, the air from the open window is too cool for her. She knows if she tries to shut it herself the little tyrant will instantly miss her presence and be ten times wider awake than ever, and all the hour's singing and rocking will be labor lost. So, with much regret, she softly asks John to get up and close the window. He has lain remarkably still and breathed rather heavily and is somewhat difficult to arouse for a man who afterward declares he was awake all the time. But like the good husband he is, he cheerfully closes the window, and gets an extra blanket for the baby, and pleasantly asks, as he settles down into the pillows again, "What makes the baby so uneasy to-night?" He manifests a strange indifference to his wife's reply, and in fact nothing more is heard from him till morning, while his wife sleepily and painfully works away for an hour longer. But at breakfast with what calm complacency does he speak of the trouble the baby made us last night, with an "us" fairly editorial in its comprehensiveness. The next night he goes into a room by himself to sleep. He can't stand it to have his rest broken so," but adds generously, "I'll take care of him the next night." And so he does till about twelve o'clock, when the baby wakes and cries. For ten minutes he tries faithfully to get him to sleep again, and then ignominiously retreats and calls for "mamma."—Scribner.

Experiments in Cross-Breeding Plants.

Professor W. J. Beal, desirous of testing the accuracy of some of the statements in Darwin's work, "The Effects of Cross and Self Fertilization of Plants," has been making some experiments, the results of which he records in the American Journal of Science and Arts. His first experiments were with Indian corn. Yellow dent corn was obtained from two men in different parts of Michigan. In one case the corn had been kept ten years or more on the same farm, and in the other instance fifteen years or more on the same farm. In both cases the corn was much alike. The two lots were planted in alternate rows in a plat by itself. The top of one set of rows were all cut off, thus securing a perfect cross on those stalks. Seed from this cross was saved and planted to compare with corn not so crossed. The yield from the crossed seed exceeded the yield of that not crossed, as 153 exceeds 100.

The next experiment was with black wax beans, a variety much cultivated for the purpose of supplying an early crop, and a kind that may be eaten, pod and all, while young. Eight rows were planted, alternately old and crossed stock, and fifteen beans planted in each of the rows. This was on May 31, 1878. On the 22d of July the pods on the two lots of plants were about alike in size, but those fit for cooking numbered 108 on the old stock, and 353 on the crossed; a difference of over three to one in favor of the crossed stock. On August 9th the pods fit for cooking, or past that condition, were 883 on the old stalk and 1,048 on the crossed. On or before the 16th of September all were harvested. The total number of pods was found to be, on the old stock 818 and on the crossed stock 1,859. The beans of the old stock weighed 20·77 ounces, while those of the crossed stocked weighed 70·33 ounces, or nearly in the proportion of 100 to 236. Six lots of fifty beans each were taken at random from the old stock, weighed, and the average for fifty found to be 269·2-3 grains. A like experiment with the crossed stock gave an average of 218·1 6 grains The average weight of an equal number of beans from each stock was nearly as 100 to 79 in favor of the old stock.—Scientific American.

The New Elijah.

A correspondent writes: "A man, representing himself to be the Prophet Elijah, is creating quite a furore in and about the ancient city of Chichester. Hearing the fame of this remarkable individual, I drove over from Portsmouth last week to have an interview with him. Passing through North Street I observed a tall, handsome man dressed in a picturesque garb of sheepskin, with a cap of the same material, and high cowhide boots, standing in the doorway of George and Dragon Inn. I went inside and commenced to speak to him, but he retired up stairs. After some difficulty he was persuaded to come down into the best room of the house, where he received me. His appearance is very striking, having very good clean-cut features of Asiatic type, being tall in stature, and having an ever ready smile, and his dark whiskers being set off to perfection by the light dress and cap. He carries a staff and small horn, which he blows through the streets and announces his meetings, which are held in the People's Park, and are very largely attended. He told me that he had been a landscape painter, and that eight months ago he had seen several visions, in which he was told to call himself Elijah at all meetings; and that he was the real prophet as foretold and promised in Malachi iv., verse 5. This verse is the whole foundation of his doctrine, which is to preach Anglo-Israelism to the English people, who, he states, are the lost ten tribes of Israel; and if they do not listen to him and in time return to Jerusalem a great famine is prophesied. It is almost unnecessary to say that at some of his meetings he has to encounter great opposition; sometimes he has been stoned, and at others made quite a hero of. He has lately in the southeast of England. He now expresses his determination to go all over London."—London Review.

Milton.

Milton was not an amiable man when he was traversed, either at home or abroad. He was pleasant with his friends when his friends were fond of him, and gave back his courtecus praise: he was pleasant when he was happy, and being more happy when he was young he was pleasantest then. But he could not bear with patience domestic misfortune, which he had brought on himself; he was a severe father and husband, and when he was attacked by an adversary he returned the blows, not only for the sake of justice and truth, but also because he was injured in his proud self-esteem, with an unequaled ferocity. His intense individuality made him all the more unfit for personal controversy; and much of the bitterness and violence of the manner is to be accounted for by the painful repression for so long of his true nature, and by the sacrifice of his natural work. But, with all exceptions, no grander figure stands forth in the whole of English literature, scarcely any grander in English history, than the figure of the blind, resolute, eloquent man, who now, fallen on days that grew graver and graver, sat in his room at Westminster, impassioned for work, yet still more impassioned for liberty; having done with personal wars and looking forward always always to the time when he might let himself loose, and, leaving the disputes and passions of earth, soar into the poetic air in which alone he breathed with ease, and pleasure, and triumph. He loved beauty, not only the beauty of human passion or of nature, but still more the solemn beauty of lofty thought, more than any man in England has ever loved it; and yet, in the midst of the crowding imaginations into which he shaped the messages his celestial patroness, Urania, sent him, he kept himself to the work he thought needful for his fellow-citizens, and waited quietly until all other work was done to do his greatest work.—Stafford Brooke.

The Quaker's Temper Mastered.

A London merchant had a dispute with a Quaker respecting the settlement of an account. The merchant was determined to bring the account into court, a proceeding which the Quaker earnestly deprecated, using every argument in his power to convince the merchant of his error; but the latter was inflexible. Desirous to make a last effort, the Quaker called at his house one morning and inquired of the servant if his master was at home. The merchant, hearing the inquiry, and knowing the voice, called out from the stairs, "Tell that rascal I am not at home." The Quaker, looking up at him, calmly said, "Well, friend, God put thee in a better mind." The merchant, struck afterwards with the meekness of the reply, and having more deliberately investigated the matter, became convinced that the Quaker was right and he was wrong. He requested to see him, and after acknowledging his error, he said, "I have one question to ask you. How were you able, with such patience, on various occasions, to bear my abuse?" "Friend," replied the Quaker, "I will tell thee. I was naturally as hot and violent as thou art. I knew that to indulge this temper was sinful, and I found that it was imprudent. I observed that men in a passion always spake aloud, and I thought if I could control my voice I should repress my passion. I have therefore made it a rule never to let my voice rise above a certain key, and by a careful observance of this rule I have by the blessing of God, entirely mastered my natural temper."

Alfred Tennyson.

The Poet Laureate is thus described by an English writer: "He looked tall, somewhat stout, round-shouldered, and he walked with a stick, as though the gout were hanging about his legs and feet. He had a long beard, which almost buried his face, and wore a pair of large, round, Chinese-looking spectacles. He had on a very broad-brimmed, weather-worn felt hat, dark trousers, gaiters, several undercoats or jackets, covered over all by a thin, shabby-looking red-tweed dust-coat, buttoned very tightly, as though it were much too small for him. Dangling outside from what should have been a clean white shirt front, was a pair of large gold-rimmed nose-spectacles. He was one of the oddest-looking creatures I have ever seen out of a Mormon meeting."

A Bird's Umbrella.

'In front of a window where I worked last summer," says a writer in the American Sportsman, "was a butternut tree. A humming-bird built her nest on a limb that grew near the window, and we had an opportunity to watch her closely, as we could look right into the nest from the window. One day there was a very heavy shower coming up, and we thought we would see if she covered her young during the storm; but when the first drop fell she came and took in her bill one of two or three large leaves growing close to the nest, and laid this leaf over so that it completely covered the nest; then she flew away. On looking at the leaf we found a hole in it, and in the side of the nest was a small stick that the leaf was fastened to or hooked on. After the storm was over the old bird came back and unhooked the leaf, and the nest was perfectly dry."

A riot occurred in Chicago last Sunday. Twenty members of a sharpshooting company on a picnic got into quarrel with a citizen and beat him. Friends gathered and the sharpshooters fired. Some were killed and others very seriously wounded.

The Khedive of Egypt seems determined not to abdicate. The representatives of the power are disposed to frighten him into it, but he merely refers them to the Sultan. The question of succession is engaging attention, but the Khedive for some reason prefers deposition to abdication.

Late advices from South America state that the Peruvian iron-clad Huascar, after running the gauntlet of the whole Chilian fleet, had arrived safely at Callao. Her attempt to destroy the tidewater condensers at Antofagasta was unsuccessful. The Chilians have armed a number of merchant steamers and now have a formidable fleet. They are pouring men into the disputed territory and preparing for a bitter struggle. Gens. Brade and Daza, with their armies, are at Iquique and Asica, both hundreds of miles from the real seat of war.

WORKINGMEN.

Before you begin your heavy spring work after a winter of relaxation, your system needs cleansing and strengthening to prevent an attack of Ague, Billious or Spring Fever, or some other Spring sickness that will unfit you for a season's work. You will save time, much sickness and great expense if you will use one bottle of Hop Bitters in your family this month. Don't wait. See other column.

PRESBYTERIANISM IN NORTH CAROLINA.

BY REV. J. RUMPLE.

THE WILMINGTON CHURCHES AND THEIR MINISTERS.

The settlement of Wilmington dates back to a period prior to 1725, but it was a mere market by the river side in those early days. It was not until 1730 or 1731 that it could be called a village, and was then named New Liverpool. In 1773 a survey was made for the purpose of laying ont a town, and two years later Jno. Watson obtained a grant of 640 acres, on the west bank of the Cape Fear, including the village under the name of Newton. Its name was changed again in 1739, and it was called Wilmington after Spencer Compton, Earl of Wilmington. This is the year the celebrated George Whitefield preached at Newton on the Cape Fear, "lately settled from Scotland, and his labors were not without effect." This remark from Whitefield's letters indicated the nationality of the early settlers, and further suggests that they were Presbyterians. A few years later, 1756, the Rev. Hugh McAden visited Wilmington and preached once or twice. He was much encouraged by his visit and received and moved in his journey up towards Anglin county. The Rev. James Tate, a Presbyterian minister from Ireland, opened a school in the town in 1760, and preached and baptized the children through the country. He remained until after the opening of the Revolutionary war. Not long after the beginning of the war, in 1785, the Rev. Wm. Ingram, another Presbyterian minister from Ireland opened a classical school, and preached as occasion offered. But during all these years no successful effort was made to organize a church in Wilmington. While up the Cape Fear, in the neighborhood of Cross Creek, or Campbellton, now Fayetteville, in Orange, Granville, Guilford, Rowan and Mecklenburg, churches were planted in the country, the villages and towns did not have churches among them till after the war, and a number of them such as Wilmington, Newbern, Raleigh, Greensboro, Salisbury and Charlotte had no churches until the opening years of this century. In fact our early Presbyterian population did not incline to settle in cities, but rather to spread over the country and make homes for themselves and their children in the wilderness. The following calendar will show the dates of the following events connected with the Wilmington church.

CALENDAR OF FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, WILMINGTON.

The Wilmington church was received under care of Presbytery, April 4th, 1817. Artemus Boies, ordained and installed May 12, 1819; died in 1820 or 1821. Leonard E. Lathrop, ordained and installed January 9th, 1823; resigned Nov. 11th, 1824. Rev. J. A. Smaltz and Rev. Alanson Benedict supplies from 1824 to 1827. Noel Robertson, ordained and installed April 20th, 1827; resigned April 1, 1828. Mr. Brobston, ordained Dec. 30, 1829, supplied church 1830. Rev. Wm. P. Hunt, installed May 13th, 1832; resigned October 4, 1834. Jas. A. McNeill, ordained Oct 4th, 1834, ordained June 13th, 1835, supplied one year. Rev. Robert Sonthgate supplied a few months in 1837. Rev. Henry Brown a few months from Jan. 1st, 1838. Rev. W. W. Eells, ordained and installed April 28, 1839; resigned Nov. 12th, 1842. Rev. Thos. R. Owen, supplied from Nov. 1842 to Sept. 1843. Rev. J. O. Stedman, stated supply from 1844, till 1850. Rev. Mr. Grier, stated supply, Jan. 18th, 1852, installed May 19th, 1854; left June 1, 1860; dissolved Oct. 10, 1861. Rev. Martin Queen, stated supply, part of 1863-'4. Rev. A. D. Hepburn, stated supply, for a few months in 1865. Rev. Horace L. Singleton, installed May 6, 1866; resigned Oct. 1. 1871. Rev. A. F. Dickson, stated supply, installed June 1, 1872; resigned May 5, 1873. Rev. C. S. Plumer, DD. LL.D., stated supply from May 1873, till March 1874. Rev. Joseph R. Wilson, D. D., installed Nov. 1, 1874; present pastor. An aggregate of 20 ministers and 99 years. The longest term of service was that of Dr. Grier, nine years. The next Dr. Stedman's, six years, the next Mr. Singleton's, five years. From this calender it will be seen that the origin of church dates to April 4th, 1817. On that day the Presbytery of Fayetteville, in session at Euphronia church received the Wilmington church under its care. There is no account of any formal organization, though in 1819 Mr. Jno. McAuslan was elected a seat in Presbytery as a member. The first minister was Mr. Artemus Boies, a native of Massachusetts and a graduate of Williams College. The corner stone of the church building, situated on the east side of Front street, midway between Dock and Orange streets, was laid in May, 1818, and the completed building was dedicated about May, 1819. Six months later the church with about 200 other buildings was consumed by fire. While the Presbyterians were thus houseless, the Rev. Adam Empie, Rector of St. James' Episcopal church, in the spirit of brotherly affection, tendered to them the use of his church for the half of each Sabbath. Immediate steps were taken to rebuild, the corner stone was laid in 1820, and the church finished in 1821.

Rev. Leonard E. Lathrop was the next pastor, and at the first communion fifteen ladies joined the church by examination. During his pastorate of two years the church prospered. After occupying a number of positions in New York and Connecticnt, Dr. Lathrop died in 1857. The Rev. Noel Robertson was the third pastor and served the church one year, from April, 1827, to April, 1828. After this the church declined, and a number of families made other church connections. After the Rev. Wm. Brobston had served the church about one year the congregation secured the services of the Rev. Thos. P. Hunt, who became the fourth pastor, and under whose care the church was thoroughly reorganized and prepared for work. Though the name of Jno. McAuslan appears in the earlier times as an elder of Wilmington church, there are no evidences of any meetings of session, nor indeed of any other elders. But in April, 1831 the names of Alex. Anderson, Wm. P. Hort, James Owen and Robert W. Gibbs appear as elders in meetings of session. They were probably elected and ordained but a short time before. It is not unlikely that the Sabbath school also was instituted in the time of Mr. Hunt's pastorate; during the first year of his ministry 29 members were added to the church, making a total membership of sixty.

A tract society, and a foreign mission society were likewise established, and the grace of Christian liberality developed. Mr. Hunt was a man of remarkable zeal, activity and energy, an acceptable preacher, a promoter of revivals, and an effective temperance lecturer. It is claimed that he deserves the honor of founding Donaldson Academy in Fayetteville. He acted as agent for various institutions and causes, was domestic missionary and chaplain in the United States Army. With all his other labors he never remitted his zeal for the cause of religion, and he participated in many precious revivals. His death occurred in Philadelphia, Dec. 5, 1876, in the 82d year of his age. He was a native of Charlotte Co., Va., and he graduated at Hampden Sidney College in 1813, was licensed by Hanover in 1823 and ordained in 1824 by the same. Mr. Hunt was succeeded in Wilmington by the Rev. Jas. A. McNeill, a licentiate of Fayetteville Presbytery—a native of Robeson county, N. C. He served the church about a year, having been ordained sine titulo, in 1835, but was never installed. He died in Warren Co., Miss., Sept. 27, 1837, in the 29th year of his age.

His course was short, but he was zealous and faithful in the cause of his Heavenly Master.

From April, 1836, the Rev. Robert Sonthgate and the Rev. Henry Brown, each labored for a few months. In 1839 the Rev. W. W. Eels, a licentiate of Harmony Presbytery was ordained and installed. He remained but two years, when feeble health required him to resign. Dr. Eels was living in Alleghany city, Pa., in 1877.

From 1844 till 1850, the Rev. J. O. Stedman was stated supply of this church, and his ministry here was a very important and useful one. He possessed fine administrative abilities, and instituted various useful customs, such as catechetical instruction, teachers' meetings, the monthly concert, Sabbath School for colored people and the encouragement of foreign and domestic missions. About the close of Mr. Stedman's ministry, Dr. Daniel Baker, of Texas held a series of services, and under his preaching about fifteen souls were converted. During Mr. Stedman's ministry of six years 85 persons were added to the church, or an average of 14 a year, and 70 were baptized. The church building was also renovated and beautified, and a new bell provided. Just as these things were completed, Dr. Stedman, in consequence of the ill health of his wife and other causes, left the city, and declined the call tendered to him.

Dr. Stedman was a native of Cumberland county, N. C., born Oct. 11, 1811. He graduated with honor in the University of North Carolina in the class of 1832, and in the fall of the same year entered Princeton Seminary, where he remained four years. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Philadelphia in the spring of 1836 and after preaching awhile in Baltimore, and serving as a missionary in North Carolina, he was called to the pastoral charge of the church at Tuscumbia, Ala., and was ordained by the Presbytery of North Alabama, in 1837. From this place he came to Wilmington in 1844. In 1850 he took charge of a church in Chester, Pa., and from that place he was called to the First church of Memphis, Tenn., in May, 1854. Here he continued till 1868. It was while occupying this post that he was honored with the title of D. D., by La Grange Synodical College. In 1868 Dr. Stedman organized the Alabama Street Presbyterian church, Memphis, which grew rapidly under his ministry. In 1878 Dr. Stedman is reported as P. E. of that church, which then had 100 members.

As to the "failure" of missions in India the Rev. C. H. A. Dall, a Unitarian missionary at Calcutta, testifies that there are over 700,000 (Trinitarian) converts in that country, and that a statement in Frazer's Magazine to the effect that there are no converts in India is "blind, impudent, and in flat contradiction of well known facts."

THE COMET.

About ten years ago a book with this title, written by Haywood W. Gnion, was published by E. J. Hale & Son. Ushered to the public with a title so eccentric, and with nothing more than the routine notices of the press, at a time, too, when men's minds were distracted by political "reconstruction," the book, I think, failed to secure that consideration from thoughtful men which it deserved. Late mention of the work by the elder Hale, in one of his letters to the Raleigh Observer, as having elicited an elaborate comment by an Episcopal clergman of Missouri induced me to procure a copy of the "The Comet" and read what ought to have been read ten years ago—an original work of an original North Carolinian.

It is, indeed, a remarkable book. It is all about the Deluge, but if the author had entitled it "Noah's Flood" it would probably have been set down in the popular mind as an average Sunday school hook, and failed to secure notice from the general public. The title selected sounds of romance, and has therefore tended to the same result. Besides, the subject itself has been so worried by scientists and by commentators as to produce a feeling of literary surfeit and consequent indifference.

In the writings of modern scientists, so far as my limited observation goes, little reference or deference is made to the Bible. The statements of the old Book are either ignored or made to look absurd in the light of nineteenth century learning. Such has been the persistency of these writers in setting forth their theories of the earth and the heavens, of matter and of mind, that the man of common information, who has the ordinary faith in Scripture, and yet wishes not to appear behind the literary and scientific enlightenment of the age, finds himself making compromises between science and revelation. The learned disquisitions on natural laws, evolutions, the infinitude of time required to secure the results we see around us, and all that, are calculated to make him think—well, there is something in all this. And that "something" ends in a partial and painful compromise of his faith in some parts of the ancient Revelation. It is painful to the conscientious man, because he feels away down in his heart that if the old Scripture has failed in one part it may be a failure in other parts, and thus a film of doubt grows over the whole.

This book of Gnion's will make the inquirer feel that he rests upon a rock when he rests upon the Bible. The fact of the deluge, and of the universality of the deluge upon the face of the whole earth, are established with a certainty that produces renewed confidence in the venerable Record.

The foundation statement of the book is, that in the alternate upheaval and subsidence of the crust of the earth, which was at consequence of the flood, the Adamland, as the first earth is quaintly called, was engulfed in the waters, and the present continents and islands upheaved from the old seas. It is maintained that all this was done literally "according to Scripture," not requiring some thousands or millions of years, as some geologists insist. Read the book, if you want to see the proofs. It is astonishing with what precision he vindicates the literal account in Genesis.

Your correspondent has neither time, opportunity, nor capacity, to inquire into and comprehend the various geological theories and the theories of animated nature built thereon. He only knows that geology and its cognates have not yet attained to place among the "exact sciences." Such have been the differences among inquirers into these matters, from the Plutonians and Neptunians of the last century to the theorists and expounders of the present day, as to command more respect for their endeavors than for their conclusions. In this state of the case one may well be satisfied to stick to Noah and his remarkable exponent, Mr. Gnion. S.

NATURAL AND REVEALED RELIGION.

There is perhaps no created being of the human race of sane mind entirely destitute of religion, either natural or revealed. It is our object in the present article to show the difference between these two forms of faith: that the one is of the earth earthy, transient and imperfect; that the other is of heaven, and therefore spiritual and eternal, and leading unto salvation.

Natural Religion proceeds from an observance of nature and nature's laws, but is corrupted by our fallen state and the devices of Satan. Revealed religion is from God, and is set forth and expounded in the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments.

When God created man, according to the counsel of his own will, with truth, holiness and perfection, but with a liability to fall, He, in His infinite goodness, provided a way for his redemption, which is the first knowledge we have of revealed religion. But nearly all of the descendants of our first parents soon lost all knowledge of his divine ordinances, except perhaps by tradition, for we learn from holy writ that "God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his mind was evil continually." He therefore sent the flood upon the earth to destroy them. Yet they had the light to guide them, viz: this earth in a more perfect state than at present, the sun, moon and stars, and all the glories of a recent creation, leading to a natural religion, which was insufficient in the councils of God to save them even from natural, much less spiritual, death. It has been so ever since. After Noah's descendants were scattered forth upon the face of the earth they sought out and followed an infinitude of evil works and desires. They, with all the lights of nature, made for themselves gods of the sun, moon and stars, of wood, stocks and stones, and even inferior and degraded animals, and fell down before them and worshipped them. God Almighty, in his infinite benevolence and in view of his plan of salvation, has not thought proper to again show his abhorrence of the evil by utter destruction. But this is sufficient to show that the lights of nature alone do not lead to salvation. And yet we are bound to acknowledge that, although Natural and Revealed Religion differ very materially, yet in some respects they are coincident and co-operative. The lights of nature teach us the wisdom, almighty power and magnificence of God. "The heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge. There is no speech nor language where their voice is not heard." Why the necessity of revelation if these lights are sufficient?

Revelation teaches us His benevolence and infinite love; that He even sent His Son on earth to die the death of the cross for our fallen race. On faith in Him through this death He has fixed our salvation, and not in view of His power, glory or magnificence. His infinite love values the human soul at more than the works of nature. "What doth it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

Natural Religion is like the early dawn, when the eastern horizon is slightly illuminated by the coming sun. Revealed Religion is analogous to the effulgent midday sun, when all the works of nature and nature's God are in full splendor and glory. Spirituality is above materiality, and is the next condition of man after this mortal state.

We therefore conclude that Natural Religion is not to be despised, yet not to be depended upon without other lights; that it is a valuable aid in gaining a knowledge of the wisdom, power and magnificence of our Great Creator; but does not teach us infinite love, which is the essence of redeeming faith. Neither does it teach us self-abnegation, which is an influence of the Holy Spirit. This leads us to thoughts concerning foreign missions. The heathen have the lights of nature to guide them, which we have shown are insufficient and not leading to results acceptable to God. We are commanded through our substance and through missionaries to go into the whole world and preach the Gospel to every creature. Are we doing our duty in this respect to God and man? At the bar of judgment we will have to answer this question. We are commanded to pray, "Thy kingdom come." Are we acting in good faith to utter this prayer and neglect our commanded duty in aid of its accomplishment? May the God of all mercies direct our minds to our duties. X.

MR. INGERSOLL AS STATE'S EVIDENCE.

BY REV. H. D. GANSE.

The fight against faith is a fight against human nature. Not against every part of that nature, for there is nothing more natural to a being that has a conception of duty and a reluctance to do it, than to hope there may be no retribution and no Retributor. As long as passion and self-will have sway of a man, he may be expected to scoff at God and faith, not only with rancor, but possibly with a kind of sincerity. So heartily does he wish them to be unreal, that he may even think them to be so.

But there is something more in human nature than wicked wilfulness. Men have affections, which go far to modify the lives even of the most abandoned. One who has no regard for God whom he has not seen, may even be fond of his brother whom he has seen. If such men never outlive each other, their human affections might raise no battle with their unbelief. But God arranges that death comes irregularly. Of two brothers, equally wilful and unbelieving, one dies first; and then, in the other, two things survive—the wicked passion that hates faith, and the human affection that has lost its mate, and—does what? Ask John Stuart Mill over the grave of his wife at Avignon; and ask Robert Ingersoll in the presence of his brother's corpse. Why, they fly to faith as instinctively as a hurt child flies to its mother. Not to Christian faith, indeed—the wilful argument against that is strong as ever—but to faith, in principle; to faith so unphilosophic, according to the philosophy of unbelief, and yet so imperious under the behest of the heart that it sweeps away the infidel logic as a charged water-spout sweeps off a worn fence.

No one who has read Mr. Ingersoll's late address at his brother's funeral will doubt that it was carefully prepared. What the speaker said he meant to say. But he meant to say two things exactly opposed and irreconcileable.

First came the pronounced and partisan infidel who, discarding faith, believed that every human life ends in "wreck," and in "tragedy as sad and deep and dark as can be woven of the warp and woof of mystery and death;" that death is a "dreamless sleep," and that the most searching human gaze into eternity can discover nothing but its "cold and barren peaks." So utterly hopeless did he count the collapse of death, that he made it matter of eloquent wonder whether it might not be best for a man to perish suddenly in the midst of his happiness, and go down like a ship that in full sail and in sunlight strikes a sunken rock. That is the genuine infidel philosophy about the unknowable. Having thus uttered it, why did not its apostle stop there, and dismiss the assembly? Certainly if any Christian believer had at that point risen and repeated the words of Christ, "I am the Resurrection and the Life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead yet shall he live," he would have been thought by Mr. Ingersoll to have sinned not only against courtesy, but against reason. Such an utterance would have marred that intellectual service with the jargon of superstition.

Then why should not the service end with those two telling pictures, of the plunging ship and of the barren peaks? Because Mr. Ingersoll and his infidelity stood confronted with a living human issue and were on trial. Two juries were trying them. The one consists of the multitudes to whom the same orator has ridiculed and blasphemed Christian faith. These were saying in effect; "Oh trenchant assailant of the ancient superstition, we have applauded your triumphs. But now you stand face to face with death and sorrow, as we often do, and must again. We know you are a hero at demolition. Now what have you to set up? Plunging ships and frozen peaks are admirable for rhetoric and tragic effect, but when we bury our brothers or wives or children we want something more. Don't you?"

The other jury was in Mr. Ingersoll's own breast. Memory, that treasured up the scores of years of the brother's mutual love and helpfulness, of intelligent intercourse, of personal qualities that would not seem to have perished; Love, that yearned for its lifelong object; and instinctive Hope, that claimed to know there must be a future to such a past; all these made up a new community within him which had not gone with the unbelieving lecturer on his blaspheming tours. They waited for that funeral scene. They brightened into notice before the white face of the dead as the tree trunks and leaves do before the phosphorescent light in the midnight woods. So Mr. Ingersoll had his own best manhood for a court, and was compelled to plead before it.

Under that double necessity the brother conquered the infidel declaimer long enough to give three reasons for faith in a future life. He admitted the ability of Hope to "see a star," and the ability of Love to "hear the rustle of a wing," and he quoted the words of of his dying brother: "I am better now;" and proceeded:

"Let us believe in spite of doubt and dogmas, and tears and fears, that these dear words are true of all the countless dead."

What does he mean? That the dead are all sleeping the dreamless sleep, having gone to the bottom and utterly perished? Does he need hope, and love, and a star, and a wing to persuade him of that? He avows a faith—vague enough and faint enough indeed—yet a faith in a future life—a faith that hinges upon no material evidence, and yet claims to be reasonable; for he summons the whole company of his brother's friends and associates, and says, "Let us believe."

Now the philosophic denier of Revelation may take either of the following grounds:

1. That human nature feels no natural and reasonable interest in the question of a future life, but that all such interest is the morbid growth of superstition. Mr. Ingersoll in his real grief, is far enough from taking that ground.

2. That the question of a future life being a natural, inevitable and worthy one, men have adequate ordinary testimony by which they can fully settle it, so that Revelation would be surplusage. Mr. Ingersoll emphatically discards any such notion as that. We have no common testimony at all.

3. That the interest in a future life being real and great, and common testimony being utterly wanting, there is nothing for a wise man to do but to repress his interest in hopeless ignorance and sheer endurance. As against the Gospel of Christ Mr. Ingersoll takes and holds that very ground, and never more emphatically than in this funeral address. But before his own gospel of the "star" and the "wing" and the dying words, "I am better now," he yields his stoical fort and becomes believer—only stipulating that "in spite of dogma" all the countless dead shall, in his creed, be "better now" together.

Now appears his essential quarrel with the Gospel. It is not that it treats of a spiritual world and a future life. That is the very topic that bereaved men are hungry to hear of. But it treats of a Judge and retribution, and offers safety only to repentance. The "wing" and the "star" do not say a word about these matters, and so the line between a reasonable faith and an unreasonable one is drawn by Mr. Ingersoll just above one "wing" and one "star." What, will he not allow even two wings? Whatever makes the rustle, it could hardly fly with one. Then will he not allow us two stars? May there not be three? He has gone for a sceptic just one step too far. He should have kept all sorts of eyesight and hearing this side of the "barren peaks." If from beyond them there comes to him a glimmer or a sound, and he tells about it, then he testifies that there is a world there. If he expects the dead to live on in that world, what keeps them? Perhaps God is there. And if Mr. Ingersoll can look and listen over "the peaks," why may not God come over them, to tell us in the hour of our agony somewhat more than Mr. Ingersoll can hear or see. Or is this the triumphant discovery of human reason in regard to faith? That it is perfectly reasonable and manly to believe in a spiritual world and a future life, provided you stop at poetical figures and at dying men's words strained out of their meaning, and so keep your faith so tenuous that it cannot fret your conscience.—St. Louis Evangelist.

The Karen Mission of India, which is sometimes called the gem of Baptist Missions, was commenced fifty years ago. It now comprises 304 churches, with 19,915 members. It has a theological at Rangoon, with forty-nine students.

SOBER SECOND THOUGHT.

That special seasons of revival work under the lead of the modern evangelist, says the Congregationalist, are followed by periods of spiritual reaction and declension, undeniably is often true. That this is not always or necessarily the case, is proved by what we have often stated in the apparent fruit of Mr. Moody's work in Boston. But it begins to be a serious question if it be not true as the rule. At a recent gathering of ministers, fifteen were present. The question was asked whether the cause of Christ is really helped on, in neighborhoods properly supplied with churches by evangelistic work. The speakers, twelve of the fifteen present, were men who believe in revivals, and who, with few if any exceptions, have had experience of successful revival work.

They were entirely agreed that, in ordinary circumstances, the labor of the modern evangelist generally does more permanent harm than good. Churches are led to feel that they can idle for ten months of the travel, and do up their religious work in the other two. Converts are apt to be superficial. The supreme importance of steady and symmetrical spiritual growth, the cultivation of holy character, is in grave danger of being forgotten. Such were some of the reasons given. They strike us as having great force, as does one other; the objectionable characteristics of some of those evangelists themselves. We once rode for two hours in a railroad car in the seat in the front of a then noted evangelist. We could not help hearing all which he said, and the explanation which he gave to the friend at his side of the "machinery" upon which he relied, was a revelation at once surprising and disgusting.

We do not assert that there are no trustworthy evangelists, or that there is no need, at some times and places, for their services. But we believe that sooner or later our churches will learn, what some are already discovering, that the judgment of the pastors mentioned above is correct, and that faithful effort of our own, where God has placed us, with only such help from without as neighboring pastors and brethren can, and gladly will give, is in the long run, more sure of God's blessing, and more fruitful of abiding conversions.

ON PUBLIC SPEAKING.

It may perhaps be of use to those anxious to become orators to know that for some cause or other almost all speakers occasionally not only lose the thread of their argument, but lose all knowledge of what they are talking about. I have seen this occur with many of our most experienced orators. When it happens, they repeat a few vague generalizations until their thoughts come back to them, and then they fall back again into their speech. Thus their temporary wool gathering escapes detection, except by those who watch them very closely. An inexperienced speaker, instead of doing this, panses, gets confused and sits down in despair. Another great mistake of budding speakers, and indeed of many who are in full bloom, is to speak too quickly. A person who wishes to be heard can hardly speak too slowly. He should pronounce not only each word but every syllable of each word distinctly. Mr. Bright once said that nothing had cost him more trouble than to learn to speak slowly. A clear, deliberate utterance of every syllable, with panses to mark the stops at the end of each sentence, does not produce the effect of tediousness, but the reverse.—Central Advocate.

THE VALUE OF A FIXED HEART.

If any of you are so wise that you know all the objections to Christianity, all the hard places which faith must encounter, and the dark sayings and perplexing mysteries of the gospel, remember that it is nothing to your credit. A wrecker who lives from the goods of foundered vessels and shipwrecked crews knows where all the dangerous rocks are along the coast, and he is always hovering about them. But the shipmaster knows more about the channel than about the reefs. A calm, self possessed captain of a vessel was asked, "Captain, I suppose you know where every rock and shoal is along this whole coast do you not?" "I know where they are not," was his reply, which is the more important thing. Admirable answer. If your faith is fixed on God and your heart is wedded to His service, you will know where the dangers and difficulties and mysteries and contradictions are not. Riding peacefully upon the great needs of His love, your greatest joy will be that you no longer live by doubts but by affirmations.—Dr. A. J. Gordon.

THE VALUE OF ONE TRACT.

The Advertiser, of Leamington, England, publishes the following: "Some 15 years ago a young man, a Spaniard by birth, visited Leamington from New York, and received a tract in the Pump rooms, which was given to him casually by a lady. It was one of Canon Ryle's tracts, and it was the means of his conversion. On returning to America, where his parents had taken up their residence, he entered one of the universities, and having been ordained by Bishop Potter, was appointed missionary to the Spanish speaking people in New York. From thence he went to Mexico some ten years ago, and was presented by the Emperor Maximilian's successor with one of the principal churches in the capital. He translated the whole of Canon Ryle's tracts into Spanish, and the result was that there are now 160 Protestant congregations in Mexico, whereas nine years ago there was but one, and 63,000 persons have seceded from the Church of Rome. This was the result of one tract casually given to a visitor in the Pump rooms at Leamington." The title of the tract is, it is said, "Are You Forgiven?"

THE BOYS.

The boy who is permitted to grow up in idleness is sure to be a worthless man. Parents should keep their sons at home reading good newspapers and books, instead of letting them run wild about the streets, learning the soft and voluptuous ways of vice, and wasting the spring of youth in lawless riotousness. Idleness is the nurse of sin, and it is far better for parents who have not the means to educate their children to give them trades, whereby they can make a livelihood when grown to manhood and thrown upon life's turbulent voyage to steer for themselves. It is far better to have a trade than to be a loafer and sot upon the streets.—Banner.

A FRUITFUL SIXPENCE.

At a recent Congregation gathering, at which there was a subscription to be made, Mr. John Haley, the cotton-spinner of Bramley, England, said: "I gave to Methodism the first sixpence I ever possessed; I had earned it by spinning from one spindle; and now I spin from hundreds of spindles at once." He subscribed a hundred guineas. He has realized the truth of the wise man's observation. "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth." (Prov. 11:24).

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

From general sources:

There are 144 ordained Presbyterian ministers and missionaries in India.

An Association of Churchwardens has been formed for the purpose of strengthening the hands of the Protestant party in the Church.

A grateful community in the famine district of China have presented a magnificent heathen temple to the "Jesus Church."

The English Friends have five schools and missions at Ramalah, near Jerusalem, and a still larger group of missions near Beirout, in the Lebanon.

The Jesuits were recently negotiating for the purchase of a house in Rome to establish their headquarters there; but the Pope expressed such disapprobation that the scheme has been abandoned.

The anti-Copernican theory of the universe is still in actual vogue in a lesson book used in Romish seminaries—a book revised by an abbe. It states that the sun moves round the earth, and quotes Scripture in support.

The Amoy Mission of the Dutch Reformed Church received 69 persons on confession of their faith during the year, the Arcot Mission 348, and the Japan Mission 56. During the last year the Foreign Missionary Board of this Church received $10,000, a bequest from Mrs. Danser, a member of the Methodist Church.

On Tuesday the 104th conference of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Ireland commenced in Belfast. There was a very large attendance of representatives. The President, Rev. Principal Rigg, occupied the chair, and expressed the great pleasure he felt at being amongst his brethren of the Irish Conference. He believed the late union which had taken place was full of great promise. The two bodies being fused into one, they now possessed a power they could not have when separate, Rev. Professor Pope, D. D., Dr. Gervase Smith, and Rev. E. E. Jenkins, were present as representatives from England.

Among church preferments advertised in last Friday's Times was a living in Surrey with an income of about £1,000 a year, with an excellent rectory house, and "choice benefice in a home county, net value £600 a year, besides a first class gentleman's residence." The friends of a clergyman advertise for an advowson or next presentation, the condition being "income not of so much importance as a good house and church." In the case of the "choice benefice" the inducement is offered of the prospect of immediate possession, which may probably be taken to mean that the present incumbent is aged or infirm, and not likely to live long.

Mr. T. Wilkins of Cheltenham, who has married his deceased wife's sister, the daughter of the parish churchwarden, has complained that the vicar of Cirencester refused to administer the sacrament to his wife; and contends that the rubric clearly shows that the vicar should have previously signified his intention to Mrs. Wilkins. The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol having been appealed to, writes to the vicar: "After having carefully considered the report you have made to me, it is my judgment that as the law of the Church and the law of the land are both explicit, you could not have acted otherwise, though I know well it has given you great pain to have been obliged so to act."

A Dublin correspondent writes: "The spirit of religious toleration is not stronger in Fethard, county Tipperary, than in any other part of the country. At the Petty Sessions six persons were charged with breaking the windows of two residents of the town who had become obnoxious to them by allowing a woman to lodge with them who had been a Roman Catholic, but desired to become a Protestant as her husband is, who is a soldier named Mills, in the 3rd Dragoon Guards. The parish priest remonstrated with her, and after he left a mob broke the windows of the house in which she lodged. Another lodging was procured, and they broke the windows there also. When brought before Mr. French, R. M., the pleaded guilty, and expressed regret. The magistrate adjourned the case for a fortnight to test their sincerity, and commented upon the discredit and injury to the town which were likely to arise from such conduct.

On Monday the Bishop of Manchester consecrated the portion of the new cemetery at Eccles which has been apportioned to the Church of England, consisting of 56,000 superficial square yards, or about twelve acres. At the close of the ceremony the Bishop delivered an address. He regretted they should require three chapels. They were a painful reminder of the differences that separated those who all believed in one common Lord, who worshiped the same great Father, and all of whom would have to lie in the same ground, to rise again in the same assurance of a blessed immortality. It could not be otherwise than a painful thing to recognize that these differences which had divided us in life should be continued unto death. He did not know whether we should ever tone down our religious differences more than we had done at present; and, while congratulating the Burial Board on the cemetery they had established, he regretted the necessity which at present divided the Church of Christ.

POETIC RELIGION.

All truth is poetic. Whatever is improving and gives light, builds up mind and heart, beautifies and enlarges the spiritual forces, and gives a desirable and grander outlook on all realities and all possibilities of the seen and unseen. God's Word and Spirit are ever lifting men above the seen and tangible to the entrancing glories of the Spiritual and Eternal; to the enjoyment of what is practically realized by the finer and divinely born powers of Faith and Hope, and an inward sense of the beauty and poetry of holy affections, a holy life, holy acts and a holy heaven. Imagination and fancy may be severely chastened and bounded, and still the unsearched sweep of azure sky arches around us with richer and more thrilling beauty and poetic teaching, than mere starry facts or golden light of a kingly sun. Our trembling boundary of light, as it mingles with the skirts of human darkness, will ever reveal to questioning souls twinkling rays of anticipated glories, and forerunning gleams of celestial beauties for the blood-washed and chosen ones. If truth fills the soul we may still revel in the jeweled paths of illumined imagination with Milton or Pollock; or may gather about us here expressive emblems of purified hope, and all the healthful adornments created by a living faith in the true and the good, for the more effective and expressive worship of Him who is the Author of truth and beauty.

But there is no life, true health or power in a mere realm of fancy, and no acceptable worship in a sensuous though gorgeous and poetic display of absorbing ceremonies. There is no ground for mingling creations of mere human tastes with God's clearly revealed facts and requirements. Worship of God is not the absorption of carnal sensibilities, or the exquisite gratification of cultivated tastes and poetic susceptibilities, though the wealth of Divine truth will feed and thrill all our capabilities of mind and heart. But there is always a tendency in religious affairs to reach after the unrevealed, and to add to the simplicity of Bible doctrines and external worship. Ceremonies that flash and glitter and impress an excited fancy; forms that soothe a disturbed conscience by their show; anything that kindles the sensuous nature, and feeds vague graspings after helps outside of God's doctrines, mortifying to the flesh—these attract and bind poor, unpardoned sinners. The beauty of a ceremony, or the blessings of a period of bodily mortification, or satisfaction from some kindly works, lifted into higher light as a churchly performance, give a poetic beauty and satisfactory lustre to church arrangements, that please the taste and ease the conscience burdened by troublesome suggestions and convictions, but do not appeal to unpalatable principles or demand appalling self-sacrifices.

Alas! many thus rejoice in times and seasons, of whom we may be afraid. They wear a placid aspect in the dim religious light of stained glass and aerial song—moving, yet imprisoned amid groined arches and deep shadowed recesses—and in the superficial statements of saving truths. Hallowing influences must flow from external graces, that may and generally do live and exhaust themselves in the form, and have no fruit of sanctified love or beautiful and holy affections. Blushing fruits and fragrant flowers, multiplied genuflexions and artistic offertories, with many self-congratulations and lofty pride of supercilious superiority, delight an ignorant mind and gild a carnal worship. Such is truly only a false poetic religion, a travesty of the true, and not a life hid with Christ in God.

Taste and beauty are never out of place in God's worship, so that they conform to revealed truth, and are not mere human additions thereto. No more poetic religion and worship can we need than such as satisfied David, and Stephen, and Paul, and John. Humblest rites of God's Church, authorized by His Word, grow instinct and luminous with Divine light and teachings. On the wings of heaven-born Faith and Love we can soar into the empyrean of Divine communion, and through tangible, saintly symbols of worship, we can drink in the augmenting lessons of a Saviour's love in the spiritual enthusiasm of a soul, baptized into the power and beauty of holiness, and thus join the poetic members of heaven in ceaseless song. Real heart-worship is the poetry of worship.

WHY IT IS.

A correspondent of one of our exchanges asks, why in the Northern Assemblies, the chairmen of committees and the majority of members are ministers, and this while the parity of teaching and ruling elders in all official business, is a principle of Presbyterian government.

The exchange referred to intimates that it is, undoubtedly, because ministers regard themselves as a superior class, and adds that ruling elders have the power to require respect for their office.

As the questions might apply with equal or nearly equal, force in our Southern Church, we make haste to say that undoubtedly our ministers do not regard themselves as a superior class. We venture an answer.

It is right and proper that those best qualified should hold the places in which responsible duties are to be discharged, and our ministers as a class are most conversant with routine duty of our courts, and with the underlying principles and the details of our government. We are not speaking of what might be the case, or what ought to be, but what is. When our ruling elders acquire by study and attention, an aptitude and a fitness for the discharge of the duties which devolve upon members of our Church courts, there will be found every disposition to give them prominence.

So far from ministers vaunting to themselves superiority, we have always found them deploring the indisposition of ruling elders to come forward in the discussion of measures affecting the Church, and further regretting the reticence of elders when any work called for is to be performed. The kind forbearance of ministers indeed, and tolerance of mistakes occurring from inaptitude on the part of elders when they essay to do their duty, and the generous aid extended when occasion requires, have always been a source of gratification.

Individual exceptions perhaps there are, but our ministers as a class find the work of the Church falling upon them by the necessities of the case. No one regularly attending our Synods, or other courts, we dare to say, has ever had occasion to note anything like to self-seeking among our ministers.

Many of our elders belong to the learned professions, many others are prominent merchants or men of business, and as a class they are notably men of the best common sense and practical knowledge, but we cannot acquit them of a sad degree of indifference to the claims which our Church has upon them.

Speaking then for the ministers of our Church we repeat distinctly, that they will heartily rejoice if our elders will take the Revised Book, and by its careful study prepare themselves to fully share with them the responsibility, and the work of our Church government. And for our ruling elders, in justice let us say, we have never heard a word that would indicate a feeling of having been overlooked or treated with disrespect.

PUZZLED.

I experienced this morning such a sense of relief that I hasten to tell the good news. For the last six or eight weeks I have been reading accounts of the closing exercises of the different schools and of the college commencements. If these accounts be true, then we live in a wonderful age of the world. The correspondents, almost all, agree that they never listened to such thorough examinations, to such eloquent and profound orations, or to such wonderful music (by the young ladies). They tell us further that the teachers and professors were rarely if ever equaled in any other school or college in this or any other land. They tell us too that the D. Ds. and the LL. Ds., &c., were never more worthily bestowed. Then, too, the future prospects of the different schools and colleges were never so promising. And what shakes my faith is the fact that this same song has been heard for lo! these many years, and still our schools and colleges are about the same, with a very few exceptions. Bro. W. S. L. relieved me this morning, when he said the speeches at Chapel Hill were "creditable, some of them a little too long." That sounds like the truth, and is the truth, for I heard those speeches.

Without joking, Mr. Editor, don't you think that writers should be a little more moderate in the accounts they give us of what they see and hear during the closing exercises of our schools and colleges?

P. H. D.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

A full account of Commencement at Chapel Hill was furnished by our correspondent, W. S. L. We would gladly have published, as the kindness of our friend, L., and the desire to serve Chapel Hill suggested, but other demands were inexorable. Our readers missed a great deal, of course. W. S. L. always has readers and always deserves them.

Lord Beaconsfield is fast rising to the rank of the first diplomatist of Europe, if he has not already attained the position. He possesses too a rare fund of sound practical sense which he displays in smaller matters. A golden wreath, purchased with the proceeds of a penny subscription, has been tendered him. He declines and through his secretary intimates that the person through whom it is presented is seeking place.

A Baptist paper says: "Paul, in the goodness of his heart never dreamed of Presbyterianism." Possibly; yet it matters little whether he dreamed of Presbyterianism or not; he certainly preached it faithfully and practiced it fully. The apostle, for aught we know, may have dreamed of baptism by immersion, but to our mind it is very clear that he never practiced it, or had a word, even, to say in its favor. In waking moments he probably did not think of it.

Capt. Eads, the hero of the Mississippi jetties, comes forward with a proposal which completely overshadows DeLesseps's project of a Panama canal. The latter wants $150,000,000 and twenty years time to finish the canal. Eads offers, for one-third of the sum and in one-fourth of the time, to take up a loaded ship, carry it over an inclined railway of peculiar construction across the mountains and launch it on the side of the Isthmus opposite to that from which it is taken up.

The Presbyterian furnishes the following item and comment:

It is not an unusual thing to give a pastor who is going out for a summer's journey a purse to help him go and come back, but the custom has just been reversed by a Methodist church in New York city, which, learning of the purpose of the pastor to continue to occupy his pulpit throughout the heated season, sent him a check of $1,000 in recognition of his faithful work.

What a fine report this is from Iceland. Iceland the region of intense natural cold, is full of religious warmth. The Word of God is the text-book of the people. Every home has its Bible, not just as an ornament, not as the well-kept cherished marriage gift, nor because of some undefined superstitious feeling of reverence, but for daily use. In Iceland the Bible is constantly read. As a consequence, Iceland is without a theatre or prison. There is no such office as sheriff. They own no cannon, and military drill is an unknown science.

J. H. Mills, Esq., superintendent of the Oxford Orphan Asylum, furnishes the following to the press. We cannot do too much, rather, which is more to the point, we certainly do too little for them:

A small contribution, yes, a very small one from each church in the State, would furnish an ample support for all the orphans collected at Oxford; but some Churches are too prosperous to remember the orphans. We are grateful to the Methodist Church of Lamberton for two dollars and sixty-five cents forwarded to the Orphan Asylum and also waiting to hear from others. A few days ago we enjoyed the pleasure of sending a little girl to a devoted minister. He writes, "I could not have suited myself any better if I had gone." We have a few more children for childless couples.

Senator Vance has been misrepresented in regard to the Lamar difficulty with Senator Conkling. He was noticed from the gallery patting Lamar on the back, and the report naturally went out that he was encouraging him and urging him on. The fact is he was advising him to be cool, and not to say what he might afterwards regret. The statement that Mr. Vance is an accomplished duelist also does him injustice, since he has always ridiculed the code, and is really well known in his section for the manner in which he has always withheld his countenance from it.—Washington Post.

Entirely out of the line of politics as we are and shall continue to be, it affords us pleasure to publish this in justice to Senator Vance—with pleasure would we record the like in vindication of any character unjustly aspersed.

Dr. Hoge's theme at Erskine college was: "The canon of Scripture is closed and no future revelation will be needed for doctrine or duty." The Associated Reformed Presbyterian contains quite a full synopsis and characterizes the sermon thus:

"The sermon of Dr. Hoge was truly a rich treat, and was greatly appreciated by his audience who listened attentively for an hour, and all regretted that he closed so soon. He spoke without any notes with great ease and fluency, in a simple but forcible style, with much animation, and showed himself to be both the profound divine and the eloquent orator. His sermon was in the line of the Apologetics, and was a grand defence of the Bible from some of the most common and subtle forms of modern infidelity."

From lack of direct information we fell into the error of reporting the title of Doctor of Divinity as having been conferred by Hampden Sidney College upon Rev. E. Wood, of North Carolina. We had misgivings at the time. Rev. W. A. Wood, of Statesville, N. C., is the recipient of the honor, and no degree conferred by any college during the past year will be recognized as more appropriately bestowed.

Dr. Wood is known as one of the ablest and best read theologians of our State. He is in the truest sense a Doctor of Theology. And he combines with his rare attainments great power in communicating truth to others. He is one of the most effective and popular of our preachers. And as the crown of all he illustrates in his life the truth he teaches.

If all who receive this honorary degree were as deserving as Dr. Wood and Dr. Harding, the criticisms we so often hear on its bestowal would be completely disarmed.

The Interior proposes the following:

Are there too many ministers? That is the best topic ever invented for a Presbyterian newspaper. It wears like a pair of shoes made of the epidermis of a Red river sanrian, and it is waterproof—so dry as to be inimical to moisture. Dr. Poor says there are not nearly enough ministers, and he is ready to impale any one who asserts the contrary upon a whole battalion of logical bayonets. We propose a compromise and the passing around of the calumet. Let us agree (1) That there are too many ministers for the number of congregations which are able and willing to pay a living support to a pastor. (2) That there are too few ministers in proportion to the great work of evangelizing the world.

And the Christian Observer adds:

Let us suggest that there are more merchants than handsome runs of business; more doctors and lawyers than paying practices; more teachers than eligible schools; more farmers than well improved farms. This does not prove that there are too many farmers, teachers, lawyers and merchants. It only allows the public to choose its own servants. If the number of ministers were so reduced that there were only as many ministers as churches paying a good salary, it would be a great calamity to Christendom. The churches need to have the power of choice. If every minister were assured of a comfortable place and income from the moment the hands of the Presbytery were placed on his head, it would not be a good thing for the ministry.

NEWS NOTES.

Rev. J. H. Fitzgerald is on a visit to his old home in Virginia, and Rev. H. G. Hill has been preaching in the Presbyterian church at Hillsboro.

The friends of Rev. Dr. J. B. Mack of Columbia, S. C., will be pained to learn of the loss by death of his little girl Cornelia. Dr. Mack has been sick, but is improving.

The new Presbyterian church at Mt. Olive, N. C., was dedicated on Sabbath, 6th inst. Rev. Dr. J. M. Sprunt read 1 Kings viii., and preached the dedicatory sermon from Matt. xxv: 35-36. A large and attentive congregation heard the most excellent discourse. Rev. B. F. Marable preached at night, and remained to preach on Monday night.

On Sabbath, June 29th, the quarterly communion services occurred in the Newbern church. The pastor, Rev. L. C. Vass, was assisted by Rev. S. M. Smith of Washington, N. C. All the exercises of this occasion were very pleasant. There were six persons received by certificate, and three sat for the first time at the Lord's table, being admitted on profession of faith. Total additions, nine.

Rev. Cyrus Harrington writes us:

"Good Hope (colored) church, consists of over eighty members, three ruling elders and two deacons. With commendable zeal they have erected a neat and comfortable church, near Red Bluff, DeSoto parish, La. June 29th this house was dedicated to the service of God. The sermon was from Ex. iii: 2, "The burning bush." Rev. Fortune Pierre, colored licentiate, is their minister. He seems to be giving general satisfaction to the church."

In addition to those previously reported as having united with the First Presbyterian church of Wilmington, N. C., nine others have been received. On last Sabbath seventeen persons were announced, and they, with the exception of an invalid lady, sat for the first time around the table of the Lord. Christians are greatly refreshed and a hopeful seriousness prevails. Five of the above were baptized.

Rev. J. W. Kerr, M. D., who has, since the death of Rev. A. F. Dickson, been Professor of Tuscaloosa Colored Institute, retires. Rev. D. C. Rankin, pastor of the church of Tarboro, N. C., has been elected to the post.

Dr. Kerr awaits a call to duty elsewhere. On his retirement the Executive Committee of the Institute expressed their respect and their appreciation for his fidelity in the discharge of his duties.

The young ladies of Franklin Presbyterian church are fitting up the church, and in furtherance of this laudable object have sent us some articles prepared of mica, such as card cases, photograph cases, &c., for sale. They are very pretty indeed and decidedly a curiosity in this section. We are entirely out of line for the prompt disposal of them, but any ladies disposed to aid their sisters of Franklin might relieve us and help on a good work. They can be had at the PRESBYTERIAN office.

Rev. Alex. Sprunt has accepted the call to Augusta church, near Staunton, Va., and has removed thither. His postoffice will be, henceforth, Fort Defiance, Augusta county, Va. Correspondents will please note. The church was built in 1740 and it is thus one of the oldest in the valley of Virginia. It is a noteworthy fact that from that time to the present it has had but six pastors, one of whom was the venerable Dr. Speece. Here, too, was Dr. William Brown's entire special service in the ministry. The remains of the fortifications, built by the early settlers of the Valley to defend them from the Indians, are still to be seen around the church.

Our young brother carries with him to this field, energy with a just appreciation of the importance of the post.

MAJOR LYNCH'S SCHOOL.

I write only to say a few things in regard to this school, which is to open in High Point on August 27th. I have had boys educated both at Bingham School and the Lenoir School, conducted by Messrs. Faucette & Co. Such schools are a blessing to any people. But Maj. Lynch has, for fifteen years, been conceded to be one of the best teachers in the Bingham School. He is the son of one of our ministers, now gone to his reward, an elder in our Church, and was at one time a much esteemed professor at Davidson College. His assistant is a young man from Davidson, with the highest testimonials from the faculty of that institution. But this is considered to be not only a good school but one of the very cheapest in the State. Board is only nine dollars per month, and tuition thirty-five dollars for classical and twenty dollars for lower classes. And as to the morals of the boys—they will be as safe here as they can be at any place. There is no temptation to extravagance or vice of any form. There is preaching here by all four of the leading denominations. Bro. Lynch has bought valuable property, has built a handsome academy, and says that he expects to succeed, and has determined to deserve success. P. H. D.

HOLY LIVING.

The prevalent ambition to number converts and accessions to the Church, we fear, is operating largely to induce indifference to the character of these accessions. It is considered the criterion of success, the only sure seal of ministerial fidelity and ability, the chief mark of superiority in a church. This produces a rivalry which is almost sure to disregard the tests of piety and the credibility of professions. It is a sad confession that many a church and its minister look too much to its growth in numbers compared with surrounding churches. Members are received on the most slender evidence of conversion. We do not demand to be assured on this point, cannot read the heart, and are bound to accept a credible profession. But then all professions are not credible; and the painful fact is that we hear of very, very few instances of rejection or postponement for further trial. This is thought to risk too seriously the entire loss of such applicants to the church which ventures to hesitate or postpone. The result is the admission or very many unfit members. Thus the church is weakened. Its very character is changed. Its moral beauty is marred, and it ceases to that extent, to honor God.

We do not accept the theory that the church is the place intended and suited to acquire the first experience of conversion. Once received, the disposition of most persons is to assume that they are certainly Christians. If they doubted before, from their own knowledge of themselves, they consider the disposition of the Session as settling the question. It is hard to get them to reopen it, and they are prepared to resist all tests, however searching. In the Church is a very unfavorable place for correcting or even discovering the fearful mistake of a premature profession.

It is a more reasonable inquiry to ask, How many more such accessions can the Church stand? or how many more, in order to break down all its moral power in the world? We know well enough that the argument involved in such a damaging influence is entirely unsound, and that it is enough for all purposes of a true logic that there are millions whom even the captious must acknowledge to be genuine Christians according to the true standard. But we know as well the common tendency to turn away from these and look at the unfavorable examples. We know that "one sinner destroyeth much good," especially if he is a church member. And then we cannot shut our eyes to the painful fact that thousands have crowded into the Church that had better be anywhere else, whose lives are either palpably unchristian or so entirely worldly, that but for the church roll they would never be suspected of being professors of religion. It is the sorest evil under the sun. It is worse than non-profession, or open vice, or infidelity. It more dishonors God, more disparages Christianity, and its effect upon ignorant and doubting minds is worse than all these other evils combined. We have no fear of infidelity or of any of the assaults of open wickedness; but we are alarmed at the numbers of unconverted persons in the Church, the sins seemingly sanctioned by false professions made and accepted, and the low standard of piety that prevails in many quarters in God's visible kingdom.

The attention of the whole Church needs to be turned earnestly in this direction and every possible effort should be made to abate this evil. We must seek to have a purer membership—a higher standard for reception, and a higher standard of conduct after reception. We urge no rash and violent pulling up of the tares, but we do think there is a loud call for greater care in the admission of applicants for church privileges, more diligent training especially of recent professors, and a firmer discipline in dealing with offenders. Of course this discipline should be at first mild, and always kind and adapted to recover and save rather than to drive off and punish; but the mind of the whole Church needs to be directed most positively to the purification of the lives of its membership and to the elevation of the entire moral and spiritual tone of our people. We need revivals in the Church. —Southern Presbyterian.

The Abrahamic Covenant, by Rev. H. H. Hawes, of Farmville, Va., 1879, from Presbyterian Publishing Co., J. L. Shotwell, Ag't, Richmond, Va. Paper 94 pp. In fifteen short chapters this little tractate presents the scriptural authority for infant church membership and infant baptism, as growing out of God's covenant with Abraham. Mr Hawes presents here the results of many years hard study on this subject. He writes vigorously, with thorough conviction of the truth he advocates, and with convincing logic. Let those who wish to know the truth read.

Rev. S. E. Axson, of Rome, Ga., has published a book of 118 pages, pocket size, entitled: "Difficulties of the Immersion Theory."

We had intended to dip into it here and there so as to form a general opinion of its merits but we soon became so immersed in the clear and convincing reasoning presented, that we could not lay it aside till it had been thoroughly read. The writer treats the advocates of the system contended against, with becoming courtesy, but deals telling blows on every page against the theory of immersion as scriptural baptism. To us it is entirely satisfactory, and we wish every family in the land had a copy. The publication is approved by the committee of Publication of our Church. It will be sent to any address, postage paid, for twenty-five cents. Orders may be sent to Rev. S. E. Axson, or to the publisher, Albin Omberg, Rome, Ga.

The Sunrise Kingdom, or Life and Scenes in Japan, and Woman's Work for Woman There: by Mrs. Julia D. Carrothers, 1879, Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia. 12mo. 408 pp. This handsome book is a credit in its workmanship to the Presbyterian Board. Mrs. Carrothers has been in close connection with the "Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, of the Presbyterian Church," for seven years in Mission-work in Japan, this volume records the growth of that holy work from 1869 to 1877. It is brimful of interest and instruction. Manners and customs in that strange land are well exhibited in numerous and excellent illustrations. Touching pictures of the work of grace in heathen hearts are given. She gives a valuable account of the various "Women's Protestant Missionary Societies" in the United States; and of various phases of the missionary's life, and the qualifications needed for that work. It is good to walk by the side of this intelligent Christian woman in her work for seven years.

HERESY IN SCOTLAND.

The public mind of Scotland is more than ordinarily excited just now on the question of heresy. It is for the time being almost taking precedence of the ever animating disputes on politics. The newspapers are crowded with letters on the subject, and at every meeting, whether large or small, some allusion is made to it. Now it is just possible that in the excitement of the moment an undue importance may be attached to the subject, and that the real issue at stake may be overlooked. In the action taken by the Free Church against Professor Robertson Smith, and by the U. P. Church against Mr. Macrae, it must be conceded, that the rules and usages of each body have been adhered to, and that, therefore, on that ground neither of the accused parties has any legitimate ground of complaint. They are not in any sense martyrs of persecution; and whatever may be the sympathy felt for them as individuals it must not be so expressed as to imply that an act of personal injustice is being perpetrated.

Nor is it all right to represent these cases as forming in any sense a trial of the Bible or of any part of Christianity itself. The real point at issue is that the acknowledged views of Professors Smith and Macrae are antagonistic to the formulas and articles of the churches to which they belong. It is another thing whether these articles are right or wrong. They have been accepted as the standards of the churches, and only by a professed adherence to them were Mr. Smith and Mr. Macrae admitted as ministers. They can retain their position consistently only so long as they believe and teach the doctrines of the Church; and as they now proclaim a serious divergence from the Confession of Faith they are very properly called to account. It is a strict ecclesiastical procedure; and the only thing to be desired is that all the proceedings may be conducted in an open, manly, Christian way. Both the Church and the truth will then have no cause to regret the result, whatever that may be.—Scottish American Journal.

Rev. Dr. J. R. Burgett, on the 29th ult., read from the pulpit his resignation of the pastorate of the Government street Presbyterian church of Mobile. His resignation had been handed to the session but they were tardy in acting upon it. Dr. Burgett it is said assigns inability to discharge his duties, resulting from nervous prostration, as the cause of his resignation.

A correspondent writes from Lockhart, Texas, June 19th, to the Texas Presbyterian: You are aware that our church has been destroyed. We are worshiping in the Episcopal church, and holding Sunday School in the Christian church. * * * We are making an effort to put up another church, and expect to be able to have all the lumber on the ground by the 1st of September.

Rev. Messrs. W. B. Thompson and T. M. McConnell and Elder James E. Wilson, publication committee, of Nashville Presbytery, have made arrangements to open a Presbyterian Depository in Nashville, Tenn. The catechisms, hymn books and other publications of our church will be kept for sale. Mr. G. E. Thompson has been appointed colporteur and will visit the churches in Nashville Presbytery.

GENERAL.

Rev. H. C. Collisson has applied for a letter of dismission from the Reformed Episcopal Church to return to the Presbyterian Church.

An arrangement has been made by which the Southern Evangelist, a Presbyterian paper for the colored people, has been merged in the Africo-American Presbyterian, published in Wilmington, N. C.

NORTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Thomas S. Williamson, who has long been a missionary among the Indians in the Northwest, died at his residence in St. Peter, Minn., on 23d ult.

METHODIST.

Chaplain McCabe says that "once at a church extension meeting he asked Bishop Peck to exhort." The Bishop replied, "I can speak better after I give," and forthwith subscribed $500.

In 1872 eight Bishops were elected by the Methodist General Conference, and no election has been held since. Three Bishops have died during the seven years. Drs. Morris, James, and Ames. This leaves but ten Bishops to do the Episcopal work of the largest denomination in America.

LUTHERAN.

Lutherans of Central Illinois, in Synod assembled, have just told their ministers not to baptize a candidate under any circumstances by immersion.

FRIENDS.

By the decision of the Friends in Philadelphia, at their late yearly meeting, the signing of a petition for a tavern license is to be made a disciplinary offence, as is also the keeping of intoxicating liquors for a beverage in one's house.

CONGREGATIONAL.

By the death of Miss Sarah W. Clark, aged ninety-two years, who died June 11th at Newburyport, Mass., the will of Annie W. Noyes, deceased, brings $2,000 into the possession of the Massachusetts Bible Society, and about twice that amount to the Home Missionary Society of New Hampshire.

A lady residing in the State of New York has deeded a farm of 180 acres in Illinois, together with all improvements, to Rev. A. H. Clapp, D. D., of New York, and Rev. Robert West, of St. Louis, to be sold by them, and the proceeds given to the American Home Missionary Society. The farm is situated in Clay county within two miles of the county seat, and is quite valuable.

EPISCOPAL.

The Bishop of the Diocese of Northern Texas confirmed lately Mr. H. B. Dean, hitherto pastor of the Congregational Church in Paris, Texas.

Right Rev. J. H. D. Wingfield, D. D., Missionary Bishop of Northern California, has decided to decline the election of bishopric of Louisiana, and will remain at Benicia, California.

The solemn ceremonies of consecrating Rev. Henry Channcey Reilley, the first Episcopal Bishop of Mexico, took place in Trinity Church, Pittsburg, Pa., June 24th. At 10 o'clock the clergy, about fifty in number, entered the church in procession. The Nicene Creed was recited by the clergy and congregation, and the consecration service followed. The Bishops present were Lee, of Delaware, who presided in the absence of the venerable Bishop Smith, of Kentucky, who was unable to be present on account of illness; Stevens, of Pennsylvania, Howe, of Central Pennsylvania, Keerfoot, of Pittsburgh, Littlejohn, of Long Island, Bedell, of Ohio, and Coxe, of Western New York.

PRESBYTERIAN (REFORMED).

The Reformed Presbyterian College has removed from Geneva, Ohio, to Beaver Falls, Pa. The Harmony Society has given to the object ten acres of land admirably situated between the two railroads, near the borough limits, on high ground, affording a magnificent view of the valley. The people of Beaver Falls and vicinity will subscribe some $10,000 toward the erection of the buildings.

BAPTIST.

Eleven years ago a colporteur of the American Baptist Publication Society gathered eleven Baptists together in Council Bluffs, Iowa. Mrs. Thickstun became pastor. During the last four years, while struggling with the building of the new house, Mrs. Thickstun has canvassed large portions of the country East, North, and South, soliciting aid, and by a discretion, tact and persistence rarely equalled, has raised several thousand dollars. The Church has cost $11,400, and was dedicated without debt.

MISCELLANY.

A kind of tile or plate of much the same shape as shingles, but of course much more durable and much lighter, bids fair to supersede the former article for roof covering. These tiles make roofs practically fire proof and are said in many places to be as inexpensive as shingles.

Twelve sets of telephones have been sent out to Sir Garnet Wolseley for use at the seat of war in South Africa. The great advantage of the telephone over the telegraph is that the General can carry on confidential talk with the officer at the distant station, and a soldier can creep out towards the enemy's lines and whisper back the information as to position. A fine wire—the thinner the better—is all that is needed. This the soldier carries on a reel upon his back, a mile weighing only a few pounds. This will be the first use the telephone has been used as an instrument of warfare.

The Catlin Collection of Indian Portraits and Curiosities was, while it was on exhibition some years ago in Berlin, seized for debt. Mr. Joseph Harrison, Jr., of Philadelphia, became, from patriotic motives, its purchaser and having rescued it from dispersion brought it back to America. Mrs. Harrison, it is now, has now presented it to the government and it has been placed in the Smithsonian Institution, where it will be put in thematic order, and then removed to the National Museum. Professor Baird, in a letter thanking Mrs. Harrison for the gift, speaks highly of the collection as an aid to the study of ethnology.

Sponge farming is a new industry. The Christian Union says: "According to German authority, sponge-growing may be made a profitable branch of industry. The method of cultivation consists in cutting the sponges into small pieces, attaching them to a wooden frame-work, and sinking it in the sea in locations favorable to their natural growth. In three years such pieces will have attained a marketable size. The total cost of raising 4,000 sponges (including interest on capital expended) is estimated to be $45, while the income for their sale $80, leaving a net profit of $35. As the growing sponges, after their first immersion, require no attention, it will be readily perceived that the quantity thus propagated could be indefinitely increased. As the Gulf coast and Florida have annually produce over $100,000 worth of sponges naturally, it is very probable that their income might be largely increased by judicious cultivation.

ECLECTICISMS.

QUITE SO.

Central Presbyterian:

It might be argued that a person who never took a religious paper never felt the need of one, and was therefore well-enough-informed without it. Why not add that the man who has no religion never felt his need of it, and is therefore well-enough-to-do without? But true happiness consists in the discovery and the supplying of our necessities. "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled."

RESPONSIBILITY.

Zion's Herald:

The sense of "personal responsibility" as to Daniel Webster the most impressive consideration. And well it might be! How overwhelming is the thought that you and I must give account of our conduct to the great Judge! In this world we are jostled in among the crowd; we sin in company; our lives are braided, as it were, with a myriad other lives; but God sees us separately, and will unravel those strands, and cause us to give separate accounts of our part in these world transactions. How shall a man trained to act in concert be able to stand alone?

REDEMPTION ASSURED.

Methodist Recorder:

The young convert thinks that Christ has slain all his enemies. This is a mistake. Christ has killed none of the soul's foes. He has come into the believer's life to regenerate the will, to control the affections, and to put omnipotence into the heart. Christ coming in a man grapples with all the evil passions, and subdues them. Sword-blades of good and evil are continually crossing in a man's nature; but the grace of God turns victory on the side of virtue. The quickened soul, companied with Jesus as an Indweller, puts all enemies to flight. When a man begins to breathe from God, he begins to live. He assumes immortality, and the redemption of soul and body are assured.

CULTIVATE LOVE.

Dr. Holmes:

I had rather eat my dinner off the head of a barrel, or dress after the fashion of John the Baptist in the wilderness, or sit on a block all my life, than consume all myself before I got to a home, and take so much pains with the outside that the inside was as hollow as an empty nut. Beauty is a great thing, but beauty of garment, house and furniture and tawdry ornaments compared with domestic love. All the elegance in the world will not make a home, and I would give more for a spoonful of real, hearty love than for whole shiploads of furniture, and all the gorgeousness that all the upholsterers in the world could gather.

STRENGTH COMES FROM EXERCISE.

S. S. Times:

A man acquires physical strength by put-forth his strength. The arm that would shrivel if unused grows muscular and stalwart with much exercise. Money is made by its risking, not by its hoarding. Grain lives by dying. It springs up by being buried. The mind gains most by giving out, not by taikng in. Telling a thing to another fixes it the firmer in one's own mind. Teaching is the chiefest help to learning. Struggling against danger is safer than shrinking from danger. A man overtaken on a plain by a blinding snow-storm would peril his life by crouching down in the hope of evading the pitiless blast, when he might save his life by rising up to trample under foot the snow as it falls. So in the higher sphere of moral action, it is by encountering evil, not by shunning it, that the Christian keeps himself pure, and makes highest attainment in the divine life. It is by seeking the welware of others that he best promotes his own welware. It is by counting not his life dear, that his life becomes precious. It is by a spirit of absolute dependence that he rises to supremest independence.

A TRUE REVIVAL.

Southern Presbyterian:

A true revival of the missionary spirit would be the true revival of the Church. Frequent and generous contributions to Foreign Missions would help every other good cause, and would serve as a powerful tonic to the feeble piety which is now so common and which finds expression in complaining of the many calls from a perishing world for help.

HOW TO HANDLE THEM.

Christian Intelligencer:

Now we do not say that ministers and other intelligent and Christian people should ignore or refuse to study and understand these subtle and imposing forms of error. But they should be handled as the chemist and physician handle poisons. They should be understood and labeled and used like these powerful chemicals, which are harmless enough under proper care, and utterly destructive when not properly employed. It is one thing to use alcohol for mechanical and medical and all scientific purposes, but it is quite another thing to saturate the body and ruin the mind and destroy the soul and the home with it as an intoxicant.

KNOWLEDGE.

Christian Advocate:

We want our Methodist people to be intelligent as well as pious, because knowledge is power. But they can only become intelligent by obeying Paul's admonition to Timothy, "Give attendance to reading." Parents of families are under a solemn obligation to provide a healthy religious literature for their children. If they are not thus furnished by wise parental care, they will furnish themselves with what may be unwholesome, or even pernicious. Already the enemy has stealthily entered many dwellings. Already the tares have been sown in many youthful hearts, while the parents have been sleeping, or declaring they could not afford to take a good family paper. Already, in many instances, permanent injury has been done to the children of many Christian parents by bad books and papers.

MISSIONS.

J. W. Reid, in Methodist Recorder:

Others object, that we have heathen at home; "that charity begins at home." You who raise this objection, how much do you give to Home Missions? How much do you contribute that the poor of your neighborhood may have the Gospel preached to them? If there are heathen at home, whose fault is it? Has not charity had time to commence her domestic duties? If a thousand years are too short a period for the mere work of benevolence at home, how many thousands are to elapse before the ends of the earth will be blessed? We have no right to detain the Gospel at home. It belongs to the whole world. We defraud the heathen when we withhold it.

WORTHY OF NOTE.

Texas Christian Advocate:

Right at this point will be a good place to record the observation from rather extended travel on "our circuit," viz: that we have yet to find a church in city or town or country where dancing has prevailed among the young members, and met the approval of those who are older, from which a genuine revival of religion has been reported since the date of this departure from the usages of Methodism. In many of these churches a large proportion of members, if not as dead as was Sisera when the nail in Jael's hand was driven through his brain, are as lukewarm as was the church of Laodicea, whom God threatened to "spew out of His mouth."

SECULAR NEWS.

The prospect of a cessation of the famine in Cashmere is gradually improving.

Thirty one men were killed by a colliery explosion in High Blantyre Pit, near Glasgow.

The blackberry trade of Salem, N. C. is said to have amounted to $450,000 in three years.

Owing to the dullness of trade and the general feeling of insecurity, the Industrial Exhibition contemplated for Moscow, in 1880, has been postponed one year.

An insurrection in Hayti has thus far resulted in the killing of thirty men, arresting many others and the rout of the insurgents. The leader General Parisan has escaped.

A boy who says his name is Charley Ross resides at Farmham, Quebec, Canada. He is in charge of a man who cannot speak English and who is paid to take care of him.

Negotiations for peace between England and Zululand are progressing. Terms will be hard for the Zulus, but they are supposed to be willing to accept anything that may be afforded.

The negotiations between Prince Bismarck and the Pope concerning religious differences between Germany and the Vatican are said to be progressing in a way favorable to Romish interests.

Prof. L. W. Colgrave and Miss Emma Allison made a balloon ascension from California. The balloon fell in the bay and after dragging two miles through the water surface threw the occupants out on land. They were bruised badly.

The Nationale, of Paris, says that in the council of Ministers, M. Lepere, Minister of the Interior, estimated that in consequence of the bad crops, purchases of foreign grain would amount to twenty million pounds sterling.

The Secretary of War has directed the Quartermaster's Department to receive from parties living at or near military posts any articles intended for the National Museum, and forward them to Washington under the regulations governing military property.

A fire occurred in Wilmington at 3 o'clock of Sunday morning last. An explosion occurred which would have doubtless done great damage had persons been freely stirring. The building standing at what is known as Eiler's corner was partially destroyed. The engines soon mastered the flames.

A terrible wind storm swept over the Northwestern States on July 3rd. Houses were demolished at Elkhorn, Dacotah territory. At Lemors, Iowa, two men were killed by a barn demolished. In Minnesota and Wisconsin the wind was accompanied with terrific thunder and lightning and an unprecedented fall of rain. Several persons were killed.

An important Supreme Court decision has been rendered. It holds that stockholders of the former Commercial Bank of Wilmington, are no longer liable for debts of that institution, as no application was made for a receiver or trustee within three years after the dissolution of the Bank.

The Attorney General of the United States advises U. S. Marshals to continue performance of the duties, as heretofore. No provision has been made for the payment of the fees of themselves or deputies. He thinks that the government would be under obligation to pay for services rendered, though future legislation will be necessary to allow payment.

The Raleigh News says: Rev. Dr. Miller, of Charlotte, has been collecting important documents for some time, connected with the Mecklenburg Declaration. The Southern Home says but does not give his name: He has received documents from England, Massachusetts, and other points, which will show that the "Hornets' Nest" of Mecklenburg did actually rebel, and that resolutions of defiance to the British crown were in truth passed. His treatment of the subject will create a sensation when it does appear.

One L. W. Lindsay, who calls himself Capt. Lindsay, and sometimes Dr. Lindsay, and who professes to be a photographer and artist, and claims to be a member of the Presbyterian Church, and makes himself prominent in the Sunday schools and church services wherever he goes, is a clever, shrewd take-in, a complete fraud, a consummate rascal. He has been operating at Statesville, Lincolnton, Lenior, Taylorsville, Olin, and whenever he could he has shamefully swindled the people by falsehood under the guise of the basest hypocrisy.—Wadesboro Herald.

Wesleyan Female Institute is located at Staunton, Va. The climate of the section is said to be one of the healthiest in the world, and the scenery of the section is picturesque. The school has pupils from seventeen States, and requires strict economy, especially in dress.

Indigestion.

The main cause of nervousness is indigestion, and that is caused by weakness of the stomach. No one can have sound nerves and good health without using Hop Bitters to strengthen the stomach, purify the blood, and to keep the liver and kidneys active, to carry off all the poisonous and waste matter of the system. See other column.

GOSSAMER HAMMOCKS.

Every one should own a good Hammock. There is no other one article that will give one-half so much enjoyment in warm weather as a hammock stretched in the shade, and any-one who does not own one misses much of the pleasure to be obtained in the summer months. If you are going on a vacation into the woods or to the seashore, take a Hammock with you; it will repay its cost hundreds of times. The most common Hammock in the country is the imported Mexican Grass Hammock; this is made of vegetable fibre and soon rots and unravels. The Hammock we offer is the Union Gossamer Interwove Hammock, made of doubled and twisted cotton cord, knotted at every mesh. It can be cut almost to pieces, yet it will not unravel, and it will never rot. They weigh almost nothing and can be carried in the pocket. They are handsomely trimmed in red and blue, with nickel [illegible] postpaid, 20 cents extra. SPAULDING & CO., Gen'l Agents, 43 Washington St., Boston, Mass. Special terms to the trade.

CHARLOTTE INSTITUTE.
SESSION BEGINS SEPTEMBER 10, 1879.

Testimonials as to the Thoroughness and High Standard of the Instruction at this Institute for Young Ladies.

"C. M. I." Charlotte, N. C., May 19th, 1879.

We have personally inspected some of the examination papers of the Charlotte Institute for Young Ladies and the work of the pupils upon them. The examinations are searching, and the pupils' work gives evidence of instruction as careful and thorough as that afforded in our best male schools. We are satisfied that the Distinctions and Certificates of Proficiency awarded by the Institute are good criteria of the attainments of those who receive them. From our knowledge of the Principal's success here and elsewhere in the instruction of young ladies, we cordially recommend the Institute to those who seek a thorough education for their daughters.

WM. CAIN, Prof. Math., &c., 'C. M. I."
M. M. HARGROVE, Prof. of Latin, &c., 'C. M. I."

Having personally inspected the examination papers of the Charlotte Institute for Young Ladies and the work of the pupils upon them, I am prepared to pronounce the course extended and the instruction thorough. I think the papers would compare favorably with those handed in by the best male schools of the State. A certificate that a pupil had successfully passed such examinations would be sufficient evidence of her attainments to any one who knew their character.

WM. W. CARSON, Prof. Mat., Davidson College, N. C.

"Having long known the Rev. Wm. R. Atkinson, as a student of the South Carolina College, subsequently of the University of Virginia, and (from personal examination of his work) as a successful teacher of Mathematics and the Natural Sciences, I can very cordially give my testimony to his fine culture, and to his skill as an accomplished instructor.

Mr. Atkinson is an honor to his profession, and his School is well worthy of the patronage of those who seek a thorough education for their daughters.

[From Charles B. Bradley, Professor of Thorough Bass, and Band Master, Dana's Musical Institute.]

"Prof. Aloys Bidez has for two years been my fellow teacher in Dana's Musical Institute, Warren, O. I have known him all the time to be faithful to his duties and painstakings in his department which was that of the Piano. This department greatly improved under his care, either through his peculiar method of teaching, or through the studies and musical works he introduced. He has always won the respect and friendship of every one of his pupils through his firmness and kindness. He has shown himself proficient in Thorough-Bass, Harmony and Orchestration; and when at one time he was in charge of the Vocal Department of this Institute, he also proved himself a thorough teacher of Vocal Music.

[From Rev. C. B. Hulbert, President of Middlebury College, Vermont.]

"It gives me pleasure to commend Miss Susan A. Sherman as a lady of high personal culture, and especially accomplished in her chosen profession as an Artist. A niece of the celebrated Boston Artist and Portrait Painter, Albert G. Hoyt, Esq., she early caught an inspiration from his works, and manifested something of his genius. The fine opportunities she has enjoyed from early youth, the excellent school in which she was drilled in art-culture, and the long experience she has had as a teacher, with its acknowledged success, combine to make her a rare acquisition to any Institution of Collegiate Training."

C. B. HULBERT.

N. B.—The entire corps of the able and experienced teachers of the last session has become permanently connected with the Institute. For terms or any information address the Principal,

THE BUFFALO LITHIA WATERS,
For Malarial Poisoning, Especially Hepatic Diseases and Malarial Fevers.
Testimony of Distinguished Medical Men:
MALARIOUS FEVERS.

Extract from Letter of Dr. Wm. T. Howard, of Baltimore, Professor of Diseases of Women and Children in the University of Maryland, of August 1st, 1873.

Dr. Howard compares these waters with those of the celebrated Greenbrier White Sulphur, West Virginia, and adds the following:

The Greenbrier White Sulphur Waters will be recognized by all informed upon such subjects as one of the most noted Mineral Fountains of the World.

"Indeed, in a certain class of cases, it is much superior to the latter. I allude to the abiding debility attendant upon the tardy convalescence from grave acute diseases; and more especially to the cachexia and sequels incident to MALARIOUS FEVERS IN ALL THEIR GRADES AND VARIETIES."

* * * * * * * * In short, were I called upon to state from what mineral waters I have seen the greatest and most unmistakable amount of good accrue in the largest number of cases in a general way, I would unhesitatingly say the BUFFALO SPRINGS, in Mecklenburg county, Virginia."

—o—

Extract from Letter of the late Dr. Thos P. Atkinson, of Danville, Va., Ex-President State Medical Society, dated August 15th, 1874.

"The Buffalo Lithia Waters have unquestionably displayed great power in the peculiar diseases of the warm, miasmatic regions of the South, which may be grouped together under the general head of Malarial Cachexia, covering Hepatic Engorgements, Enlargements of the Spleen, Jaundice, &c."

"It is not pretended that these Waters possess any anti-periodic properties, such as belong to Quinine—At the same time, however, it is unquestionably true, that in the intermittent and remittent fevers in a chronic form, they have in numerous instances, given relief in cases which had obstinately resisted all the anti-periodic drugs of the shops. From my experience with them, I feel fully warranted in saying that, with rare exceptions, whenever disease is found originating under malarial influence, a potent remedy may be found in this water."

—o—

Extract from a Letter of Dr. John C. Coleman, of Halifax county, Va., (prior to the War a surgeon of the U. S. Navy, now retired) dated near Scottsburg, Va., January 1st, 1879.

"Perhaps no claim made for the Buffalo Lithia Waters is more thoroughly established than that they are a powerful antidote to malarial poison in all its forms and varieties. In that large class of disorders, included in term Malarial Cachexia, embracing Engorgement of the Liver and Spleen, Jaundice, Indigestion, Dropsies and Neuralgias, of which the warm malarious districts of the South are so prolific, the action of these waters as a general rule is most decided and happy, and oftentimes astonishing. In Chronic Intermittent and Remittent Fevers, they are especially efficacious. I presume there is no season at these Springs in which some cases of this character do not find relief from these Waters, which have before baffled the healing art."

—o—

Extract from Letter of Dr. Alfred Plumber, of Manson, N. C., dated March 16, 1874.

"I have known the Buffalo Springs of Mecklenburg county, Va., for twenty-five years, and have sent many patients to them. In Chronic Intermittent and Remittent Fever, and in all diseases originating in malarial poison, I have found their action almost that of a charm. I have sent young ladies to these Springs so enfeebled from this influence as to be scarcely able to walk across a floor, and in a few weeks they would become so invigorated as to be able to dance half of every night."

—o—

These springs open for guests the 1st day of June. The water in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, $5.00 per case at the springs. Springs pamphlets sent to any address.

Beautiful Things.

Beautiful faces are those that wear—
It matters little if dark or fair—
Whole-souled honesty printed there

Beautiful eyes are those that show,
Like crystal panes where heart-fires glow,
Beautiful thoughts that burn below.

Beautiful lips are those whose words
Leap from the heart like songs of birds,
Yet whose utterance prudence girds.

Beautiful hands are those that do
Work that is earnest and brave and true,
Moment by moment the long day through.

Beautiful feet are those that go
On kindly ministries to and fro—
Down lowliest ways, if God wills it so.

Beautiful shoulders are those that bear
Ceaseless burdens of homely care
With patient grace and daily prayer.

Beautiful lives are those that bless
Silent rivers of happiness,
Whose hidden fountains but few may guess.

—Littell's Living Age.

Edward the Black Prince.

The sun rose brightly over the little village of Crecy on the morning of Saturday, the 26th August, 1346. The golden corn was standing in the fields, the cattle were quietly grazing in the meadows, the birds were twittering in the woods; and in the still morning air rose the gentle murmur of a joyous stream. Everything spoke of peace that bright summer morning; little could one have dreamed that before that sun should have set in the West, the din and thunder of battle would wake the echoes of those quiet woods, or that those sunny fields would be torn and desolated by the angry tread of thousands of feet, or strewn with heaps of dead or dying! Yet so it was to be. A large army was even then halting in the cover of the forest over against the village, and far, far away, if any one had listened, might have been heard, mingling with the voice of the morning, the sound of a great host of horsemen and soldiers advancing in hot pursuit, and now and then a trumpet blast which echoed faintly among the hills.

The English soldiers as they rose from their beds of turf and grass, heard those far-off sounds and knew—who better?—they must fight like men to-day or perish.

So they sprang to their feet and seized their arms and armour, ready at any instant to obey the summons of action.

Suddenly, along the ranks came the cry, "The king and the prince!" and directly afterwards appeared the great King Edward III., of England riding slowly down the line of his army, and at his side a stately boy of sixteen years, dressed in black armour and mounted on a black horse. Never was a king more honored or king's son more loved, than were these two as they passed with cheery word and dauntless bearing among their loyal and devoted soldiers.

The king stopped when he had reached a spot from which a good portion of his host could hear him, and raised his hand.

Every man stood silent as he spoke.

"My loyal subjects, we must meet to-day a host greater than us in number, but not greater in valor. Fight, I charge you, for the honor of your country. My son here leads the first division of my army. This is his first battle, and sure I am he will acquit himself like a man. Do you the same, and God will give us the victory."

With such encouraging and confident words the king addressed his men, who cheered him and the brave prince long and loud.

Then every man took his helmet and his bow and waited for the enemy.

The morning passed, but still no foe appeared. But the distant murmur was now grown to a loud and ever-increasing din; and as they sat, the English could hear shouts and the neighing of horses and the tumult of many voices, which betokened the near approach of the host of King Philip of France.

It was not till about three in the afternoon that the French army came in sight of Crecy. They had had a rapid, a fatiguing march, since day-break, and were now in no condition, even with their vastly superior numbers, to grapple with the fresh and inspirited Englishmen. So thought and said many of Philip's officers, and did their best to persuade him to put off the encounter till next day.

But however much Philip might have been inclined to adopt this good advice, his army was in such a state of confusion and disorder, owing to their rapid march, that they were quite unmanageable. When the officers bade those in front to halt, those behind, shouting and impatient, still pressed on, so much so that the king and all the nobles were carried along with them into the very face of the English, who stood awaiting the attack.

When Philip saw the collision could not be put off, that the battle was inevitable, he shouted loudly.

"Bring forward the Genoese bowmen!"

Now these bowman, 15,000 in number, on whom Philip depended to scatter and drive from the field the main portion of his enemy's force, were in no sort of condition for begining a battle, after their long fatiguing march, and with the strings of their crossbows all loose with damp, and with a dazzling sun now glaring full in their eyes. But Philip, too confident to heed any such trifles, impatiently, nay, angrily, ordered them to the front, and bade them shoot a volley against the English archers, who stood opposite.

So these foreigners stepped forward, and as their manner was, gave three leaps in the air, with the idea of terrifying their foes, and then raised their bows to their cheeks, and let fly their arrows wildly in the direction of the English.

The trusty English archers, with the sun behind them, were not the men to be intimidated by leaping into the air, nor panic-struck by a discharge so ill-aimed that scarce one arrow in ten even grazed their armor.

Their reply to the Genoese was a sudden step forward, and a sharp determined twang of their bow-strings. Then the air was white with the cloud of their arrows, and next moment the foremost ranks of the Genoese were seen to drop like one man.

This was enough for those already dispirited hirelings. They fell back in panic disorder; they cut their bow-strings; they rushed among the very feet of the horsemen that Philip, in his rage, had ordered "to ride forward and cut down the cowardly villians!" Then the confusion of the French army was complete.

The English followed up their first advantage steadily and quickly. Knight after knight of the French dropped from his horse, troop after troop fell back, standard after standard tottered.

Nowhere was the fight fiercer than where the young Black Prince led the van of the English: and from a windmill on a near hill, the eager eyes of King Edward watched with pride that figure clad in black armor even in the thick of the fight, and never halting an instant where danger of duty called.

It would be too long to tell of all the fighting that day. Philip, with his great army, could not dislodge his compact foe from their position, nor could he shelter his men from the deadly flight of their arrows. Bravely he rushed himself into the fray to rally his men, but to no avail. Everywhere they fell back before their invincible enemy.

Once, indeed, it seemed as if his brave knights would surround and drive back the division of which the boy prince was leader. An English noble sent post haste a messenger to Edward to say, "Send help; the prince is in danger."

But Edward knew more of battles than most of his officers. He replied, coolly:

"Is the prince slain?"
"No."
"Is he wounded?"
"No."
"Is he struck down?"
"No."

"Then go, tell him the battle he has won so far shall be his, and his own. To-day he must win his own spurs."

The words flew like wildfire among the English ranks, and our brave men fought with renewed valor.

That evening, as the sun was getting low in the West, Philip and his host turned their backs on Crecy and fled—all that were left of them, and anywhere, to be out of the reach of the army of that invincible boy. Horseman and footmen, bag and baggage, they fled, with the English close at their heels, and never drew rein till night and darkness put an end to the pursuit.

Meanwhile, there was rejoicing and thanksgiving on the field of Crecy. The English king hastened from his post of observation, and, in the presence of the whole army, embraced his brave son, and gave him the honors of that glorious victory, wherein two kings, eleven princes, 1,200 knights, and 30,000 men had fallen. A sad price for glory!

"Sweet son," said he, "God give you good perseverance. You are my true and valiant son, and have this day shown yourself worthy of a crown."

And the brave boy bowed low before his father, and modestly disclaimed the whole glory of the victory.

Loud and long did the loyal knights and soldiers cheer their brave king and their heroic prince; and when they saw the latter bind on his helmet the plume of three ostrich feathers, worn by the most illustrious of his slain foeman, John, King of Bohemia, with the noble motto, "Ich dien" ("I serve") beneath, the enthusiasm knew no bounds. And the motto has descended from prince to prince since then, and remains to this day as a glorious memorial of this famous boy, who earned it by doing his duty in the face of danger, and setting an example to all about him that "he who serves rules."—Boy's Own Paper.

Faithful Sandie.

Dean Stanley in the course of a recent sermon to children in Westminister Abbey, told a touching story of an Edinburgh street boy. Two gentlemen were standing at the door of a hotel one very cold day, when a little boy with a thin blue face, his feet bare and red with the cold, and with nothing to cover him but a bundle of rags, came and said: "Please sir, buy some matches." "No, don't want any," the gentleman said. "But they are only a penny a box," the poor little fellow pleaded. "Yes but you see we don't want a box," the gentleman said again. "Then I will gie ye twa boxes for a penny," the boy said at last, and so to get rid of him, the gentleman who tells the story says, "I bought a box; but then I found I had no change, so I said, 'I will buy a box tomorrow.' 'Oh, do buy them to-night, please,' the boy pleaded again; 'I will run and get ye the change, for I am verra hungry.' So I gave him the shilling and he started away. I waited for him but no boy came. Then I thought I had lost my shilling; still there was that in the boy's face I trusted and I did not like to think bad of him. Late in the evening I was told a boy wanted to see me; when he was brought in I found it was a smaller brother of the boy that got my shilling; but, if possible, still more ragged and poor and thin. He stood a moment diving into his rags as if he was seeking something, and then said: 'Are you the gentleman that bought the matches fra Sandie?' 'Yes.' 'Weel, then, here's fourpence out o' yer shilling; Sandie cannot come; he is very ill; a cart ran over him and knocked him down, and he lost his bonnet and his matches and your sevenpence, and both his legs are broken, and the doctor says he'll die, and that's a'.' And then putting the fourpence on the table, the poor child broke down into great sobs." The two little things lived alone, their father and mother being dead. Poor Sandie was lying on a bundle of shavings. He said: "I got the change sir, and was coming back; and then the horse knocked me down, and both my legs were broken; and oh, Reuby! little Reuby! I am sure I am dying, and who will take care of you when I am gone? What will ye do Rugby?" The kind hearted gentleman took the lad's hand and said he would always take care of Reuby. Poor Sandy had just enough strength to look up as if to thank his protector, and then the light went out of his blue eyes forever.—N. Y. Tribune.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Velvet Grass—Meadow Soft Grass.

Among the numerous specimens of grass sent us to be named, none occur more frequently than the Velvet-Grass, or Meadow Soft Grass (Holcus lanatus). This grass is in itself so handsome and so unlike in appearance to other grasses with which it may grow, that it is sure to attract the attention even of those who are not especially observant. Though the books generally speak of it as occuring in moist meadows, we have often found it on the poorest sandy knolls, where little else flourishes. It grows in turf, a foot or two high from a perennial root; its leaves and sheaths are of a very pale green, being densely clothed with short soft hairs, which make them velvety to the touch, and have suggested the common names given above. The flowers are in a rather regular panicle which is very pale and often with a reddish tinge that increases its beauty. The structure of the spikelets, or flowers as they are popularly regarded, is so peculiar that the grass may at once be identified by those who look closely at such things. Those who are attracted to this grass by its showy appearance, are disappointed to learn that it is worthless as a forage plant. The European writers upon grasses mention it as a weed, the introduction of which into meadows and pastures is to be avoided. This grass presents one among many instances where a plant may be worthless in one locality and of value in another. While it is stated that animals will eat all the surrounding herbage and leave the Velvet-Grass untouched, we have had letters saying that animals prefered this to all other grasses. Both statements are true; the first has reference to localities where there is an abundance of better grasses, and the other from States where the grasses are few in number and generally of a quality inferior to this. As we advise our friends upon the northern border to grow crab apples if they can raise no others, so we say to those living far south, raise Velvet-Grass, if that is the best that will grow with you. But it appears that Velvet-Grass has other uses. In that very creditable Report on the Grasses of Tennessee, by Col. Killebrew, the State Commissioner of Agriculture, it is stated that this is unequalled as a grass for lawns. It has been very difficult to find a grass suitable for lawns in the Southern States, and should this do as well further south as it is reported to do in Tennessee, it will meet with great favor. According to the Report: "a yard turfed over with this grass presents a most lovely appearance, and looks as if spread with a velvet carpet." The same Report quotes Mr. Gregory of North Carolina, in favor of its utility as a hay crop; he says that "Orchard Grass in the same field will not compare with it." There now comes from North Carolina a still more important statement as to the value of Velvet-Grass. Prof A. R. Ledoux, who is doing much good work as Chemist in charge of the Experiment Station at Chapel Hill, N. C., sends us an interesting letter from one of his correspondents—one who is evidently intelligent and has given much attention to the relation of grasses to the agriculture of the State. This gentleman writes in reference to Velvet-Grass: "I have come to the conclusion that it is about the only thing that it will pay to use to recuperate the worn out lands of the South. I believe this grass to be very valuable; on the driest lands or on the wettest bottoms, it grows about as high as oats on the same land, and where it is too poor for other grasses to grow. I sow it with Red-top on poor lands, mow occasionally for two or three years, and then turn under and sow Orchard-Grass with Clover, I let these stand for some time, and when they are turned under, my land will bring eight or ten barrels of corn to the acre. I usually keep 80 acres in grass, 80 in corn, and 80 in cotton, rotating as the sod gets too tough. Orchard-Grass, Clover, and Timothy will not grow upon land so poor as where this grass (the Velvet) will make a fair crop." This is a more important matter to Southern farmers than those who have no difficulty in raising a crop of grass can understand. If this Velvet-Grass, turned under, will prepare poor land for Orchard Grass and Clover, it is a great boon to Southern agriculture, and we thank Prof. Ledoux for allowing us to make use of the above quoted letter in advance of his annual Report.—American Agriculturist.

The Lost Ten Tribes.

In reply to the query which appeared in the Ladies' Own Journal, of Edinburgh, from one anxious to be informed "if the members of that peculiar tribe, the Rankinites, who are located in the East of Glasgow, are descended of the lost ten tribes of Israel, and if so, are they of the House of Israel or of the House of Judah?" a correspondent says, "They are of the House of Israel, for we know from Bible and other history that the tribes of the House of Judah were never lost—although they were in Babylonish captivity for 70 years—and are the Jews of the present day. But we read in Genesis xxviii. 14, that the House of Israel would be spread abroad to the west, east, north, and south, and we also know by Bible history that the House of Israel went into Assyrian captivity 725 years B. C.; then we have ample proof from the classic historians—viz, Strabo, Herodotus, Diodorus, Pliny and Ptolemy—that our ancestors came from the parts of the globe where Israel was lost. Edward Hine, the living historian and lecturer, has published in his little magazine forty-seven identifications of the British nation with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel, founded upon 300 Scripture proofs, and 120,000 copies of the admirable little magazine have already been sold. Hence we have no reason to doubt that the peculiar tribe of Rankinites, which has been for the last forty years located in the East End of Glasgow, are lineal descendants of the lost tribes of Israel. They keep themselves by themselves, associating with no others, except in a work or business capacity; and during the long period of forty years have held all their meetings in their club rooms, No. 2, Greenville street, Calton, Glasgow, and any person acquainted with the doctrines of physiognomy, ethnology, and anthropology, will at once discern them to be of Oriental descent. There is one among their number who can speak a little Hebrew, and also sing a lively Hebrew song. They have a king of their own who settles all little disputes that may arise among themselves; he is a very remarkable old man, being well versed in many of the grand arts and sciences, and at all times able and willing to amuse and instruct his fellow men; and, like King Solomon of old, there are many, like the Queen of Sheba, who call on him from many parts of the country to see and hear his wisdom, for he has at all times exemplified the virtues of friendship, courtesy, forgiveness, hospitality, patience, forbearance, gentleness, gratitude, brotherly love, relief and truth. He is considered to be one of the best carvers on wood in the world, the Children of the Sun and Moon not excepted—the only instrument he uses being a pocket knife of Oriental make, for there is stamped on the blade, "Syria, 22d day of the Ides of March year of Rome 788." With this knife he makes some of the handsomest walking sticks ever seen in Britain or any other country. He has made sticks for some of the most eminent clergymen in the land, the device of them being a serpent—cut life-like round the stick from one end to the other, the head being at the handle—emblematical of the primitive serpent that deceived old mother Eve in the Garden of Eden.—Scottish American Journal.

A Plea for Fancy Work.

Men exclaim against it as foolish; utilitarians, as a waste of time; while philanthropists too often denounce it as wicked. We would reply to the first that no work, however small, is worthless if it add to the cheer and attractiveness of home. To the second, that zest, diversity, and change of interest are usually real economy rather than waste of time. And bid the third look to the hill-side, where soon the "blossoming trees" of countless orchards will be tossing their fragrant "foam of promise" against the blue spring skies, and remember that the same Hand crowned the earth not only with fruitfulness, but beauty, so that even the fields of corn fluttering soft wealth of silken tassels, and of wheat bending the ripeness of their golden heads, are a perpetual delight not only to the eye of the husbandman, but the artist. Perhaps the mother may sometimes forget her mending over her tidy, but so she might over her book; and is she for that reason to renounce everything aside from her routine tasks? And true as it is, to whoever strives for self-culture, that spare moments are the "gold dust of time," yet often the mind is too weary with the friction of trial or care to enjoy even the favorite author. But more than all, with most women fancy-work is the one expression for the æsthetic sides of their natures—the artistic taste that lies, though perhaps dormant, in the heart of nearly every woman. Few can be artists or sculptors, but to see silks and worsteds assume form and beauty under their fingers give something of the same creative delight that in a fuller measure thrills the heart of Rosa Bonheur or Harriet Hosmer. We know a lady who, embroidering a table spread, and lacking patterns, gathered flowers from the garden for models. Was not hers the artist's skill, though she wrought without palette or brush? Moreover, the love of fancy work is no sign of a weak or frivolous mind. Matilda of Flanders gave to England a history in her Bayeaux tapestry, Madame de Maintenon sat at her embroidery in the midst of Louis XIV. and his ministers. Mrs. Somerville, we are told, could turn from her mathematical calculations and translations of La Place, to superintend her household, or embroider her children's frocks. Harriet Martineau, the writer on political economy, the friend of politicians and statesmen, prided herself on her skill in all fine feminine handicraft. Let women, therefore, not decry nor too much neglect their God-given love of beauty; rather let them feel a joy and pride in giving it most perfect utterance, rising, whenever possible, into higher and fuller forms of art, but when nothing better offers, making the most, by taste and skill and originality, of the much despised but by no means wholly despisable fancy-work.—Christian at Work.

Something About the Zulus.

The Zulus live in a beautiful and fertile land in which they have two harvests in every year, and need scarcely do more than scratch the soil and sow their seed to secure an abundance of vegetable food. There are rich pastures on which large herds of cattle feed, so that beef is plentiful; and as the bush, or "hlanzi," as they call it, is full of antelopes, wild boars, and buffaloes (to say nothing of larger game), and many of the men are keen hunters, they are particularly well off for meat. They are also great lovers of beef, which has been compared to thin gruel made with weak hock, and though this beverage is not very intoxicating, they drink such quantities of it in the course of the day that they are sleepily stupid by night. The Zulu idea of perfect happiness is plenty of beef, beer and nothing to do but just to sit still, eat, drink, and listen to whatever news and gossip any one may be able to tell them. The women do all the field and garden work, with the exception of hoeing the king's corn, which is done by the men who present themselves at the royal kraal every spring for this purpose. There is, however, one particular office which women are forbidden under pain of death to perform, and that is, milking the cows, which is always done by men and boys. They are a remarkably superstitious people, and believe devoutly in signs, omens and dreams. A man will not go out hunting if he has had a dream of ill-success on the previous night; and if he has a wonderful escape from danger or accident, always attributes it to the care of his "Ehlose," or guardian angel. Their ideas of a Creator are very indistinct, and consist merely in a tradition that the "big one of all" brought their nation originally "out of the reeds," and missionaries have not been welcome among them, because King Cetewayo has always thought that if he once admitted them a foreign army would soon follow, and to use his own expression, "eat him up."—Scottish American Journal.

WORKINGMEN.

Before you begin your heavy spring work after a winter of relaxation, your system needs cleansing and strengthening to prevent an attack of Ague, Billious or Spring Fever, or some other Spring sickness that will unfit you for a season's work. You will save time, much sickness and great expense if you will use one bottle of Hop Bitters in your family this month. Don't wait. See other column.

LAME BACK. WEAK BACK.

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER.

Overwhelming evidence of their superiority over all other plasters. It is everywhere recommended by Physicians, Druggists and the Press.

The manufacturers received a special award and the only medal given for porous plasters at the Centennial Exposition, 1876 at the Paris Exposition, 1878.

Their great merit lies in the fact that they are the only plasters which relieve pain at once.

EVERY ONE SUFFERING FROM Rheumatism, Lame Back, or Weak Back, Cold on the Chest, Coughs, or any local pain or ache should use Benson's Capcine Porous Plaster and be relieved at once. Price 25 cents. Sold by all Druggists.

DR. C. McLANE'S

CELEBRATED

LIVER PILLS,

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

PRESBYTERIANISM IN NORTH CAROLINA.

BY REV. J. RUMPLE.

On the 25th of April, 1852, the Rev. Matthew B. Grier, of the Presbytery of Baltimore, preached his first sermon in Wilmington; and, in response to an invitation, commenced laboring as stated supply on the 18th of July following. He was installed as the sixth pastor, May 19th, 1854, Rev. Messrs. A. Gilchrist, Geo. M. Gibbs, and Jas. P. McPherson, officiating. Mr. Grier continued to labor in this church until the 26th of May, 1861, a period of nine years, and his labors were much blessed. There were 156 members added to the church under his ministry, or an average of 17 per annum. Quite a number of important events characterized his pastorate. One of these was the precious revival of 1858, when 62 persons were admitted into the church in two months. Another event was the purchase, in 1854, of a neat and commodious brick dwelling house for a manse, at a cost of $4,000, while the same year members of the Church gave $4,100 to Union Seminary and the Seamen's Friend Society. A missionary chapel was also erected, and in 1858 changed into the Second Presbyterian church. A young men's prayer meeting was also established, beginning April 9th, 1858. The next year they erected a house in the lower part of the city for a Sabbath school and prayer meeting, where Mr. John N. Andrews, a colporteur, now of Statesville, gathered quite a number of pupils from the neglected classes into the Sabbath school. All these prosperous events were joined with a great calamity. This Church valued at $10,000, with its new organ valued at $2,500, was consumed by fire, April 13th, 1859. It was sad for this flock, thus a second time to lose their church by fire. But they were not long idle. A subscription of $14,000 was soon raised, a new and more desirable site purchased, the work undertaken and completed, and the Church was dedicated to God, April 28th, 1861. The Church is one of the handsomest in the State, and its interior is finished in a unique manner. The native curled pine, unpainted, but handsomely varnished is used for the finishing. The effect is very pleasant, especially to a North Carolinian, whose life has been spent where the long-leafed pine swings its branches in the air.

When the great struggle between the North and South was seen to approach, Dr. Grier, whose sympathies were with the North withdrew from Wilmington, and went to Philadelphia. Here he soon became editor of the Philadelphia Presbyterian, a post which he still occupies. Dr. Grier was a diligent, earnest, scholarly man, and notwithstanding the diversity of opinion between him and them, his memory is still precious in North Carolina. He was a native of Chester County, Pennsylvania, born in 1820, graduated from Washington College, Pa., in 1838, and from Princeton Seminary in 1844. He was licensed in Wilmington, Del., in 1843, and ordained by the Presbytery of Baltimore in 1847, and installed pastor of the Church at Ellicott's Mills. From this place he came to Wilmington.

From 1861 to 1865, while the country was convulsed with civil strife, the Church had no pastor. The Rev. Martin McQueen, who was the minister of the Second Church, supplied the First Church for a season in 1863 and 1864, and in the opening months of 1865, the Rev. A. D. Hepburn, occupied the pulpit.

The Rev. Horace L. Singleton, of the Presbytery of Baltimore, was called in 1865 and duly installed May, 1866, the Rev. Messrs. J. M. Sherwood and J. M. Sprunt performing the ceremony of installation. Mr. Singleton resigned Oct. 1, 1871, and returned to Baltimore. In January, 1872, Rev. A. F. Dickson began to supply the Church, and was installed June 1st, 1872. He resigned May 5th, 1873. Mr. Dickson, after preaching a short time at Chester, S. C., took charge of the Tuskaloosa Institute for training colored ministers. He was earnest, zealous, a good writer and faithful teacher. The Master called him to the rest of Heaven January 8th, 1879.

The Rev. Wm. S. Plumer, D. D., LL. D., supplied the pulpit from May, 1873, until March, 1874.

The Rev. Joseph R. Wilson, D. D., resigned his chair of Ecclesiastical History and Church Government in the Columbia Theological Seminary, in answer to a call from this church, and was installed Nov. 1st, 1874. He is now the pastor.

The Church has 260 communicants and is one of the ablest churches in the Synod.

OFFICIAL CHANGES.

In the fall of 1858 the membership of the Session had been greatly reduced: Alexander Anderson had died Nov. 15th, 1844; Hervey Law had removed North; and John C. Latta had transferred his membership to the Second Presbyterian Church. Nov. 29th, 1858 the following persons were elected elders: Dr. James H. Dickson, John N. Andrews, Barzillai G. Worth, Geo. Chadbourn and James C. Smith. At the same time a bench of Deacons was formed by election of Captain Gilbert Potter, Dr. Thomas C. Worth, Malcom McInnis, Joseph B. Russell, John W. K. Dix, Samuel Northrop and James D. Cumming. These officers were ordained and installed Dec. 26th, 1858.

Robert W. Gibbs died January 13th, 1861. By the yellow fever which desolated the city in 1862, the following official members fell, viz: Dr. James H. Dickson, Sept. 28, J. W. K. Dix, Oct. 9; Dr. T. C. Worth, Nov. 1.

The following persons were elected elders on January 23, 1868: Albert A. Willard, James D. Cumming, Samuel Northrop, Charles H. Robinson, and John McLaurin—and the following deacons: Thomas W. Player, David G. Worth, George W. Williams, Williamson Whitehead, and Edward P. George. These were installed February 2, 1868. Charles P. Mebane was ordained and installed deacon, March 12, 1868 and James Sprunt indnoted into the same office March 16, 1873.

This Church has sent from her fold into the gospel ministry, Rev. Thomas R. Owen, now a Baptist minister, Rev. Sidney Gibbs Law, a Presbyterian minister in connection with the Northern Church, and Rev. Messrs. George W. MacMillan and Alexander Sprunt of the Southern Presbyterian Church.

"UNCLE MOREAU."

Uncle Morean, or Meroh, as his name is supposed to be properly written, was an African of the Foolah tribe, born on the banks of the Senegal river, about 1770. His father was a man of considerable wealth, and he educated his son well. Meroh could read and speak Arabic fluently, understood business and figures. For some unexplained reason he was sold into slavery, and landed in Charleston in 1807, being about 37 years of age. He soon ran away from a severe master, was arrested and lodged in Fayetteville jail. From this place, Gov. Owen, of Bladen county, purchased him, being induced to do so by compassion for the poor friendless man. Meroh was a zealous Mohammedan, but at length light dawned upon his mind, and he became a Christian, first joining the Church at Fayetteville, afterwards that of Wilmington. He was copper colored, with African features. He had many friends, and was kindly treated by Gov. Owen's family. In the church in winter, the old man sat by the stove, and in the summer in the front seat. The latter years of his life were spent in calmly awaiting the Master's summons to come up higher. He died in 1864, aged about 94 years. Thus God led him by a wonderful path to the home of the just.

On Sabbath, March 16th, 1879, the pastor was enabled thankfully to acknowledge that a debt of $14,553.77, upon the Church for the purchase of a parsonage and grounds adjoining, had been paid, and the pastor's salary and all other expenses had been settled to date, so that the Church was entirely free from debt.

—McLaurin's Annals of First Presbyterian Church, Wilmington, and general sources.

SECOND PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF WILMINGTON, N. C.

In the year 1858 the Presbyterians of Wilmington were blessed with a precious revival; and as a thank-offering to the Head of the Church, a lot was secured on Chestnut, between 7th and 8th streets, and a neat wooden building was erected and dedicated October, 1858. Geo. Chadbourn, M. McInnis and John Colville acted as the building committee. Here the Second Presbyterian Church was organized by an exodus of fourteen members from the First Church. J. C. Latta and Alex. Sprunt were elected Ruling Elders, and John Colville, John R. Latta, James Price and James H. Blanks were elected Deacons. These officers were installed by the Rev. M. B. Grier, the pastor of the First Church, Dec. 10th, 1859.

The newly organized Church chose the Rev. Martin McQueen as their Stated Supply, and he began his labors in January, 1860, and continued until December, 1865. During this time the number of members increased to thirty-eight—a gain of twenty-four, or an average of six per year.

The war and the yellow fever scattered this little flock, and at the close of the war, on account of the disorganized state of things, and the reduced number of members, it was deemed best to sell the Church building and to worship with the First Church. This state of things continued until 1870, when under the auspices of some of this congregation a Sabbath school, and a day mission school were established in the Brooklyn Hall, and the Rev. H. B. Burr, chaplain of the Seaman's Bethel, was employed to overlook the work, and preach once on each Sabbath.

This arrangement continued until Nov. 1873, and meanwhile a small congregation was gathered, and a neat brick chapel built on the corner of Fourth and Campbell streets. This chapel was dedicated in June, 1872. Three members were added, and deacon John Colville was ordained as a ruling elder in Dec., 1871. From Nov., 1873, to June, 1874, the Church was without a supply. In April, 1874, a unanimous call was extended to Rev. C. M. Payne, and so prosecuted that it was finally accepted by him, and he began his labors the 1st of June, 1874. On the first Sabbath of November, 1878, Mr. Payne was installed the first pastor of this Church. At the time when he began his work here, only ten members were available—twelve having died—including ruling elder J. C. Latta, and deacons James Price and James H. Blanks. This pastorate has now continued 5 years, and to the original thirteen there have been added eighty names, or an average of sixteen each year. The roll now contains eighty-five names, seventy-five of whom are resident communicants.

The Sabbath school shows a gain of twenty pupils and has a total attendance of eighty-four members. W. H. Sprunt, and W. J. Smith were elected and ordained deacons the second Sabbath in February, 1877. The Sacrament of Baptism has been administered to sixty persons—twenty-six adults and thirty-four children.

A comfortable manse has been erected for the pastor. The contributions of this Church have been liberal, averaging for 1874 and 1875, $1,300 per year, and for the three following years about $1800 per year. The work of this Church has been aggressive, not deriving its members from the first Church, but seeking out and gathering in a new element. Notwithstanding the pressure of the times the Church has been gaining—the congregation increasing from the first—a new element reached—the membership cemented and crystalized, and to-day it is more self-relieved and independent than at any former time.

Between the pastors and the congregations of the two Wilmington churches fellowship with the utmost good feeling exists, and kind offices are constantly interchanged.

A GLIMPSE OF THE MOUNTAINS.

Without any expectation of rivaling the skill of my friend, Mrs. C. P. S., in descriptive narrative—I should yet like to attempt to entertain some of your readers by giving a slight account of some incidents of a late mountain trip—hoping by this means to induce others to come and take a share in such enjoyments.

We left Statesville at eleven o'clock on a bright sunny day. The ride to "Henry's" was uneventful, as it is a quiet country through which we passed—and most of the inhabitants were at that season busy on their farms. As the train moved away from "Catawba Station" a lonely looking individual stood gazing after us—and my conscience smote me for not remembering that James P——' was making his home there and might have been cheered by exchanging greetings with an old friend. The circumstance was food for melancholy thoughts on "lost opportunities" which have forever escaped us. The Catawba river brightened our landscape, but we were constantly disappointed in seeing scarce any wild flowers—we were several weeks too late for them. As the hours passed we kept a lookout for "the mountains," which at last appeared to strike us with their grandeur. We regretted to miss a fine view of the "Black" as our travelling companion could not tell us when and where to look for it. At a little after 6 P. M., we arrived at "Henry's" in the heart of the mountains—where we found comfortable rooms, excellent fare and a most courteous host. We were much pleased to meet Major Wilson the President of the Road, with whom we sat on the porch after supper, talking of old times and old friends, while our eyes were feasting on the sunset glow as it gradually faded away behind the Blue Ridge. Finding that we intended to spend the next day at Henry's, Major W. kindly invited us to accompany him on his rounds, dine at the "Penitentiary" and return to the hotel on the evening train. To all of this we gladly assented and on going to the train next morning Major W. offered us a ride on the engine—so L. took her perch on one side, and I on the other with the Major and the engineer standing between us. Ah! it was glorious to ascend those grand old hills in such a style. The engine seemed like a living sentient being—and when the engineer now and then loosed his hold on the lever, it was as though the rein had fallen from the driver's hand! Up and up we went, winding our way through deep cuts, over lofty trestles and high embankments, into dark tunnels—bewildered at the tortuous course which we were pursuing, and unable to decide whether the range of trestles in sight across the valley were those which we had already crossed or those to which we had not yet come. The entrances to the tunnels were draped in green, the vines and shrubs seeming to take root in the bare rocks. At last the train stopped at "Swannanoa station," a small cabin only a little below the summit of the Ridge. Here we alighted and watched the transferring of passengers and baggage into the roomy sociable old-fashioned nine-seated stage coach which was to convey them to Asheville. Major W. now directed L. and myself to put on overshoes and mount our perches once more. We were taken on and on, into Egyptian darkness, lighted up in one place by the fire of a blacksmith's forge, in a niche out in the side of the tunnel.

Soon after plunging into the darkness again the engine came to a halt and the word was given "you must alight here!" But how? We could not see our hands—much less tell where to put our feet! At some distance ahead convicts were at work using miner's lamps, and lights being brought from that quarter we descended in safety. Stepping from sill to sill and at one time forced to climb on and walk across some flat cars which stood in the way; we at last reached a place where some convicts were picking and drilling at a steep bed of rock some five or six feet in height and over the face of which flowed a stream of clear cold water. We clambered or rather were pulled up this bank and found ourselves in a place which looked like a long garret, the lamp-light showing the heavy beams arching the roof. This was the unfinished part of the last and longest tunnel. Word was sent ahead to bring handcars and presently we could dimly see that they were at hand. Taking our seats we were cautioned to lower our heads in order to avoid being struck by the beams overhead. The cars were very muddy, but that was a trifling circumstance, and in a few minutes we emerged from the darkness into the open air at the further end of the Swannanoa tunnel. To add to our gratification at having accomplished the trip Major W. informed us that with a single exception we were the first ladies who had passed through. Near the mouth of the tunnel an engine was standing with flat cars loaded with rails and iron for the track. We found comfortable seats on these rails and were taken a mile or two further into Buncombe county, as far as the track was laid. We wandered about seeking wild flowers until Major Wilson was at leisure to attend to us again—but instead of returning through the dark and muddy tunnel he guided us on foot across the top of the Ridge, a far less exciting mode of travel, though now and then we could hear the sound of blasting seemingly just beneath.

Just on the top of the mountain we visited a fish hatching establishment belong to the U. S. Government. The baby trout and salmon seemed lively enough, one can hardly imagine a quicker movement than the "spring" with which they seize the food which is thrown to them. These pools have a stream of clear mountain water flowing through them—and are beautifully shaded by rhododendrons, azalias, flowering locusts and other mountain trees and shrubs.

A short distance below we found a train of flat cars, loaded with earth to be used on the "files" and took our seats on a couple of empty powder kegs which lay on the rear car. Major W. gave directions as to the disposal of this earth and during the half-hour needed for this, our train stood on some trestle-work from which spot we had before us the finest view on the whole road—range after range of mountains receding into the blue and misty distance far away into South Carolina. Thence we moved on to a saw-mill where we alighted and sat for awhile watching the work and admiring the views. Major W. then led the way by a short walk to an exquisite retreat beside one of the many sparkling streams, where we found hidden amongst the laurels a recess in the rock, so sheltered by a craggy shelf overhead as to form almost a cave. Here we rested and chatted for an hour until informed that the engine would soon be at our disposal for the descent of the mountain. This time we took seats on the tender that nothing might obstruct the view, and although the sun's heat was intense, the cool mountain breezes prevented our being oppressed. Major W. accompanied us for a short distance, and then left us under the charge of the engineer whom we found a very agreeable companion. After winding our way downwards for several miles as we thought, the engineer halted at the stockade and I remarked "there comes Major W. and he walks as if he were tired." To our utter bewilderment he told us that he had parted with us at a spot not more than two hundred yards above, and had been at the stockade more than half an hour. It was eight miles from the saw mill to the foot of the mountain and the ride down was delightful. We reached Henry's just in time to enjoy one of Mr. Sprague's excellent dinners, Major Wilson having concluded that penitentiary fare was too rough for us.

Such a muddy individual as I was! On taking a survey of myself after reaching the hotel I was not surprised that the President of the road did not wish me to dine with him even at the penitentiary. To our great regret he was called away that evening. I had hoped to obtain from him a map of the road, as well as some information in regard to it.

My travelling companion had once passed over the "Horse-shoe bend" on a railroad in western Pennsylvania, and she gave it as her opinion that the views on our road were fully equal in beauty to those on that road, except that the cliffs are not so high. To all lovers of picturesque combinations of art and nature, I would recommend a trip over our Western N. C., Railroad and a stay of several days at and around "Henry's" in order to enjoy and fully take in the many beauties of the scenery. And there are few men who have such rare opportunities of giving pleasure to their friends as are enjoyed by Major Wilson, when "doing the honors" of his Road to those who seek such entertainment.

GOLDSBORO INSTITUTE.

(Published by request, from the Goldsboro Messenger.)

MR. EDITOR:—In tendering to you her thanks for pleasant notices from time to time, of her school enterprise in Goldsboro, Mrs. Chapman would at the same time acknowledge that much of the pleasure and the profit of her past school year has arisen from the almost uniform docility, the unquestioning obedience, and the diligent habits of study, which have characterized a majority of her pupils.

Averse to publick exhibitions of young ladies of tender age, and to the blazoning of their names in publick prints, Mrs. Chapman yet feels that it is perhaps due to her pupils, that incidental, honourable mention should thus be made in a general way, of their industry and their success.

The Principals of Schools are by no means the only ones who are unwise in this matter of parading young girls before the publick gaze. Parents will, I hope, excuse the charge that they too, in many instances, are exceedingly fond of seeing their children "behind the footlights" the "cynosures of admiring eyes"—scarcely realizing that weeks, nay, months, are sometimes wasted in preparation for publick exhibitions, which might have been filled up with steady progress and improvement. Nor is this, by any means, the most objectionable phase of the so-called "Commencements"—of the present day. There is much to be deprecated, in the moral, (or the immoral) influence which they exert on the school girls, and no criterion whatever can be formed from such exhibitions of the real status of the pupil. Quiet, modest, studious girls, who have studied diligently, sometimes burst into tears and retire ingloriously from the gaze of the crowd—while a little self contained damsel, who is perhaps thoroughly superficial—"brings down the house" and bears off the palm. Self-possession is desirable, and to be inculcated, the esthetics by no means to be lost sight of in educational matters, and "school" should be made as pleasant to the pupils as is consistent with solid improvement; but sensible parents and the best teachers, I am sure, coincide in the above views, but think, or say, that "the age" requires more noise and tinsel than was formerly desired. So does the age (in some minds) require Bloomer costume, publick attitudinizing, female speakers in publick places, &c., &c. But some of the "old-fashioned," who still retain the "as" and "ks" think that the "exhibitions" of daughters should be in the drawing-rooms of mothers and friends, and that far more importance attaches to thorough home examination of children's attainments, than to the garish display of pin-backs, bride sashes worn improperly, and all the concomitants of festoons, wreaths and gas-light for the edification of a promiscuous, motley crowd of people, whose comments, if heard, would sometimes cause to tingle, the ears of doting parents, and of daughters so justly dear to parents' hearts. The influence of all this publicity and display is only evil and that continually, but your correspondent is behind the age, and becoming prolix.

In this era of "precocious young ladies" it is pleasant once more to recognize the genus "girl," and Goldsboro is to be congratulated that her school girls are, as yet, so little contaminated by theatricals, round-dances, masquerades, &c. Long may they so remain!

With reasonable co-operation on the part of the business men of Goldsboro Mrs. Chapman indulges the hope, with the aid of thorough and accomplished coadjutors, of substantially educating many of their daughters, as well as of materially advancing the business interests of the thriving and pleasant town of Goldsboro.

Can you find room in addition to the foregoing for the following, clipped from the Philadelphia Times:

THE CROP OF GRADUATES.

The June crop is ready to be garnered. The crop of finished young gentlemen and young ladies is large. The educational establishments have been doing their best, and for the last two or three weeks the cramming machines have been in powerful operation. Stimulated by a natural ambition to crowd through the examinations with the highest percentages of registered merit, the young people have worried by day and staid awake by night. In consequence they all expect the highest honors. Many of them have worked bravely with a view to this. The lowest honors seem to be generally shunned. They are as undesirable as it was during the war to be a private in the army. The soldier company which was raised by Artemus Ward, in which there were no privates, but every member was a brigadier general, serves as a model for some of our high-pressure institutions of learning. From some of these institutions all the graduates are to depart with "the highest honors." The "honors" become so uniform that it is small honor to bear them off.

It were both idle and ungenerous to say that all our schools are shams, or that even a majority of them graduate their scholars by a system of unwholesome cramming. There are noble men and women at the head of most of these establishments who labor faithfully for the solid good of the young people committed to their care. But there are concerns which bear the name of school and college which are mere stuffing mills, where young persons are loaded with something which passes for learning. As certain animals are fattened for market by being compelled to drink quantities of water, so are the victims of these academies prepared for commencement day by being dosed with floods of an exceedingly thin quality of literary pabulum. It keeps up appearances for awhile. It is more to the girls than to the boys that this injustice is done. There is no reason why a girl should not be fully as well educated as a boy. It is commonly supposed that the boy has his living to make, and the girl is destined to have hers made for her. But the poor girl who is thrust on the commencement platform with barely enough smattering of education to get married on, sometimes makes a match whose only element of prosperous outlook for the future, is the fact that the youth who wins her heart and hand is not smart enough to discover the shallowness of her pretensions to learning.

The Misses Cram and Sham keep what would have been called in olden days a school for girls. But they well know that if such a name were inscribed upon their sign the tendency would be to repel patrons rather than to attract them. So they call the place a seminary for young ladies, or more probably a young ladies' college. "College" sounds large. Boys go to college, and if girls can be collegiates there is a smack of wisdom in it. Some of the Female Colleges have departments to which feminine aspirants for collegiate honors are admitted at the tender age of ten years. There are "colleges" in which the diploma and the commencement day are the prime considerations and education is a secondary matter. The long and short of the business is that the girls who go through these concerns deceive themselves and are deceived with the idea that they are receiving the benefits of real education, while the fact is that they are led in a desultory way through various studies and branches of learning, only to find, after receiving a nice diploma, all tied around with pretty pink ribbons, that they have gained little or nothing worth the time they have spent.

A hint in season may be of service to the young ladies who have been graduated at the establishment of Misses Cram and Sham. "Commencement day" may have for them a meaning which is more than the customary use of the term implies. Let them now begin to study in earnest, and let the day be the commencement of a term of real profit to their minds. Even if they are to be deprived of the efforts in their behalf put forth by the literary ladies who have made a pretence of teaching them something worth knowing it is no loss. Any girl who has habits of application and study can learn more without the aid of such people than with it. Past experience may serve to show past errors. If several years have been wasted now is the time to redeem and to make the best of the present with a view to the future.

To the girl who resolutely determines to apply herself, "commencement day" may be a worthy commencement of something worth achieving.

ONLY A WORD.

Only a word! a little winged word
Blown through the busy town,
Lighter than thistle down,
Lighter than dust by roving bee or bird
Brushed from the blossoming lily's golden crown:
Borne idly here and there,
Oft as the summer air
About men's doors the sunny stillness stirred.
Only a word!
But sharp, oh sharper than a two-edged sword
To pierce, and sting, and scar
The heart whose peace a breath of blame could mar.

Only a word, a little word that fell
Unheeded as the dew
That from the darkling blue
Of summer midnight softly steals, to tell
Its tale of singing brook and star-lit dell
In yonder noisome street,
Where, pale with dust and heat,
The little window flower in workman's cell
Its drooping bell
Uplifts to greet the kiss it knows so well:
A word—a drop of dew!
But oh, its touch could life's lost hope renew.

TELL HIS WORTH.

In a city a Christian possessed of large means, of strong understanding, generous temper, well-won weight of personal influence—a man whom no bribe can buy to do wrong, who, while diligent in business, is fervent in spirit, serving the Lord, and "serving his own generation by the will of God," as did the illustrious Hebrew monarch of old—can any one estimate the worth of such a man to a community?—Pacific Methodist.

TEACH PAUL'S PROTESTANTISM.

If any one supposes that mere traditional dislike of Romanism will protect men from it he makes a grave mistake. It is well adapted to the human heart, and its arguments plausibly put to the ignorant and producing a revulsion—as if an innocent and beautiful system had been culminated—will secure a favorable judgment. We have to teach the people on the subject of apostacies of whatever kind, according to Paul's directions to Timothy. Failing in this we fail to be good ministers of Jesus Christ. It is true men of the world; ambitious men, with an eye to the "Catholic vote;" sordid men, with an eye to the "Catholic" dollar, will dislike this, and with a fine esthetic assumption will pronounce it ungentlemanly or narrow-minded. But whenever ministers come to the acceptance of their standard they may as well retire. Curiously enough, a Roman Catholic preacher may tell the American people the Romish Church is the only safeguard against immorality, and the papers will report him with admiration, and no one even matters in public against bigotry.—Dr. John Hall.

HOLD ON.

An infidel passing through the shadows that hang around the close of life, and finding himself adrift amid the dark surges of doubt and uncertainty, without anchorage or harbor in view, was urged by his skeptical friends to "hold on." He answered, "I have no objection to holding on, but will you tell me what to hold on by?" Here is a question which men do well to consider before they reach the closing scene. If they are to hold on, what are they to hold on by? Where is their trust? Where is their confidence? What certainty have they as they go down into the shadows? Surely a man who comes to his dying hour needs something better than infidelity can give him; he needs the guiding hand of Him who is the resurrection and the life, who has conquered death and triumphed over the grave, and who is able to bring us safely off at last. He needs that hope which is "as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil."—The Christian.

OUTDONE BY A BOY.

A lad in Boston rather small for his years, worked as errand boy for four gentlemen who do business there. One day the gentlemen were chaffing him a little about being so small, and said to him, "You never will amount to much; you never can do much business; you are too small."

The little fellow looked at them. "Well," said he "as small as I am I can do something which none of you large men can do."

"Ah! what is that?" said they.

"I don't know as I ought to tell you," he replied. But they were anxious to know, and urged him to tell. "I can keep from swearing," said the little fellow. There were some blushes on four manly faces, and there seemed to be very little anxiety for further information on the point.—Exchange.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

From the London Weekly Review and other sources:

The attempt to establish a daily Protestant paper in Paris proved a failure.

A Baptist newspaper printed in the German language has been started in Hamburg, and in less than three months secured 4,000 subscribers."

Irish Presbyterians in General Assembly, by vote of 313 to 278, have refused to sanction the use of instrumental music in their churches.

Mrs. Frank H. Delano, of New York city, has given $5,000 to St. Paul's American Church in Rome, with which to finish the aisle walls and put a railing around the church lot.

A Wesleyan Methodist Chapel is in the course of erection at Halifax, which, it is stated, when completed, will be one of the finest places of worship possessed by that body. The estimated cost is £15,000.

Of the grand total of 94,842 men in the British army, 62,860 belong to the Church of England, 20,872 are Roman Catholics, 7,125 Presbyterians, and 3,985 are Protestants of other denominations.

The Rev. Neil D. M'Lachlan, M. A., B. D., who was recently licensed by the Greenock Presbytery, has been appointed to take Professor Robertson Smith's Chair in the Aberdeen Free Church College during the Professor's suspension.

The corner stone of St. John's College, near Shanghai, has been laid by Bishop Schereschewsky, the Protestant Episcopal Bishop for China. The institution is to be under his management. The building will be in Chinese style, and about 200 feet long. Two hundred Chinamen can be instructed in the College.

Mr. Spurgeon thinks the religious literature for women needs greatly strengthening in tone, if it is be acceptable to them. "The good ladies of our acquaintance," he says, "have, as a rule, quite as much sense as the men, and a great deal more grace."

The Minister of the Brazilian Empire has dismissed the acting director of the Polytechnic School, Rio, for refusing to execute the provisions of the recent educational decree, by which Protestants were exempted from attendance at the religious course in the schools.

Early this month thousands of strangers went to the Polish town of Czenstochan to venerate a famous image of the Virgin. While crowds were gathered in the churchyard, unable to find room in the church, lightning struck a tree and killed fifteen persons who were praying beneath it.

Two clergymen of the Church of England, who in early life distinguished themselves in battle, have recently died—Rev. Wm. Leeke, a Waterloo veteran, and for the past fifty years a clergyman of the Church of England, and Rev. Thomas Bury Wells, one of the survivors of the Battle of Algiers, who left the navy about fifty years ago to enter the church.

A new organization has been started in the Church of England called "The Evangelical Protestant Union." Its object is "to arrest the downward progress of evangelicalism, or its external assimilation to what is really semi-Popery, by preventing, if possible, further concessions on the part of evangelical clergymen; and by reclaiming, through invitation and expostulation, those who have yielded to some extent to the tide of ritualistic innovation."

The Rev. J. F. Kitto, rector of the parish of Whitechapel, London, has allowed the "Open-air Mission" the use of the new open-air pulpit attached to St. Mary's parish church, for service on one evening in each week. On Monday last it was occupied by two Baptist laymen—Mr. Thos. Blake, M. P. for Leominster, and Mr. Palmer. This is the only pulpit of its kind in England. It is built in the western wall of the church, overlooking the churchyard, and is entered from the inside of the church. The congregation are accommodated with forms placed in the churchyard. The rector preaches therein himself regularly every Sabbath during the summer months.

Rev. Edward White has given up his intention to write a life of his sister, the late Mrs. Ranyard, the author of the "Missing Link." He does so, it is said, because Lady Kinnaird is getting the work done by another hand, having formed the opinion that Mr. White's advocacy of the Annihilation theory disqualifies him from writing the account of the Bible-woman's Mission founded by his sister. In withdrawing from his purpose Mr. White says he does so in order to prevent "a scandal over a recently closed grave."

On Sabbath afternoon there was a special flower service in Berkeley Chapel, Mayfair, which was filled to overflowing with a large congregation of mothers and children. As they entered all passed up the centre aisle and presented their flowers at the communion rails. The chancel was speedily filled with flowers, piled on the communion table and on either side. Among the congregation were the Princess of Wales and her children, Princess Louise, Princess Victoria, and Princess Maud; Princess Mary and her children, and Princess Frederica of Hanover, all of whom presented bouquets. An address was delivered by the incumbent, the Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, Honorable Chaplain of the Queen, on the text, "The flowers appear on the earth, the time of singing of birds is come." After the service the flowers were sent to the sick children in the various hospitals of London.

Rev. Dr. Talmage preached on Sabbath evening last at the Association Hall, Peter street, Manchester. Admission was by ticket. During the week he has been lecturing to large audiences in Nottingham, Manchester, Liverpool, Glasgow and Edinburgh, "The Bright Side of Things." The following letter was received from the agent of Dr. Talmage in reply to an invitation to lecture in Port Glasgow: "Westminster Palace Hotel, Victoria street, London, S. W., June 17, 1879.—Dear Sir: In reply to your kind note of the 11th inst. I can only say that I have upwards of 1,000 letters unanswered, all wanting Dr. Talmage to speak for them. Some contain fabulous offers. Now, there is but one way of getting the Doctor. If your society can afford to pay what larger places offer I may be able to drop out a larger place and give you a date in July. The lowest terms I care to take are £100. I know this is a big price, but Dr. T. is a great man, and has great demands on his time, and greater on his purse. If he lectures he wants to raise a fund to carry out a Christian work connected with his church in Brooklyn, or he must rest. You must reply very quickly. I am very truly yours, J. B. POWELL."

A QUERY.

The collection for the Invalid Fund was taken np on the first Sabbath in July. It is probable that in the majority of instances the pastors pressed the importance of the collection upon their congregations, urging the crying needs of the cause and quoting the appeal from the Secretaries stating that the collections last year were insnfficient and that some familes were suffering or would suffer unless a more liberal response were made to the call.

These facts suggest a query. Is it right for a minister to change his field of labor merely for the sake of getting a large salary? Snppose that he is receiving a salary which is snfficient for his present needs, bnt not to allow him to lay by anything for his wife and children after he is gone. He has no means beyond his salary and were he to die, his family would be left without support.

Under these circnmstances he receives a call to a field which will not only support him, but allow him to make some provision for the edncation of his children and for the support of his widow after his death. The qnestion is, would he be justified in making this the grounnd of accepting such a call?

Some, perhaps, wonld approve of his conrse in accepting, some wonld disapprove.

It is true the minister's work is peculiarly for God; it is true that he does not labor for money, nor does he expect his reward in this life; it is true that he of all men should illnstrate that faith in God which he preaches. All these considerations seem to point to a negative answer to the query raised. Bnt then, on the other hand, it might be said that the minister has no special promises in God's word which do not belong to all Christians; while he does not labor for money, yet he certainly mnst have it nnless he, an edncated man himself, is to rear his children without such advantages, and leave his widow helpless after his death; true he must illnstrate the faith he enjoins npon his people, bnt does he teach his people that faith in God reqnires them to make no provision for their families after their death? Does he not incnlcate a faith that works, not merely waits? If the providence of God seems to confine him to one place, then, perhaps, he may feel that God has placed him, in a position that calls for the exercise of faith with reference to his whole fntnre; bnt when that same providence opens a way by which he may thus make some provision, does not a probability arise that God intends him to nse means as well as faith in this matter? As onr pastors read the nrgent appeals made for this cause, stating that the collections are insufficient and that numbers of families are entirely dependent npon them for the necessaries of life, are they not liable to feel that to leave widow and orphans to be provided for by this Invalid Fnnd partakes more of the nature of presnmption than of faith? In view of these facts how shonld such a query be answered?

Wonld public sentiment condemn a minister for makiug this the sole grounnd for accepting work in a different field? If so, would public sentiment be jnst in snch condemnation?

PUBLIC EXECUTIONS.

To take pleasnre in witnessing snffering in any form is not brutal, nsing the term with precision, for brutes can manifest nothing worse than indifference; it is inhumane, cruel, barbarous, savage, rather than, alas!—inhnman. Civilization, Christianity, brings the refinement that draws ont the tenderest sympathies of hnman natnre and represses all that is akin to barbarity. Without these modifying and meliorating influences man gloats over human agony and revels in blood. The delight which savages take in the mutilation of their kind, and in the infliction of the extremest tortnre is sufficient proof of these assertions.

Duty may reqnire the setting aside, or the bearing up against, the gentler emotions of humanity, and they can be set aside how easily. Physicians called in the practice of their profession to see snffering in all its forms, acqnire the stoicism which can regard snch sights nnmoved; with them it is repression, not loss of sympathy, and necessary to success in their deeds of mercy. Soldiers at first recoil from the sights and sonnds of the battle-field, bnt soon learn to sleep among the dead and dying, or rnsh on to fresh carnage oblivions to all feelings of pity; with them dnty reqnires the sacrifice, rather the abeyance for the time, of the more delicate affections of the soul. Relieved of the necessity which reqnires this insensibility to hnman distress, none are more prompt than these to share the griefs of those who writhe nnder the load of sorrow or of pain.

Bnt when no all-masteriug call of dnty demands it, he who brings himself to witness snffering first regards it with indifference, then takes pleasnre in the sight, and soon finds delight in its infliction. The Godlike principle that inflicts no pain wantonly, nor regards any distress without pity, is lost to his soul. This history confirms. Robespierre, in discharge of his duties as member of the Criminal Court of Arras, was called to condemn a prisoner to death. He resigned his office in consequence and advocated the abolition of capital pnnishment. In less than ten years, by a gradual process of soul-hardening from witnessing inhnmanity, and participating in it, he had come to demand from the Assembly of France the establishment of that criminal conrt which speedily became the terrible revolutionary tribnnal. He led the Jacobins in the condemnation of the King, and in a few months had proposed the commitee of public safety with powers above the Convention, instituted the reign of terror, and sacrificed the Girondists, saying, "There are periods in revolntions when to live is a crime." Successively he destroyed Hebert, Danton and other wretches only less savage than himself, became leader of the bloody trinmvirate and master of France, that France in which "terror was the irrevocable order of the day." Snch was Robespierre, originally, and not insincerely the friend of hnmanity. Of like instances there are many: Barere, Conthon are notable. Conthon, a member of the Convention, was always foremost at the beck of Robespierre to move for blood, and became a very champion of terror. As commissioner to Lyons, when the guillotine had dnlled from nncessing work, and the hand of single murder was all too slow, he with his associates ordered grapeshot to hew down hnndreds at a time. And this was Conthon, in his early manhood, noted for amiability of disposition and devoting himself to deeds of charity.

Extreme illnstrations truly, but jnst; and accurate in following the steady and rapid conrse of demoralization from nnnecessary familiarity with human woe.

Shall the lessons of history and of experience be lost npon us? Within a few months past in North Carolina many criminals have paid the extreme penalty of their crimes on the scaffold. The law of the State provides that exections of victims of the law by hanging shall be private, nnless the proper officers of the county in which snch exections are to take place shall decide to allow the public to witness them. So far as has been noted these exections have been public. The effect is in the highest degree demoralizing. Those who attend to behold the terrible spectacle of a human being launched into eternity, (those excepted, always, who are called thither by dnty) are of all persons those whose brutal propensities need to be curbed, not stimulated. No man—shall we say no woman—can witness snch a scene from a mere instinct of curiosity and not be the loser in the finer impulses of his being.

Does it tend to deter from crime? No one thonghtfully regarding the subject can believe it. No one who has inqnired into the subject does believe it. It gratifies that same instinct which crowds the Spanish amphitheatre, to witness the agonies of the maddened beast as he rushes on to his death, or that raises the shout of exnltation when the matadore is borne lifeless from the arena. And this in a Christian land!

Does it magnify the law? With open ears the assembled throng listen to the wretched victim's denial of guilt, his profession of conversion, his assurance of a blessed immortality; with eager eyes they take in each horrible detail of the occasion, witness his dying agony and then depart—with what impressions? The courageous manner in which he meets his fate constitntes him a hero; the denial of gnilt on the threshold of eternity makes him, to them, a slaughtered innocent; a criminal, not he, but a saint in glory. The crime is lost sight of in connection with the penalty. The glamour of conrage and of piety is bewitchingly mixed in the depraved imagination with the dying throes and the lifeless form.

It has in a tenfold degree the evil influence which the reading of tales of desperadoes and assassins has npon weak minds. It is high time that Christian men, and all men of high moral feeling were exerting themselves to prevent these degrading spectacles.

WHEN TO STOP.

A gentleman and lady were once passing ont of a church together when the former asked his companion how she liked the sermon. She spoke in complimentary terms of it, adding however, "but he passed by some very good stopping-places."

It was a jnst criticism. How often, alas, is a really excellent discourse deprived of the effect that it should have by the neglect of the preacher to take advantage of a good stopping-place? Sometimes the sermon is a well-rounded symmetrical treatment of the topic and it is evident that the time has arrived for the conclosion; the minister himself is conscious of it, and the audience undoubtedly are, bnt nevertheless he flonnders on repeating, emphasizing, and amplifying to his own embarrassment and the inexpressible weariness of the congregation. The good discourse is rendered entirely ineffective simply because the preacher did not stop when he had finished. Perhaps if a post-mortem examination were held over some of our lifeless organizations it would be discovered that they died of that lingering disease "long sermons."

Bnt preachers are not "sinners above all men" in this respect.

Who is it that has not been wearied almost past endnrance by some visitor he came and talked pleasantly for a while, bnt still lingered after conversation became a decided drag and finally left when the visitor and visited were both exhausted, and the pleasure of the social intercourse was entirely destroyed by the length of it.

How often a word of friendly connsel has been lengthened into a lecture and hence prodnced damage where only good was intended.

A reproof, which if brief and pointed, might have been effective, is frequently rendered injurions by being lengthened into a regular scolding, a little wit is pleasant, bnt if a joker does not know when to stop, he becomes wearisome and his listeners dread his approach. Indeed, what is there, of which it cannot be said that "not too much" is a good motto? Bnt having discussed this topic we will illnstrate it by stopping at once.

REV. DR. JOHN CUMMING.

The papers announce that Dr. Cnmming so widely known as a second Adventist and a prophet of the near dissolntion of the world, has retired from the pastorate of the church at Crown-court, Drury-Lane. His congregation have been endeavoring to raise a fund of $25,000, to purchase him an annuity and it is reported that his last years will be free from all pecuniary embarrassment.

Dr. Cnmming is now in his 70th year and it is in obedience to orders of his physician's that he retires from ministerial labor.

He is an ardent member of the Scotch Established Church and opposed the separation of the Free Church in 1843.

In 1833 he was ordained pastor of the Scotch Church, Crown-court, at a time that it was in feeble condition, and received, it is said, the pew rents as his salary. He soon became one of the most popnlar preachers in London, and was eagerly sought by American visitors.

It is qnite remarkable that, confining himself in general to a special subject, not of itself attractive to the public, he should have remained acceptable to one congregation for nearly fifty years.

Thirty years ago he published "Apocalyptio Sketches," a work which created quite a stir by reason of the anthor's views as to the end of time. "The Great Tribulation" appeared ten years later, and successfully at intervals of about three years "Redemption Draweth Nigh," "The Destiny of Nations," "Sonnding of the Last Trnmpet." In 1870 appeared "The Seventh Vial" and "Fall of Babylon Foreshadowed."

The failnres of his repeated predictions did not seem to shake Dr. Cnmming's faith in them, bnt these failnres had the effect of dalling the interest of the public in his works.

EDUCATION.

The Committee of Edncation at Memphis have rednced the salary of the Secretary nearly one half. All correspondence on the subject of Edncation should be addressed to Rev. E. M. Richardson, Memphis.

All remittances of money are to be made as heretofore to G. W. MacRae, Esq., No. 300 Front street, Memphis.

DEATH IN THE MINISTRY.

The Southwestern Presbyterian says:

"We have just learned of the death of Rev. William Cameron, of Overton, Texas. Mr. Cameron was for a short time connected with the Presbytery of New Orleans. He afterwards moved to Tennessee, and thence to Texas. The last years of his life were devoted to teaching, and it is the testimony of one who knew him that he had been doing a good work for the Church and schools of Overton and vicinity at the time he was removed by death.

"He was born August 26, 1816, in Cecil county, Maryland, and while quite young joined the Presbyterian Church in West Nottingham. In that church his ancestors for generations had served as ruling elders. He was edncated at Princeton, and graduated both in the College and Seminary there. On October 20, 1865, he was ordained by the Presbytery of East Mississippi. The greater part of his life in the ministry was devoted to the work of education, as a professor or principal."

HAMPDEN SIDNEY.

Among the pleasing incidents of the late Commencement at Hampden Sidney was the announcement of the donation of one hundred dollars to the College Library. The interest of this gift was greatly enhanced by the circumstances of its bestowment. The donor is in circumstances so redneed that to many it might seem hardly prudent to give as much as a hnndred dollars to any object whatever. The gift was made with the donble purpose of promoting an important interest of a valned and beloved Seminary of learning, and of doing honor to the memory of the dearest and most revered friends, lately deceased. And yet there were considerations which determined the donor to conceal the names of all parties concerned except that of the recipient of the benefaction.—Cor. Central Presbyterian.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

The Presbyterian Weekly of Baltimore has changed its name to the Baltimore Presbyterian, and Rev. W. J. Gill takes charge as Editor-in-chief. The change of name is judicious. Rev. Geo. Morrison, who retires, deserved success; let us hope that his successor will achieve it—aye, and deserve it.

If reports are true that the French government is incensed at the respect paid to the remains of the late Prince Napoleon, it would seem to argue a fear that the fickle and mercurial French people are not to be relied on to sustain the repnblic. Without some such explanation their conduct is childish and pitiable.

Let the religious papers now yield the palm for superior appreciation of what the occasion reqnired, to that New York daily paper which placed Ingersoll's address alongside of a large portion of the 15th chapter of Paul's epistle to the Corinthians, and then appended the question, "Which do you prefer?"

The Texas Presbyterian calls attention to the fact that the Book of Church Order requires at least three ministers and one ruling elder to constitnte a qnorum. By the old book three ministers and as many ruling elders as might be present—any or none—constitnted a qnorum. The adjonrned meeting of Brazos Presbytery, which should have been held at Honston on Jnne 17th, last, failed for want of the elder.

The Prince of Monaco rules a little Italian principality covering six square miles and nnmbering a little over three thousand persons as its population. The Prince is an inveterate gambler and general profligate, bnt he stands by what he calls his religion. He has denied to English and Scotch Protestants the privilege of establishing a place of worship on his territory because it might endanger the unity of the faith.

Pius IX. did not forget his family, but left two-thirds of his property to them. They, not being content with the interest, want the principal, and an important legal contest is likely to grow out of the matter. The Christian Herald remarks:

"Surely if the Pope is competent to declare the meaning and intention of biblical truth, his reading of an ordinary will should be accepted as final by the faithful. It looks as if the Roman Catholics had no more faith in Papal Infallibility than Protestants have."

A friend writes us from Sumter, S. C.: "In your issue of 2d inst, you have a paragraph relative to Rev. Dr. McQueen, our pastor, which is a little 'mixed.' Dr. Donald McQueen, his son, has accepted the invitation to Madison, Ga."

Thanks for the correction. We would like to blame the Southern Presbyterian for that mixture, for the information came thence, but it isn clear case in which we were wise above what was written. With this outburst of honest confession we feel better.

One of Pope Leo's grand enterprises, a Catholic bank, does not meet with the best success among the wealthy Catholics. That is they do not come down with their money, and in general money is an essential in banking. His Infallibility may have made a mistake jnst there. The Pope has another project on hand, viz.: To establish a newspaper in Rome under his direction bnt in editorial charge of Monsignor Alimonda. The first number will appear in August and be printed in seven different languages. It will discuss political and moral questions and represent the opinions of the Vatican. Mutes educated and trained in the asylum of San Pietro will be its compositors. It claims now 42,000 subscribers scattered through the world, most of whom, of course, are ministers of the Church.

Rev. John W. Davis, missionary in China for our Church has sent us a copy of the North China Herald published in Shanghai. We express our thanks to the brother for his courtesy and give our readers some extracts. Hnman nature is the same in every part of the world, though in some places in greater measnre than in others, its manifestations are shaped by education and the habits of the people. The following are culled from a large number of "Abstracts from Peking Gazettes." In general the decrees are evidently just and wise and present no special singularity of any kind.

The first abstract indicates that "fuss and feathers" are not confined to our country:

Decree. On the recommendation on Hsi Lun, buttons and peacock feathers are bestowed on a number of officers and men who distinguished themselves in the 8th moon of this year in expelling the Mohamedan rebels from the district of Tarbagatai.

It wonld seem that "irregularities" in financial matters exist in China as with us:

Postscript memorial. The Censor Liang Chnn exposes some of the malpractices of provincial treasurers. Among other things he accuses them of being in the habit, when near vacating their posts, of paying monies not due and pocketing discounts, while monies overdne they keep back. He suggests that Governors of provinces inspect the accounts of treasurers leaving, &c. Rescript already recorded.

Here is another instance; the decree proceeds to wholesome legislation on other matters:

Decree. The Censor Wang Hsing having reported that the local officials are committing many malpractices and extortions, let Yan Ching-ming and Tsong Kwochnen investigate this matter thoroughly. Let the growing of poppy be prohibited and the people induced to grow mulberry trees or cotton, according as it suits the soil. Also let the people again be warned against the old practice of drowning female children, now more rife through the distress.

In the next we get an idea of the funeral rites of great officials:

Decree deploring the death of Kwei Ling, formerly President of the Board of Revenne, bestowing a pall, with Buddhist prayers on it, and Tls. 500 to cover funeral expenses. The Beile Tsai Cheng with ten officers of the Imperial household are commanded to pour the libation before the coffin of the deceased in accordance with the rites. Let his infant son Fu Hsu be a second-class Assistant Secretary and attached to one of the Boards when of age.

Can this be improved upon as an official report?

Postscript memorial. The same reports the rapid increase of gambling houses in the capital. He calls them the breeding places of crime and ruin, and consequently points to the necessity of at once closing all snch establishments from where the daily increasing nnmbers of criminals are recruited. He prays that the Censors of the districts in the capital be ordered to look to this in accordance with the law on the subject.—Rescript already recorded.

The Chinese evidently have correct ideas of government if this is a specimen:

Decree. The high civil and military officers in the provinces are again told to mend their ways and rule their different departments with justice and impartiality. Especially are the civil officers warned against displaying nepotism, but to only select officers of real merit and ability to fill vacancies that may occur. Only in this way can they hope to gain the respect of their subordinates and the affection of the people. The millitary officers are told to leave off sending in false muster-rolls of the men under them, and to be more honest and diligent and less extravagant.

The following gives an idea,—only a faint idea—of the immense distress consequent upon the famine, and is very creditable to Yn Lu, and his people. Eighty thousand persons for nine months is equal to 720,000 persons—over half the entire population of North Carolina—for one month:

Memorial. Yu Lu, Governor of Anhwei, states that he has stopped giving relief to the refngees from the famine districts who flocked to his province. In all 80,000 persons have received aid for a period of nine months, towards which the officials, gentry and people of An-hwei, contributed about Tls. 100,000, about $150,000. Among the contributors he especially mentions Brigade-General Ch'eng Wen-ping, and prays that for his charitable disposition, he and his ancestors for two generations may have the first rank bestowed npon them. Also that permission may be granted for two memorial arches to be erected in honor of the two old ladies who caused their sons, all high military officers, to give handsomely to the relief fnnd.—Rescript: Granted.

NEWS NOTES.

The open-air meetings continue at Dudley's Grove, Wilmington, N. C., every Sabbath afternoon. Rev. J. W. Craig will preach on Sabbath next at 4:30 p. m.

Rev. R. A. Miller leaves his work at Monroe, for two weeks preaching in Anson Co. The Monroe church is prospering under his ministrations.

On 6th, inst., Rev. F. H. Johnston preached an anniversary sermon in the Presbyterian church at Winston, N. C. He takes a short vacation into Surry county. In the last three years the membership of the church at Winston has doubled—50 then, 100 now.

Sabbath, 6th inst., was the first anniversary of Rev. D. Irvin Craig's ministry at Reidsville, N. C. On the occasion a lady 88 years old was received and baptized. The scene of baptism illustrating God's wonderful forbearance and mercy is described as very solemn.

Rev. C. M. Payne has left Wilmington for a few weeks, to recuperate. During his absence the congregations of the First and Second churches will worship together. In the former church Rev. Dr. Wilson will preach each Sabbath in the forenoon, and in the latter at night.

A kind friend, L. R. L., sends us a detailed account of the dedication Mt. Olive church, on 6th, inst. The article does not more than justice to the very admirable manner in which Rev. Dr. Sprunt conducted the exercises, bnt having already published a communication on the subject we add what is new: "Rev. B. F. Marable from Goldsboro, was with us on Sabbath evening and preached for us at night, and on Monday and Tuesday. The sermons were excellent and greatly enjoyed. No one has been received into the church during the meeting, bnt several contemplate appearing before the session at an early day. We trust, however, that seed has been sown that will spring np in God's own good time, and bring forth fruit nnto the honor and glory of His great name.

Our house of worship is neat and commodious, and will seat about 300 persons. It has been in process of erection for some time, being delayed for lack of fnnds, and has been built principally through the large liberality of one of the elders, Mr. P. J. S., (hope he will pardon the use of his initials,) and we trust that he will be liberally rewarded in this world and in the next, by Him who hath said "it is more blessed to give than to receive." The membership of our church is about twenty-five. We will have no regular preacher for this year, bnt several of the ministers have promised to supply us with preaching once a month. This is a good point for Presbyterianism, and we trnst that God who is rich in mercy and grace will ere long give ns a flonrishing church at this place. And may we ever ascribe all the praise and honor and glory to Him, who worketh all things after the connsel of His own will.

The "Rowan and Davie Cluster" has just held another of its interesting meetings at Thyatira. The exercises were opened with an able sermon on "Family Religion," by Rev. J. Rnmple. It was taken for granted by the speaker that all admitted the dnty; hence, after giving a brief history of it in the time of Adam, Noah, Abraham, &c., he proceeded to speak of its several parts, instruction, discipline and worship, closing by calling special attention to the malediction of Jeremiah: "Ponr ont Thy fury upon the heathen that know Thee not, and npon the families that call not upon Thy name." The Cluster was then called to order by J. K. Graham, Esq., the last president present. Mr. J. J. Bruner, elder from Salisbury, was elected president. Recess was taken for one hour, and those present were soon called together arnnnd an improvised table loaded with good things provided by the thoughtful ladies. As we approached the table some one, seeing how it was crowded with chicken, ham, pickles, &c., remarked, "The table is too small," to which some worthy descendant of Solomon replied, "'Twill soon be large enough," which reminds one of the Irishman's reply where his onstomer objected to the thickness of his boot soles, "Faith, and if yon wear them awhile the objection will wear away." We then repaired to the church to enjoy a feast of another kind, an interesting and able essay by Prof. Stirling, on "Worldly Amnsements." The Professor showed most conclnsively the demoralising and anti-Christian tendency of horse-racing, gaming, theatre and circus going and of ball rooms. It could be wished that snch an essay could be read in all onr churches. Then was discnssed the query, "What can be done to check the spirit of worldliness now prevalent in our churches?" This was discussed at length, and was listened to with interest by all. The next question was, "What can be done to secnre greater efficiency in church officers?" After discnssion the following was adopted:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this Cluster that the efficiency of church officers may be increased, first, by diligent study of the duties required of each officer; second, by solemn and frequent meditation and prayer concerning the nature of the ordination vows taken by each officer; third, by repeated acts of consecration to God, and pions resolntion to be more faithful to the Heavenly Master."

The only other question discnssed was "What can be done to improve the singing in onr churches?" After which the Cluster adjourned, to meet at Back Creek Monday after the first Sabbath in October. All felt it to be good to spend this brief season together, and separated with the prayer that much good fruit may grow from the seed thus sown.

RALEIGH AND HOME MISSIONS.

MR. EDITOR:—On the evening of the 5th Sabbath in Jnne, it was my privilege to address the First Church in Raleigh on the snbject of Evangelization. I was invited by the pastor, Brother Watkins, at the instance of the Ladies Home Missionary Society. I see they have sent ont circulars to all sister churches in the Presbytery, urging the formation of similar societies. We should hail this movement as auspicious. The broad churchism which in the Northern States is so rife, and is degenerating into humanitarianism is finding its way among us under the specious guise of charity, and undermining the foundations of the church. This kind of charity winks at all kinds of heresy bidding them God-speed, and is partaker of their evil deeds" (II John ii). This kind of charity, says the church of its life and energy. This kind of charity turns over the duty of preaching the gospel at home to others, and puts contempt upon the Word of God which declares that all Scripture is profitable. This kind of charity declines as an odious task the instruction of the Church's children in a divinely given form of government, for the conservation of a divinely given gospel—the key note of which is—justification of faith alone; and suffers others who disown our church and fellowship to proselyte them. This kind of charity—so far from being divine in its origin, is the charity of the ungodly press which so clamorously denounces all fidelity to the truth, and demands that errors shall pass unrebuked. All in the name of charity! And it is just this miscalled charity that is poisoning the life, purity and energy of the church. Its perverse lips speak lies with brazen effrontery, and shamelessly defend the men who perjure themselves by assailing covertly the creed they have openly subscribed. This world-born charity has no word of reproach for heresy or fraud, but only for the "bigots" who contend for creed and honesty.

There is no hope of successful aggressive work by the Church until this mis-born supposititious charity, be cast ont of the household—and heaven-born charity with its love of God and love of God's truth, which is first pure and then peaceable, be reinstated. When our people all work, then will we make progress. Bnt they will not all work until our preachers all fearlessly teach that this martyr Church deserves the love and fostering care of her children,—because her standard is,—not baptism, not apostolic snccession, not the deeds of the law, but justification by faith alone—because all her doctrines are logically harmonious with this great truth, and result in the work of faith, the labor of love, and the patience of hope unto the end;—and because, the Church herself, with her ministry and ordinances is a divinely given institution which divine wisdom has chosen for the conservation of saving truth until Christ shall come again. If we shun not to declare the whole counsel of God, then our whole people will love the Church, and work through and by her as a divinely appointed means for the salvation and edification of souls and the glory of God. Let us awake!

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

We have received through Robt. E. Park, General Agent, Macon, Ga., the following books published by that substantial house, Ivison, Blakeman, Taylor & Co.

1. Botany for Young People, part 2. How Plants Behave; how they move; climb, &c. By Prof. Asa Gray. Illustrated.

A perfectly charming book for awakening a love for this study among youth.

2. Swinton's Geographies. 1. A Primary Geography introductory to his "complete course," 1879. 2. Elementary Geography for Primary and Intermediate Grades; complete shorter course. 3. A Complete Course in Geography, Physical, Industrial and Political. With a special Geography for each State. 1878.

These are admirable Geographies. Two constitute a complete course; but the "Elementary" may be used alone. The inductive methods combination of recitation text and reading lessons; the beautiful illustrations, clear letter press, oral outlines, topical reviews, and combination of physical, political and commercial Geography, make them attractive and satisfactory. We commend them too as very cheap books. The maps of the Southern States by counties in No. 3. are especially distinct and valuable.

3. A Normal Word Book, or Studies in Spelling, Defining, Word Analysis, and Synonyms. By John Swett.

4. Specimen pages of the New Graded Readers. They seem to be carefully and handsomely prepared, progressive, full of useful information and low in price.

Light in Dark Places; or How the Camps Lived in their Poverty. By Henry S. Drayton. Illustrated. 1879. From Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger, Philadelphia. $1 25.

This is an interesting story, aiming to show how a cultivated family, reduced to very needy circumstances, could retain their moral and religious life, and rear their children in health and for usefulness. There is rather too much phrenological specnlation; and some fanciful receipts for domestic economies are given.

Temperance Lectures. 1. Our Battle Cry; 2. The Force of Appetite; The Only Remedy, by Prof. John B. Gough. 1879. American Temperance Publishing House, J. S. Ogilvie, 29 Rose St., N. Y. 25 cents.

These lectures just delivered by Mr. Gough in England need no commendation. If we cannot hear his voice, we cannot circulate his eloquent words.

The Sanitarian; A monthly Magazine Devoted to the Preservation of Health, Mental and Physical culture. July, 1879. A. N. Bell, M. D., editor. New York. $3 a year.

Limitation of Epidemic diseases: Ventilation of School-houses and Dwellings for working people, are a part of its interesting contents.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine for August at hand. We hold to it: It is the best magazine of its kind in the world. Price $3 per annum, or 25 cents a number. Rev. Dr. C. F. Deems, Editor.

Thanks for invitation to attend the Third Annual Convention of the Amateur Press Association at Goldsboro, July 21, 1879.

A-Saddle in the Wild West is a book of D. Appleton & Co's. Handy Volume series. Price 25 cents. This book proposes "a glimpse of travel among the mountains, lava beds, sand deserts, Indian reservations, and ancient pueblos of Southern Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona, by Wm. H. Rideing attached to the geographical surveys and explorations, of the United States, in the West. By snch books children, boys especially, acquire information in the way of amusement and retain it through life.

The Master's Carpet; or Masonry and Baal-Worship Identical. Illustrated, 75 cts. Pp. 377. By Edmond Ronayne, Past Master. Chicago, Ill. 1879.

In this the anther says he represents the candidate in every rite through which he passes in initiation, and aimed to show the similarity between Masonry, Romanism and Heathen Mysteries, and prove, that if the Bible be God's Word, then Masonry and Romanism are alike systems of false worship, the "mystery of iniquity." He is very violent in denunciation but the book will doubtless be read. With all such books the reader necessarily finds himself proposing: If the writer violates, as by his own acknowledgment he does, a most solemn oath not to divulge the secrets of the Order what confidence can be placed in his statements? Some will read and perhaps believe, but none can be sure they know more than before they read.

Epiphanies of the Risen Lord, is the title of a new book by Rev. George Dana Boardman, author of "Studies in the Creative Week," "Studies in the Model Prayer, &c." D. Appleton & Co., New York. $1 25.

No flippant overlook can do justice to any of Dr. Boardman's writings. They are solid ideas, clothed in bright and harmonious language; they are the outgushing of a Christian soul; or the clear, calm, expression of a heart filled with spiritual peace. We put the work before us, aside for a delightful hour when we can read it undisturbed.

Heavenly Dawn. Original and Selected Pieces. By Margaret H. Morris, $1 25. Pp. 400. Gilt. Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger, Philadelphia. 1879.

This dainty volume of poems was doubtless compiled to comfort beloved, deceased parents. It pictures sweet and varied associations of Home, in the shortening pilgrimage to the Home above, under the headings, Home-Life; Friendship; Nature; Chamber of Sickness; Closet of Prayer; Father and Mother; Heavenly Dawn and Heaven; Many sweet, beautiful and sustaining poems are here gathered, while others tho' lacking in poetic rythm and finish, yet bring tender home-pictures to the memory.

The Princeton Review for July, through Prof. Rogers, of Oxford, discusses Labor and Wages in England. Dr. Washburn treats of the Aim and Influence of Modern Biblical Culture; Mr. Wharton of Nemesis in the Court-Room. Prebendary Irons, of London, discourses on Reason, Conscience and Authority: Prof. Ferrier on "The Organ of Mind; President Potter on Music and Worship; Dr. Matheson, of Scotland, on Christ and the Doctrine of Immortality; R. P. Porter, of Chicago, on Local Government, and Prof. Shields on "Philosophy and Apologetics, strives to defend his "Final Philosophy" against a pungent attack by Prof. Patton, in the May number.

DEATH AND LIFE.

On 4th July last, four daughters of Appleton Oldsmith, of Beaufort, N. C., were drowned in crossing the sound from Fort Macon to their home. Their ages were 21, 19, 9 and 7 years. They were all lovely, but the two elder, Bessie and Corinne, were also highly gifted. At the time of their death the Newbernian had on hand, from them, two poems, which have since been published. The peculiar circumstances greatly increase interest in the writings:

MY LIFE.

BY BESSIE OAKSMITH, JUNE, 1879.

Like a single gem of the crystal dew,
A drop of the rainy showers,
A gleam from a star in the ether blue,
A bud in a world of flowers.

Like a leaf from one of the numberless trees,
A flake in a drift of snow,
A ripple in all of the rippling seas,
A blade where the grass fields grow.

Like a single ray from the pale sad moon
To lighten the gloom of night;
Or a golden beam from the sun at noon—
Or the song of a bird in flight.

Like a fleeting grain of the desert sand,
A flash of the ocean spray,
A simple shell on the lonely strand,
A rainbow fading away:

Such, such is life and though lowly, these
Have each their mission and part,—
The dew and the rain, the flowers and the trees,
The ocean—the human heart.

And like all of these in life's surging throng,
There's a simple place for me,—
A note or a chord in dear nature's song,
To swell her great harmony.

SIC ITUR AD ASTRA.

BY CORINNE OAKSMITH, JUNE, 1879.

Oh, the crosses that are carried
Which the world can never know—
Oh, the hopes by sorrow buried,
Where Lethe's waters flow!

Oh, the idols crushed and broken,
Along life's thoroughfare—
Oh, the burdens all unspoken,
Whose ashes mouldor there!

Oh, the tasks in secret taken
For God alone to see—
Oh, the patient faith unshaken,
Through years of misery!

Oh, the vain endeavors wasted,
The sacrifices lost—
Ye who life's joy have tasted,
Know not the heavy cost!

Oh well for the children of sorrow,
As they tread the lonely track,
That the shadows of to-morrow,
Have never yet come back.

We know in the great supernal,
God watches us one and all,
And gathers with love eternal,
Our treasures as they fall.

He garners them in His keeping,
However we faint and die,
And the end of earth's sorrow and weeping
Is immortality.

A contract has been made for finishing the Presbyterian church at San Antonio, Texas, at a cost of $4,600, the sashes, glass and pews excepted. The building was begun during the pastorate of Rev. Dr. Bnting in 1859. When completed and furnished the church will be the best finished house of worship of the Presbyterian Church in Texas.

Rev. Dr. J. G. Shepperson was installed pastor of Leesville church, Campbell county, Va., on the 13th ult. Great interest was manifested in the services, and a warm welcome given to the pastor. Dr. Shepperson serves this congregation half his time, and the remainder goes to the New London congregation as an associate with its pastor, Rev. B. W. Moseley.

On the fifth Sabbath in June Rev. N. Keff Smith was installed pastor of the Third Presbyterian church of Atlanta. The committee of installation consisted of Rev. Messrs. Quigg, Martin and Fraser.

The Rev. W. J. McCormick writes to the Southern Presbyterian: "The committee appointed by the Presbytery of Florida to organize a church at the growing town of Waldo, discharged that dnty on Saturday and Sabbath, the 28th and 29th of Jnne, 1879. It consists of two elders and fourteen members.

Five are males and heads of young families; the rest are all mothers. Four were received on profession of faith, among whom was Dr. Joe M. Perry, formerly from Liberty Hill, S. C.; the rest on certificates from churches in various other States. It was a time of refreshing and deep solemnity. Large congregations were in attendance. May the Lord still bless them."

The Rev. G. W. Maxson has been chosen Professor of English Literature in the Alabama Agricultural College at Auburn, Ala. He is supplying the church at Auburn. During the year the membership has increased from eight to twenty-four.

The Rev. George T. Goetchius has entered on his duties as pastor of the Augusta Second church. His postoffice address has been changed from Milledgeville to Augusta, Ga. —Southern Presbyterian.

The ladies of the First Presbyterian church presented Dr. Nall, as a parting gift to an esteemed pastor, and as "a token of love," with a magnificent silver pitcher, goblets and silver, engraved and chased in an appropriate and artistic style.—Columbus Times.

Montgomery Presbytery on the 27th ult. examined licentiates R. G. Mosely and F. G. Bailey. On the next day they were ordained and Mr. Moseley installed pastor of New Bethel church. Mr. Railey was authorized to labor as an evangelist. A call from Liberty church for pastoral services of Rev. F. G. Railey was placed in his hands. He was allowed time to consider it.

The Rev. A. B. Curry, formerly pastor of the church at Darien, Ga., spent the last two years as a student at the University of Virginia, during which time he graduated in several of its schools. He has now returned to Georgia, and his post-office address has been changed from University of Virginia to Darien, Ga.—Southern Presbyterian.

A member of the Presbyterian church at Fayetteville, Tenn., writes to the Christian Observer: "We have just closed a meeting in our church in which we have been much blessed. It was begun in the Methodist church and carried on for several weeks and closed there, when our church was opened and the meeting continued. There have been a large number of conversions, and quite a number of additions to our several churches. Our church has had seventeen accessions, all on examination, and nearly all Sabbath school scholars. There was an interesting thought connected with the last set who came up together to connect themselves with our church. They all had mothers in heaven. The Rev. J. H. Bryson was with us during most of the meetings, preaching and instructing, rendering services whose value cannot be estimated in this world. The effect upon our churches and community has been very beneficial indeed."

DEGREE CONFERRED.—D. D. on Rev. Donald Fraser, of Decatur, Ga., by Adger College, and on Rev. Henry M. White, of Winchester, Va., by Washington and Lee University.

The post-office address of Rev. Dr. E. O. Guerrant, during a few weeks sojourn among the mountains of Tennessee, will be Leesburg, Washington county, Tenn. The pulpit will be supplied during his absence by Rev. A. McDonald, of Elizabethtown, and other ministers.

Rev. E. McNair, of Jackson, Tenn., has tendered his resignation of the pastorage of the church at that place.

The congregation of the Presbyterian church at Gadsden, Ala., propose to erect a new building for worship. Rev. Jas. Watson is at present supplying the church with preaching and it is growing.

A correspondent of the Christian Observer writes that paper from Ohio county, Ky.: "I will write you of what the Lord has been doing for us in the First Presbyterian church of Ohio county, in the Presbytery of Louisville. A protracted meeting was begun on the Monday night after the first Sabbath in June, and continued for twelve days. Rev. Angus McDonald, of Elizabethtown, was with us, according to the appointment of Presbytery, and preached twice a day for nine days. The Lord greatly blessed his earnest and pointed preaching. Much interest was manifested, and large congregations were in attendance from the beginning; and on last Sabbath, June 22d, fifteen were publicly received into the church upon profession of faith, and three by letter, making eighteen in all. Many of these are heads of families. Our people are much revived and greatly encouraged. During Rev. Mr. McDonald's stay with us he greatly endeared himself to this people. The Lord be praised for His goodness."

GENERAL.

Quite a revival is in progress in the Methodist churches of Alexandria, Va., and union meetings are held in the Methodist Episcopal church, Methodist Episcopal South, and the Presbyterian church, where much spiritual interest is manifested, and a number have been converted.

Rev. Alexander Clark, D. D., a prominent minister of the Methodist Protestant Church, died at the Executive mansion in Atlanta, Ga., on 9th inst.

NORTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Third Presbyterian Church of Chicago has cancelled its indebtedness of $17,000.

The Third Presbyterian Church of Trenton, N. J., was destroyed by fire on 4th of July inst. The fire was caused by rockets falling upon the shingled roof. Loss $15,000, covered by insurance.

Within seventeen months the Presbytery of Idaho has increased from three churches, with one active ordained minister, to nine churches and seven commissioned, ordained missionaries, one W. C., and two licentiates.

A Presbyterian minister in Colorado has within a year organized two churches, built one house of worship, and a parsonage, bought a church organ, established two Sunday schools and three prayer meetings, taught three catechism classes, and supplied six preaching stations.

The Interior furnishes the following: "The ratio of gifts to foreign missions of the several evangelical denominations in this country is complimentary to our people. The Presbyterians (North, South, and United) lead with the sum, for the year, of $562,000. Next follow the Congregationalists, giving $457,000, (but they give more per capita than any other denomination.) Then come the great Methodist Church, with $342,000; Baptists, $242,000, Episcopalian $90,000; Reformed Church, $55,000. The Methodists and Baptists together, who outnumber us five to one, give only about as much as our people do."

BAPTIST.

The Rev. John M. Carpenter, who is a member of the First Baptist Church of New Brunswick, has, it is stated, fallen heir to $30,000. He has been laboring for years in the mountains as a missionary of the New Jersey Baptist Association, and is over seventy years old.

The Rev. Dr. James S. Backus, former secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, died July 3d, aged seventy years.

METHODIST.

—The Chinese in New York are meeting for religious services regularly every Sunday, and on several evenings of the week. They are under the general supervision of the Rev. C. S. Brown, Methodist missionary at Five Points.

EPISCOPAL.

The Rev. Dr. Hardie, of Danville, a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, has been engaged by the congregation of the Groveland Presbyterian Church, N. Y., to supply them for a year.

The Rev. Dr. S. H. Tyng, Jr., is recovering from his severe illness, but will be obliged to defer active work for some time.

The Rev. Howard Malcolm, D. D., formerly pastor of the Second Baptist Church, Newport, R. I., and now Secretary of the American Peace Society, with an office in Boston, was received into the Episcopal Church, at Newport, a few days since, by confirmation, at the hands of Bishop Clark, together with four members of his family.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The endowment of $50,000 to the Chicago Theological Seminary provides a new Professorship of "New Testament Literature and Interpretation," to which Professor Hyde is transferred from the chair of Pastoral Theology.

Miss Clarissa Cushing, a maiden lady of wealth, in Dover, N. H., has given one thousand dollars to the First Parish of Dover to be applied toward the liquidation of the debt incurred by the recent remodeling of the house of worship.

LUTHERAN.

At the beginning of the present year Augustana College at Rock Island had a debt of $33,009. During the year $16,000 of this have been paid.

REFORMED EPISCOPAL.

Liens on the Bishop Cummins Memorial Reformed Episcopal Church, at Baltimore, amounting to $5,500, have been removed by the Council of the Reformed Episcopal Church. The sale of the edifice has, therefore, been countermanded, and the church has been saved to the denomination.

The attention of our readers is called to the advertisement of the Vest Pocket Cure in our advertising columns. The Religious Herald, of Richmond, the Baptist organ of Virginia, says: It is endorsed by the direct personal testimony of men of national fame and of strictness of speech. It is not too much to say that no medicine ever had such support in its favor as a specific. The word of any one of the eminent divines who underwrite this antidote to dyspepsia has deserved weight. Their united witness, joined with the experimental use and approval of the preparation by well-known physicians, removes all doubt. It is, beyond question, a wonderful therapeutical agent.

In Winston, on the 2d instant, Mrs. ELIZABETH WILSON, in the 90th year of her age.

She was of Quaker descent, and her early life and training were cast in the mould of that faith. Some time after her marriage, which occurred in 1807, she united with the Methodist Protestant Church, whence she came into the Presbyterian Church of this place at its organization 17 years ago. Full of years, she was also full of the faith and the patience which inherit the promises, coming to her grave in peace and "in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season." I.

LILLY CANNON fell asleep in Jesus on the 25th day of April, 1879.

Although but 21 years of age she was highly esteemed as one of Poplar Tent's choice lady members—beautiful in her Christian character, kind and gentle in her deportment. She leaves many friends and no enemies; she leaves a husband, sister and child to mourn her loss. For her to live was Christ and to die was gain." PASTOR.

In Greensboro, N. C., July 7th, Mrs. SUSAN ISABELLA, wife of Thomas A. Rankin in the 45th year of her age.

Mrs. Rankin had set her house in order. She was an humble believer in Jesus. March 10th, 1856, she connected herself with the Presbyterian church at Bethel, and was still at her death, an esteemed member of the same. A few days before her decease she called her family around her bed and gave them her parting council. Her end was that of the righteous, marked with Gospel peace and hope. S. N. R.

At his residence near Greensboro, June 23d, MOSES McQUISTIAN RANKIN, in the 65th year of his age.

In the death of Mr. Rankin, a good man has fallen, the community has lost a most estimable citizen and neighbor, the poor a friend, and the church a worthy and consistent member. I have heard it frequently said of him, "he died without an enemy,"—"the poor never went away from his house empty." Owing to the nature of his last illness, (congestion of the brain,) we are deprived of his dying testimony, as to the firmness and strength of the hope in Jesus. But we have what is better the testimony of a consistent Christian life. We believe it is well with him. He connected himself, by profession of faith, with the Presbyterian church, at Buffalo, September 30th, 1854, and continued an esteemed member of the same, till he was called, as we trust, to the upper sanctuary. S. N. R.

In Columbia, S. C., of cholera infantum, on June 28th, 1879, CORNELIA, the infant daughter of the Rev. J. B. and Mrs. Hattie Mack, at the age of five months and ten days.

At sunrise we "perceived that the Lord had called the child." Soon the clasp of the casket was unloosed—the lids uplifted—then, our pearl was gone—and only the cold, crumbling clay was left!

But "it is well." Yes, since thus the Saviour willed and wrought, it "is far better." Though we know not now all that we will know hereafter; yet, even now we can say and sing.

"Up in that beautiful city,
Which hath no need of the sun,
Safe—on the Shepherd's bosom—
Resteth the little one."

CHARLOTTE INSTITUTE.
SESSION BEGINS SEPTEMBER 10, 1879.
Testimonials as to the Thoroughness and High Standard of the Instruction at this Institute for Young Ladies.
"C. M. I." CHARLOTTE, N. C., May 19th, 1879.
We have personally inspected some of the examination papers of the Charlotte Institute for Young Ladies and the work of the pupils upon them. The examinations are searching, and the pupils' work gives evidence of instruction as careful and thorough as that afforded in our best male schools. We are satisfied that the Distinctions and Certificates of Proficiency awarded by the Institute are good criteria of the attainments of those who receive them. From our knowledge of the Principal's success here and elsewhere in the instruction of young ladies, we cordially recommend the Institute to those who seek a thorough education for their daughters.
WM. CAIN, Prof. Math., &c., "C. M. I."
M. M. HARGROVE, Prof. of Latin, &c., "C. M. I."
Having personally inspected the examination papers of the Charlotte Institute for Young Ladies and the work of the pupils upon them, I am prepared to pronounce the course extended and the instruction thorough. I think the papers would compare favorably with those handed in by the best male schools of the State. A certificate that a pupil had successfully passed such examinations would be sufficient evidence of her attainments to any one who knew their character.
WM. W. CARSON, Prof. Mat., Davidson College, N. C.
"Having long known the Rev. Wm. R. Atkinson, as a student of the South Carolina College, subsequently of the University of Virginia, and (from personal examination of his work) as a successful teacher of Mathematics and the Natural Sciences, I can very cordially give my testimony to his fine culture, and to his skill as an accomplished instructor.
Mr. Atkinson is an honor to his profession, and his School is well worthy of the patronage of those who seek a thorough education for their daughters.
CHARLES S. VENABLE."

[From Charles B. Bradley, Professor of Thorough Bass, and Band Master, Dana's Musical Institute.]
"Prof. Aloys Bidez has for two years been my fellow teacher in Dana's Musical Institute, Warren, O. I have known him all the time to be faithful to his duties and painstakings in his department which was that of the Piano. This department greatly improved under his care, either through his peculiar method of teaching, or through the studies and musical works he introduced. He has always won the respect and friendship of every one of his pupils through his firmness and kindness. He has shown himself proficient in Thorough-Bass, Harmony and Orchestration; and when at one time he was in charge of the Vocal Department of this Institute, he also proved himself a thorough teacher of Vocal Music.
[From Rev. C. B. Hulbert, President of Middlebury College, Vermont.]
"It gives me pleasure to commend Miss Susan A. Sherman as a lady of high personal culture, and especially accomplished in her chosen profession as an Artist. A niece of the celebrated Boston Artist and Portrait Painter, Albert G. Hoyt, Esq., she early caught an inspiration from his works, and manifested something of his genius. The fine opportunities she has enjoyed from early youth, the excellent school in which she was drilled in art-culture, and the long experience she has had as a teacher, with its acknowledged success, combine to make her a rare acquisition to any Institution of Collegiate Training."
C. B. HULBERT.
N. B.—The entire corps of the able and experienced teachers of the last session has become permanently connected with the Institute. For terms or any information address the Principal,

The Invention of the Age.
It does not destroy the draft.
It does not interfere with cleaning the tubes.
It will not choke up, and requires no cleaning.
It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable, as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape.)
It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.
It is simple and durable and can be relied upon.
It can be attached to any boiler.
No planter should be without one of them. Insurance companies will insure gins and barns where the Talbott Engines and Spark-Arresters are used at same rate as charged for water or horse-power.

Discouragements.

Discouraged, little maiden,
Because your sum is hard?
A merry heart makes figures smile;
They mock your sadness all this while;
With sunny face and purpose strong,
The answer 'll come ere long.

Discouraged, anxious mother?
The child must be a child,
Serious thoughts will come with years,
With hopeful heart, instead of tears,
Now goodly seed, ere youth be gone:
The reaping comes anon.

Discouraged, weary teacher?
Call your labor vain?
The little hands that restless play,
And rise before you day by day,
In life's stern school may bear brave part;
O Weary one, take heart!

Discouraged, faithful pastor?
Hast toiled and waited long?
Thou may'st not know the flames divine
Kindled in hearts by words of thine;
Waiting is weary, but—the crown!—
Brave soul, be not cast down;

Discouraged, Christian soldier,
Because the fight goes hard?
The more the need of your strong arm.
Up! bravely sound the loud alarm!
—The watchword is, "Eternal life;"
On to the mortal strife!

The Fortuna's Last Freight.

Three schooners were anchored in a New England seaport, one Sabbath morning. They were laden for Boston, but had been detained by foul weather.

"If it clears a bit, I'll be out o' this!" said Job Kittery, captain of the "Fortuna."

Luke, his deformed son, whose isolated and painful life had brought him very near the Saviour, seemed greatly disturbed at his father's words.

"I hoped you wouldn't start to-day," he said, in a rich, pathetic voice. "I have been listening to the church bells and wishing we could go."

"A man can't wait for the Sabbath when he has bread to earn," replied Job, testily, "You and your mother wouldn't get no clothes to wear to meetin', or meat to give ye strength to get there, if 'twa'n't for your wicked old father!" adding, "I don't see no harm in startin' to-day."

"No good ever comes o' disobeying God," said the boy earnestly. "Whenever you've ventured out on the Sabbath, mother and I have prayed that you might be kept from harm. I know God heard us, for you came back safe. But something will happen if you keep on breakin' the Lord's law."

Job sneered but his hand shook as he lit his pipe. Luke's upright life and fearless utterances often woke the old man's sleeping conscience.

"Sailors obey only wind and tide," he said gruffly. "I never bothered about Sunday, and look at my success! I own the fastest sailing craft on the coast, a cottage on shore, and buy ye piles o' books. Now what's aboard that head o' yourn?" more kindly, as the boy's lip trembled.

"I was wishing I could take my turn at the ropes; it nearly breaks my heart to think I'll never do a man's work,"—his magnetic voice so pressed with tears that the impulsive old man was forced to wipe his own eyes. "But he who created me knows best. When my days are finished here, if I love him he will give me a home where I shall never be lame and never be sick. Oh, I shall be so happy, for my back 'll be strait there, I know, and I shall see the King in his beauty."

"Don't!" murmured Job, with upheaving chest, "we want ye here, your mother and I."

It was not often the rough man was thus softened. Luke was emboldened to say, "Dear father I'll wait you there, too, if you were only a Christian, how happy mother and I would be!"

Job mastered some strong inner feeling before he could say. "I'm willin' you should take comfort, lad; but I'd lose many a trip if I was pious. I can't afford to stay in port when Sunday brings a fair wind; some other fellow'd get the start o' me. I'd been before the mast now, 'stead o' bein' cap'n o' my own ship if I'd been squeamish 'bout Sunday. Now, I start, Sunday or no Sunday, get my freight unloaded and am off with another cargo before other chaps are awake. That's the way to make this ere coastin' pay!" Job chuckled, and started up to look for signs of fair weather, Luke's appeal forgotten in his eagerness to be on the way again. The boy's only hope now was that the weather would detain them. But towards noon the fog lifted somewhat.

"The wind's shifted a leetle," said Job, "I guess I'll venture."

"Don't start to-day, father," interposed Luke. Job muttered angrily, but the lad still entreated: "I believe evil will come of it if you do."

"It's time you were cured of such notions," said Job, more incensed because the men heard this. "I'll risk Sunday work. So cast off, my boys!"

It seemed to Luke that he could not have it so; he touched his father's arm, but was shaken off and told to be silent.

"Getting under way, cap'n?" asked one from the next schooner.

"Well, yes," returned Job. "At any rate I'll creep down the harbor and see if it's clear outside.'"

"Looks thick outside to me," and the other shook his head. "I think it's comin' on to blow. There hain't a schooner that will venture out to-day!"

"So I think, sir," said the "Fortuna's mate" in an undertone.

"Heave up the anchor, boys!" cried Job. The 'Fortuna' 'ill be in Boston to-morrow morning." His heart was bound up in this swift-winged craft. As she glided down the harbor, obeying every turn of the wheel, he told again of the trades she had won, the gales she had weathered, the burdens she has carried. He said nothing about turning back when they found it "rough" outside. The mate who had sailed over many waters, thought it unwise to go on, and the men grumbled sorely.

"We shan't make much headway, with this wind, sir," again murmured the mate. "We shall have to tack constantly; the men'll be used up before morning if we try to run for Boston."

But the captain was deaf to all remonstrances. The "Fortuna" kept on into the gathering darkness; the wind howled, the waves ran mountain high, the spray dashed over her decks and upon the deformed boy who clung with both hands to his seat, as the ship rose and fell. For awhile Job seemed in good spirits, boasting that he "had carried her through worse seas." Perhaps he thought he could now, but the Lord of the Sabbath was against him, and he was to find himself powerless. At last a gloom fell upon his spirits, also. He ordered Luke below, where the boy crept into his berth, and lay with clasped hands and softly moving lips. In the fearful odds against them he trusted in God alone.

At eight o'clock the storm came in wind and sleet. Job often had to leave the wheel now to help the tired men execute his rapid orders. Luke ventured to peep out.

"Stay below, lad!" Job shouted, his face set and fierce as if in mortal combat. "You couldn't live in this!"

Job tried to "make for Cape Ann," but the gale drove them out to sea, choked the pumps, and tore away rudder and mainmast. Just as that fateful Sabbath waned, the captain abandoned the "Fortuna" to her fate, and tottered to the cabin, exhausted and half-crazed, followed by the mate and sailors.

"She's carried her last freight, my boy," said Job, piteously. "We threw it overboard long ago. I can't do anything to save her, or us, from going to the bottom."

"God took your weapons, father," said Luke solemnly. "Didn't you hear his voice in the storm?"

"Don't!" cried Job hoarsely. "I knew it was wrong to start as I did; but I dared your God, Luke. He's dealin' with me now; and you must suffer for my sin," gathering the lad in his brawny arms and weeping over him. "Boys," said he brokenly, "my folly has brought you here I can't hope for forgiveness from God, or you. If I'd hearkened to my poor lad here, we'd been safe in port now. If so be that you can square your last account with God Almighty, do it quickly, for only a miracle can save us now."

Despair was on every face before him; evil faces they were, too, for Job Kittery hired his men from wharves without any questions.

"I've done nothing but swear against the Almighty," said one, breaking the awful silence; "my account can't be squared, nohow."

"P'r'aps the cap'n's got something to make a body forget trouble," said the other, recklessly. "I never got ready for this. If I'm to go to the bottom to-night, I'd rather go without knowing it."

Before Job could speak, Luke cried, "Don't talk of drink now! Perhaps God will let us live yet. I know mother's on her knees in the cottage praying for us. God always heard her," added the child, his face shining in the gloom. "And she'll read what the Bible says about those that go down to the sea in ships'—we always do stormy Sabbaths." Job groaned. "I can say it by heart," and he repeated a portion of the 107th Psalm.

"Curus that ere should read so," said the mate, breathlessly.

"'They cried unto the Lord, and he brought them out of all their distress,'" said Luke. "Let us pray!"

The boy's lips were used to prayer. When his wondrous petition had ended, the men were on their knees, too. Even Job Kittery cried to God for mercy. Surely the young Christian and the repentant men in that storm-tossed barque made the "two or three" who have the Master's promise to be in "the midst," for the tempest was calmed, and at daylight the sinking "Fortuna" was seen by a steamship, and all on board were saved. They left the schooner to her fate. Job Kittery's pride had stretched her swift wings on the waters for the last time; she had indeed "carried her last freight," and despite his successful ventures on the Lord's day, her captain had the prospect of spending his old age "before the mast."

But Job's bitter lesson was blessed to his conversion; he became a happy Christian. Often to eager listeners the old sailor tells the story of the Cross, and how he found peace in believing by means of God's frown on the 'Fortuna's' "last freight."—Helen C. Barnard in Zion's Herald.

Honeymoons.

Spite of the popular view that the honeymoon is the special month of felicity, the old-fashioned idea of matrimony is certainly more true which does not regard its beginning as by any means the most happy time of wedded life. When passion gives way to deep-settled love, husband and wife afford to look back upon the honeymoon with a smile, and join youthful mockers in laughing at any luckless couple about to enter the fool's paradise. Besides the novelties of temper and disposition which then become apparent in the young husband and wife for the first time, many untoward accidents may befall them which at this interesting epoch press upon them with especial harshness. Thus the unlucky bride loses all her luggage, including the most valuable of her wedding presents; or she catches a crying cold in her head, or the measles—all which we have known to occur; or she has her most becoming bonnet irrevocable ruined by a shower; or the happy pair ramble too far afield, and find themselves footsore and out of temper; or else they are intercepted by the tide and rescued at some risk, too happy if they have not to be drawn up the cliff by ropes, to the intense delight of the watering place's visitors. If the honeymoon can be safely tided over without a quarrel, the happy pair may cherish good hopes. They must be supernaturally amiable. Another incident of honeymooos at the seaside is, that landladies and land house keepers think the youthful pair suitable victims to their greed. It is taken for granted that they are so absorbed in gazing into each other's eyes, that they will never look into such common place matters as bills; consequently we have known a couple straying through the fairy land of a honeymoon utterly forgetful of so sublunary a commodity as money, until rudely awoke by a very substantial series of bills. Indeed a honeymoney utterly often costs a happy pair in a good position of life as much in proportion as a funeral does a poor person.—Scottish Am. Journal.

The Clergy of Shakespeare's Day.

The humblest mechanic of England to day has conveniences and comforts which the richest nobles lacked in Harrison's day, but it was nevertheless an age of luxury and extravagance; of brave apparel, costly and showy beyond that of any Continental people, though wanting in refined taste; and of mighty banquets, with service of massive plate, troops of attendants, and a surfeit of rich food and strong drink. In this luxury the clergy of Harrison's rank did not share. Harrison was poor on forty pounds a year. He complains that the clergy were taxed more than ever, the church having become in "ass whereon every man is to ride to market and cast his wallet." They paid tenths and first fruits and subsidies, so that out of twenty pounds of a benefice the incumbent did not reserve more than £13, 6s, 8d, for himself and family. They had to pay for both prince and laity, and both grumbled at and slandered them. Harrison gives us a good account of the higher clergy; he says the bishops were loved for their painful diligence in their calling, and that the clergy of England were reputed on the continent as learned divines, skilled in Hebrew and Greek and the Latin tongue. [illegible] however, a scarcity of preachers and [illegible] in Elizabeth's time and their character not generally high. What could be expected when covetous patrons canceled their debts to their servants by bestowing livings and benefices on their cooks, grooms, pages, and lackeys—when even the universities there was cheating and [illegible] for scholarships and fellowships and [illegible] livings. The morals of the clergy [illegible] conference [illegible] and the bad work [illegible] and these conferences were a "notable spur unto all" of the ministers, whereby to apply their books, which otherwise, (as in times past,) would give themselves to hawking, hunting, cards, dice, tipling at the ale house, shooting, and other like vanities." The clergy held a social rank with trades people; their sons learned trades and their daughters might go out to service. Jewell says many of them were the basest sort of people—unlearned fiddlers, pipers, and what not. Not a few, says Harrison, find fault with our threadbare gowns as if not our patrons but our wives were the causes of our woe. He thinks the ministers will be better when the patrons are better, and he defends the rights of the clergy to marry and to leave their goods if they have any to their widows and children instead of to the church, or to some school, or almshouse, of their husbands, to bestow themselves not so advisedly as their calling requireth; do not duchesses, countesses, and knight's wives offend in the like fully so often as they? And Eve, remarks the philosopher of Radwinter, 'Eve will be Eve though Adam say nay."—Atlantic.

A Celebrated Runner.

The pedestrian feats of the present day are, the Boston Journal says, mist into the shade by the recorded exploits of Ernst Meissen, a Norwegian sailor in the English navy, early in the present century. Meissen first attracted attention by running from London to Portsmouth in nine hours, and soon after he ran from London to Liverpool in thirty-two hours. Having distinguished himself at the battle of Navarino, in 1872, he left the navy and became a professional runner. After winning a number of matches he undertook the feat of running from Paris to Moscow. Starting from the place Vendome at four o'clock in the afternoon of June 11, 1831, he entered the Kremlin at ten o'clock, a. m., on June 25, having accomplished the distance of 1,760 miles in thirteen days and eighteen hours. The employment of Meissen as a courier-extraordinary soon became a popular amusement in European courts. He ran from country to country, bearing messages of congratulation, condolence, or despatches, and always beat mounted couriers when matched against them. He never walked, but invariably ran, his only refreshment being one biscuit and an ounce of raspberry syrup per day, and two short naps of ten or fifteen minutes each in twenty-four hours. These rests he took standing, and leaning against a tree or other support, at each time he covered his face with a handkerchief and slept. After the nap he pursued his way as much refreshed as though he had slept for hours. In 1836, while in the employ of the East India Company, Meissen was charged with the conveying of despatches from Calcutta to Constantinople through Central Asia. The [illegible] 5,515 miles, which the messenger [illegible] in thirty-nine days, or in one-third [illegible] by the swiftest caravan. At last he was employed to discover the source of the Nile. Setting out from Silesia on May 11, 1842, he ran to Jerusalem, and thence to Cairo, and up the western bank of the river into Upper Egypt. Here, just outside the village of Syaag, he was seen to stop and rest, leaning against a palm tree, his face covered with a handkerchief. He rested so long that some persons tried to wake him; but they tried in vain, for he was dead. He was buried at the foot of the tree, and it was years before his friends in Europe knew what fate had befallen him.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Bismarck's Oratory.

"Hush! Bismarck is speaking!" With these words you are ushered into the Reichstag. And it is so. Before even hearing a word you can tell by the aspect of the Chamber that it is the Chancellor who is speaking. With their bodies stretched out, and ears wide open, everybody leans forward to listen. The pencils of the short hand writers fly over the paper with the rapidity of lightning, and you hold your breath involuntarily that you may hear better. From below is heard a feeble voice—one of those voices which by its nervous tone suggests excess of intellectual work. The words come by jerks, each sentence being laboriously formed. The orator is sometimes hurried, sometimes hesitating in his speech. He recalls each sentence, twists it, and turns it about until he has eliminated all the points which an adversary might attack. It is then only that he abandons it to the House. In listening to him you experience a strange excitement, for while this strong man continues his speech you are momentarily feeling that he will suddenly stop short in the middle of his discourse. Not that ideas are likely to be wanting, but one fears lest the weakly voice which issues so laboriously from the Chancellor's robust frame may fail in the midst of a peroration without the possibility to the hearer of picking up the broken threads. The Chancellor himself looks ill at ease while speaking, his thin white hands fidgeting how with one, now with another button of his modest [illegible] waistcoat's uniform. Then they catch [illegible] at the long pencils so much tattled about, seek refuge on the table, and at last rest on the glass of water which stands on the tribune. You might fancy that it was only this resting place that was wanting, for presently his speech grows firmer, more severe; words flow from his lips with greater clearness; his thick eyebrows are lowered still more upon the grey eyes which seem to penetrate the ranks of the Deputies. It is now evident that the orator is approaching the end of his speech; the sentences become shorter and more vigorous. And then the Chancellor draws himself up to his full height; the voice, so weak at first, gains a clear, hard ring, and he throws his last sentence like a bomb into the midst of the Chamber, resuming his seat amid the loud applause of his friends."—Berlin Tägblatt.

Humorous.

A good natured traveller fell asleep in a train and was carried far beyond his destination. "Pretty good joke this is, isn't it?" said he to a fellow passenger. "Yes, but a little too far fetched," was the rejoinder.

"Dont you think that a good likeness of me?" said a pretty wife to her small fraction of herself called her husband. "Very good," was the reply, "except that there is a little too much repose about the mouth."

An ambitious young writer having asked, "What magazine will give me the highest position quickest?" was told, "A powder magazine, if you contribute a fiery article to it."

PRESBYTERIANISM IN NORTH CAROLINA

BY REV. J. RUMPLE.

THE CHURCHES AND MINISTERS OF CHARLOTTE.

At the period when the earlier missionaries, Thomson and McAden, visited Western North Carolina, and even when Rev. Alexander Craighead took his abode in Rocky River and Sugar Creek, the territory now occupied by Mecklenburg county was still a part of Anson. In fact, the "seven churches" of Mecklenburg were already in a formative state, when the country was established in 1762. At this time much of the country was destitute of forests; and beautiful prairies, covered with wild pea vines and luxuriant grass, furnished pasture grounds for herds of wild deer, and hunting grounds for the Catawba Indians. The sparkling tributaries of the Catawba were environed with bustling cane brakes, and the occasional forests abounded with a rich variety of game. Into this fair land, to make a home for themselves, and to lay the foundation of a new order of civilization, came the Alexanders, Davidsons, Brevards, Polks, Jacks, Osbornes, Hendersons, Phifers, Pattons, McLearys, Grahams, Reeses, Harrises, McCullocks, Caldwells, Samples, Rossees, Wallaces, Wallaces, McDowells, Griers, Clarks, McIntyres, Pattersons, Reas, Stitts, Parkses, Walkups, Kerrs, Kirkpatricks, Honstons, Morrisons, Wilsons, Barnetts, Reids, Walkers, Hunters, Youngs, Johnstons, Cannons, Robinsons, Archibalds, Flinns, and others, whose names are as familiar as household words. Their first object was to bring into cultivation the fertile lands lying on the banks of the Catawba and Rocky rivers, Sugar Creek, Steel Creek, McAlpine's Creek, Mallard Creek, Reedy Creek, Coddle Creek, and Buffalo Creek, and erect houses for the protection of their families. This done, "Stands" or "Tents," with log seats, were provided in the sheltering forests, as preaching places, where they could assemble to hear the missionaries who came among them, or unite in the social prayer meeting.

After this, in 1762, Mecklenburg county was established, west of Anson, between Rowan and South Carolina, and extending indefinitely westward. In 1767 a tract of land, containing 360 acres, was surveyed by Henry E. McCulloch, agent for George A. Selwyn, to Abraham Alexander, Thomas Polk, and John Frohock, as trustees and directors of the town of Charlotte. As the people named their county after the native country of the new Queen of George III, who ascended the throne in 1760, so they named the county seat, Charlotte, after the Queen herself. Very loyal indeed were the hearts of these Scotch-Irish colonists, and ready to honor their sovereign in every way that was proper. But very brave and independent, when loyalty failed to secure protection.

Soon after the incorporation of the town, the court house was erected, at the intersection of what are now known as Trade and Tryon streets. This building was constructed of logs placed upon the top of brick pillows, some ten or twelve feet high. A flight of steps from the outside rose to the court room above, while the ground floor—literally such—was used as a place of worship. Here, perhaps, Craighead, who lived about eight miles north of Charlotte, on the Salisbury road, may have preached a few times before his death. After him, Balch of Poplar Tent, the scholarly McCaule of Centre and Hopewell, the polished Joseph Alexander of Sugar Creek, and Hall and Hunter and McCorkle, may have administered occasionally in this rude hall. But Charlotte was near to Sugar Creek, and its people members of that church, and from their own pastor they would receive their principal instruction.

It was from the steps of this court house, that Col. Thomas Polk, at noon the 20th of May, 1775, read the famous Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence, antedating by more than a year the general declaration issued by Congress at Philadelphia. And though this declaration did not result in the immediate liberation of the people from the English yoke, since its leading actors, finding themselves in advance of their countrymen and unsupported, were forced to resume their allegiance and quietly submit a little longer, yet the fires of liberty still smouldered in their bosoms, ready to blaze forth when the tocsin sounded the call to arms. In due time they took their places in the army of freedom and many of them gave their lives for the cause of independence. Of the twenty-seven signers of the Mecklenburg Declaration, ten were Presbyterian ruling elders, and all the rest were connected with the Presbyterian congregations of Mecklenburg, while the document itself is suggestive of the Scottish "Solemn League and Covenant."

At this period Charlotte was a small village containing about twenty houses built on the two streets which cross each other, at what is now appropriately named "Independence Square." This number of houses suggests that there were then about one hundred inhabitants.

After the death of Rev. Alexander Craighead, in 1768, the Rev. Joseph Alexander, a nephew of John McKnitt Alexander, a fine scholar,—a graduate of Princeton, became pastor of Sugar Creek Church, and Principal of its Academy. Through his influence, coupled with that of other leading men, the Colonial Legislature wanted a charter to Queen's College in Charlotte, and though this charter failed to receive the royal sanction, the institution was kept up for a season, under the care of Dr. Isaac V. Alexander, and after him, under Mr. Robert Brownfield. In 1778, Rev. Alexander McWhorter, of New Jersey, was chosen to preside over the institution, now called Liberty Hall, and the following year he removed to Charlotte. An earnest and zealous evangelist, no doubt he continued to exercise the functions of the ministry while he taught in the Academy. But his stay was brief. In the autumn of 1780 the invasion of Lord Cornwallis put an end to the exercises of the Academy, and Dr. McWhorter returned to New Jersey.

In 1787, Rev. Samuel C. Caldwell, son of Rev. Dr. David Caldwell, of Guilford, and grand-son of Rev. Alexander Craighead, was licensed by Orange Presbytery, and spent most of his time for five years in Sugar Creek and Hopewell Churches. He was ordained in 1792 over these two churches, but in 1805 he relinquished Hopewell and gave one-fourth of his time to Charlotte, for a season. In describing the character of the preaching of Mr. Caldwell and his associates of Concord Presbytery, Dr. Foote thus characterizes them: "Hall of Iredell came down like a torrent—a storm—a tempest; his friend, Wilson, of Rocky river, poured out his common sense views of the gospel like a steady day's rain; his neighbor, Robinson, of Poplar Tent, was like a summer day, with a storm of lightning and thunder, rending the oaks; Wallace, of Providence, like a hot sun melting by its direct rays; while Caldwell, of Sugar Creek was like the sunshine and showers of April." But the beloved pastor passed to his rest October 3, 1826, in the 59th year of his age.

The next year, 1827, the Rev. R. H. Morrison became the pastor of Sugar Creek, giving one fourth of his time to the people of Charlotte. He remained at Sugar Creek until 1837, when he became President of Davidson College. His relation to the Charlotte people ended, however, in 1832, and from that period onward the history of the Charlotte Church must be sketched by itself.

For many years there was no church building in the village, the people being content to worship in the court house, and the Presbyterians holding their membership in the neighboring churches. About the year 1824, or 1825, however, the first church edifice, a brick structure, was completed, on or near the site of the present church, the Rev. Jas. McRee preaching the dedication sermon. On the 11th of January, 1832 the Rev. Abner J. Leavenworth, with his family, arrived in Charlotte for the two fold purpose of conducting a female seminary and preaching to the Presbyterian congregation, though there was yet no organized church in the town. In the summer of this year (1832) an interesting revival of religion occurred under the preaching of two Baptist clergymen—Rev. Messrs. Furman and Barnes, assisted by Mr. Leavenworth. On the fourth Sabbath of August, 1832, the of Charlotte was organized with thirty-six members, with David Parks and Nathan B. Carroll as ruling elders. In January, 1833, Mr. Leavenworth became the regular supply of the church, and afterwards was elected and installed pastor, the installation taking place May 3, 1834. At this service Dr. Morrison preached the sermon and Dr. Robinson delivered the charges. About the same time Wm. E. McRee and Jos. Sumner were elected and ordained ruling elders. In 1835, Alexander Graham, and in 1838, Dan Alexander were elected to the bench of elders. After a service of eight years, Mr. Leavenworth removed to Petersburg, Va., and was succeeded by Rev. J. F. W. Freeman as supply, who continued to serve the church until 1845. In 1842 James H. Orr was ordained ruling elder.

Up to this time the membership continued very small, there being in 1845 only two ruling elders, and 28 members.

"TURN ON THE LIGHT."

MR. EDITOR:—Like your correspondent P. H. D., I am puzzled; "and it is all about this book of genius"—this Comet.

Shortly after its appearance, I read the book, and, though somewhat bewildered—not knowing what to think of it all—was charmed by the elegance and purity of the style, and amazed at the wonderful learning or imagination, the facts or fancies,—I could not tell which—of the author, then known, to me at least, only as an able lawyer, politician, and railroad president.

However, I had worked myself up to a high degree of enthusiasm about this "original work of an original North Carolinian," and was trying in my feeble way, to interest others in it, when my ardor was checked by hearing, that my old friend and school fellow, a prominent geologist, who ought to know, had dismissed the book with the curt criticism, that the new things in it were not true, and the true things were not new."

Afterwards I saw, in print, but where I cannot say, that a learned and distinguished man, somewhere North, regarded the book as a wonderfully clever caricature; that the writer's object was to show, that he could produce just as plausible arguments to sustain his wild extravagant and grotesque theories as the scientists could in favor of their so-called, science of geology.

And, now, comes your learned correspondent "S." who evidently regards the work as not only entirely serious, but true as well as new.

I am puzzled: "Turn on the Light"—some body.

THE BIBLE ILLUSTRATED BY THE CHALDEAN TABLETS.

In the Chaldean Accounts of Genesis, by George Smith, translated from various inscribed tablets from among the ruins of Babylon, the prevailing numbers that occur are twelve and seven; ten is seldom used. These correspond to the same found in the Bible, and illustrate it. He found a series of 12 tablets on the subject of the deluge, like so many notes in a modern book; 12 tablets giving an account of creation. They had a circle of 12 great gods, all but one or two of whom are mates. The Romans had the same number of Superior Divinities, but equally divided in sex, with attributes nearly the same as the Chaldean.

In the tablets of creation he finds 12 months, or signs of stars; 12 constellations, or signs of the zodiac. A star near where the sun crossed the boundary between the old and new year, was one of 12 supposed to be favorable to Babylonia. "12 men fled," in one case. Something continues to a limit in 12 days. After the flood the land rose for 12 measures, &c., &c. We know how often this number 12 occurs in the Bible—75–100 times: 12 months, 12 prices, 12 tribes, 12 wells, 12 pillars, 12 stones, 12 Disciples, 12 baskets, &c. There were twelve States in Etruria; 12 divisions in Attica; Anglo-Saxons had 12 jurymen, as we now have.

There is a still greater agreement in the use of the number seven: 7 stages in the Tower of Babel; 7 gods, 7 warrior gods, 7 kings, 7 brothers of the same family, 7 wives, 7 winds, speaking of the dragon of the sea. "He made the evil wind, the hostile wind, the 4 winds, the 7 winds—he brought out the winds he had created, seven of them." We have in the Bible 4 winds. Ezk. 37: 9; Dan. 7: 2; 8: 8; Rev. 7: 1; but never 7. The Romans had 4 main ones, but 8 in all.

Mr. Smith finds an exact correspondence between the 7 days of creation in the Bible and in the Chaldean legends; seems connected with the deluge the same as in Genesis, or nearly. 7 evil spirits—evil gods—the 7th was the messenger of the god Ann, their king;" "in those days those 7 evil spirits came;" "7 of them, the evil gods, who like a flood descend and sweep the earth;" the spirits of death: 7 chiefs; 7 claws of the eagle; 7 gates of Hades, but the Bible has only one. Isa. 38: 14; 5: 14. "Hell enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure." 14: 9. In Job. 17: 16, "bars of the pit;" Ps. 9. 13, "the gates of death," is very much like the Chaldean phrase.

Luke 8: 2, "certain women, which had been healed of evil spirits and infirmities, Mary called Magdaline, out of whom went seven devils." Mark 16: 9. Though Christ and the apostles often cast out evil spirits, unclean spirits, even in one case (Luke 8: 30) a legion from one man, yet the number seven is not found elsewhere in this connection; but in Mat. 12: 43–45, the unclean spirit taketh with himself 7 other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there," &c.

In the Old Testamen 1 K. 22: 22, 23, evil spirits tronblo men. 1 Pet. 5: 8, "your adversary, the devil, walketh about," &c. Rev. 1: 4, "the seven spirits before the throne," and 3: 1, "the seven spirits of God, and the 7 stars."

Amos 5: 8, "7 stars," are mentioned. This number has been used extensively in the work. Josephus, contra Apion, II., 40, says, "there is not any city of the Grecians, nor any of the barbarians, nor any nation whatsoever, whither our custom of resting on the seventh day hath not come." Tytler's Hist., vol. I., p. 356, says, "The week was universally divided into 7 days; and what is almost astonishing, the Chinese, the Indians and the Egyptians, designated these days by the names of the planets, ranged precisely in the same order, which order is entirely an arbitrary one, and not dependent either on their magnitude or distances from the sun. Chances could not have produced such wonderful coincidences." The number 7 was sacred to Apollo, a heathen god, born on the 7th of the month; on the 7th of every month sacrifices were offered to him: his festivals were on the 7th of every month.

We have the seven colors of the rainbow, and the changes of the moon nearly, but not quite, divide the month into weeks; we cannot say. It must have been derived from a Divine idea, and this spread over the world. We find in the Book of Esdras, in the Apocrypha, the same use of 12 and 7, the duration of the world is divided into 12 periods; 12 feathered wings, 12 kings, 7 days, &c. In the Book of Enoch too, 7 stars are imprisoned; 7 shining mountains, the glory of God on the top of the 7th; 7 other mountains north; 12 gates of heaven for sun, moon and stars; 12 open windows: but different from the Apocrypha, it divides the time of the world into 10 parts or weeks.

We sometimes find in these old documents the half of ten, 5, and the half of twelve, 6, but in no other book than the Bible do we find 3½, the half of 7, used as a sacred number. Jas. v: 17, Luke iv: 25, Dan. xii: 7, 7, 25.

We see the prevalent use of 12, in the most ancient times; and while the basis of numeration in almost all nations is ten, from counting the fingers, why is it that with merchants that the dozen is so common? Eggs and chickens so much per dozen. Where did it originate? With our system of coinage, increasing by tens, it would seem that it would be better and more convenient to proceed by tens instead of dozens. Brande's encyclopedia of Numeration says, "The mode of reckoning by twelves or dozens may be supposed to have had its origin in the observation of the celestial phenomena; there being 12 months or lunations commonly reckoned in the solar year. It appears in the subdivisions of weights and measures, as 12 ounces to the pound, 12 inches to a foot; and is still very generally employed in the wholesale business, extending to the second and even to the third term of the progression. Thus 12 dozen, or 144, make the long hundred of the Northern nations, or the gross of trading, and 12 times this again, or 1728, makes double gross."

The ancient Romans divided the day, from sunrise to sunset into 12 hours, and the night in the same way; they had the troy weight, and the apothecaries' weight, of 12 ounces each; the divisions of time and measure of length, 60 seconds to the minute, 60 minutes to the hour, 60 seconds, and 60 minutes in degrees of the circle of 360, is very ancient. The 60 here, as in the saros, or small hundred, 60 of our Saxon ancestors, was made by multiplying 12 by 5, v, a full hand of five fingers (made by spreading out the hand, and drawing a line on each side till they meet on the wrist) and then the great hundred, or 120, by multiplying 10, or two full hands, by 12. Our ancestors seem to have had both 10 and 12 as the basis of numeration. Tytler says that, "the Chaldeans, Egyptians, Indians, and Chinese had all the same period of 60 years for regulating their chronology." The zodiac was divided into 12 parts. One of the Scandinavian Eddes says, "From the spring Hvergelmer, in Nifelheim, flow 12 river, called the wave of Eli;" a certain writer says that from December 12 to January 6, 12 nights had more superstition connected with them than any part of the year; they are full of superstitions of a heathen origin;" i. e. in Germany, &c., we may see the use of 10 and 12 as the basis in all the languages of Northern Europe related to the Anglo-Saxon, by their mode of forming 11 and 12. The Greeks, Romans, &c., counted to 10; then 10 and 1 was 11, 10 and 1 was 12, &c., to twenty, 2 tens. But we go to 10, and make 11 and 12 differently, and then go regularly on, 10 and 3 thirteen, &c. Klipstien's Anglo-Saxon Grammar says that, "this practice of using lif, leafer, &c., in these two numerals 11 and 12 entered our system of numerals anterior to the history of our tongue, and is common to all the Germanic languages." This illustration of the Bible from the Chaldean legend in what we now speak of, the numbers 12 and 7, is a matter aside from the object of the writer and translator Smith, and one to which he does not advert; it is incidental to his wonderful corroborations of the Book of Genesis.

AN OVERSIGHT.

Will the editor of the Presbyterian allow me to correct an error and call attention to an oversight in brother Rumple's article, "Granville county, No. 1," in the series: Presbyterianism in North Carolina?

He gives the membership of communicants in Grassy Creek at 38 in 1878. The number of communicants in the other churches of Granville county, is correct as given in the Minutes of the General Assembly of 1878, which report Grassy Creek with thirteen. I think I see how the error was made: Red House, immediately over Grassy Creek, reports thirty-eight. The correct number for '78 at Grassy Creek was twenty-four (24) and is now twenty-eight. The omission is this: The church in Henderson, under care of Rev. D. E. Jordan, is not enumerated with the churches of Granville. I do not know its actual membership, but it is perhaps the most promising church in the county.

The town of Henderson is rapidly growing under the impetus of the bright tobacco trade and bids fair to rival Durham. The church is likewise growing, and I hear a new house of worship is in contemplation, since the old can scarcely accommodate the congregation. To omit the church in Henderson from the list of Granville churches is an important omission.

HYMNS.

Devotional verse is one of the oldest and most natural forms of song, and it is not with wherever the the instinct of worship takes outward form.

The following is Lord Shelborne's admirable definition of what a good hymn should be: "It should have simplicity, freshness, and reality of feeling; a consistent elevation of tone, and of rhythm easy and harmonious, but not jingling or trivial. Its language may be homely, but should not be slovenly or mean. Affectation or visible artifice is worse than excess of homeliness; a single hymn is easily spoiled by a single falsetto note. Nor will the most exemplary soundness of doctrine atone for doggerel, or redeem from failure a prosaic didactic style."

I believe a martial ode is understood to be one of the most difficult forms of metrical composition, and I suppose we might say the same of devotional poetry, seeing how very few fine hymns we possess.

It is thus that Dr. Johnson accounts for the difficulty: "The paucity of its topics enforces perpetual repetition, and the sanctity of the matter rejects the ornaments of figurative diction. It is sufficient for Dr. Watts to have done better than others what no man has done well." This is trenchant enough, but it seems hardly adequate, and I think the reasons are not far to seek.

A hymn ought to be simple, clear and direct, and we know that rapt devotional feeling is apt to be tinged with mysticism, which, in itself, is opposed to lucidity of expression. The literary and devotional element must be harmoniously blended and balanced, and it must be neither prosaic nor ornate. Unity of subject and purpose is also essential; indeed, many hymns lose themselves in generalities; and, last of all, it must be the perfection of form.

It is very difficult to write a good hymn, and it is remarkable that even our best hymn writers, like Charles Wesley, have seldom succeeded in producing more than one specimen of first-rate excellence; his "Wrestling Jacob," as a poetic allegory, is perhaps the most perfectly sustained work in all English hymnody. Then we have Toplady's Rock of Ages," where the harmony of the emblems, incongruous in themselves, is secured by the devotional fervor that welds them together. These are both powerful hymns. Then there is the Rev. F. H. Lyte's beautiful "Abide with me," which should be confined to its five best stanzas; and lastly, Dr. J. H. Newman's exquisite "Lead, Kindly Light." I do not know any expression in English poetry more beautiful in its way than the turn of the thought in the last half of the last stanza.

Most of John Keble's hymns are on a fairly high level; but the best of them are not equal to those I have quoted. Keble wants clearness and simplicity in thought or diction, and usually in both. This may be said of even his best pieces, such as "Morning" and "Evening." And it seems to me that the devotional poetry of the present day, in spite of its lyric sweetness and delicacy, lacks the vigor and exaltation of the older hymns.

Among other admirable hymns are the Rev. H. Twell's "At Even when the Sun;" Dr. Arthur Stanley's "O Master, it is good to be upon the Mountain here;" Dr. Watts' "Fairest of all the Lights above," and several in Dr. Martineau's excellent "Hymns of Praise," such as "Let no tears to-day be shed," and "Come tread once more the path with song."

What is it that gives a hymn its popularity? Is it merely the music to which it has been set? Let us hope not. Very few hymns reach the great heart of the people; some, like Dr. Watts', endure for generations, and English mothers are now singing them to their children in the backwoods of America, on the Himalayas, and wherever English mothers find themselves. Other hymns, apparently as beautiful, die unrecognized. It is difficult to account for this.

Sternhold and Hopkins' old version was rendered into a metrical form direct from the Hebrew. The Scottish version was by an Englishman, Dr. Rous; and now we have Lord Lorne's skilful and harmonious rendering. The 23d Psalm is lovely in all its versions; no effort of man can stale it, or quench its exquisite beauty.—Frederick Locker.

SANCTIFIED MEANNESS.

A lady rustling in silks is reported to have been moved in her soul to pay her pastor's wife a visit of condolence. Diamonds were swinging from her ears—glowing in mystic light from her fingers; a seal-skin coat, all warm and shiny, on her back; a coupe stood at the door, all satin lined and cushioned, with a gloved groom to do her bidding. The occasion of the call grew out of the last congregational meeting. The trustees had cut down the pastor's salary, and the poor man had to submit, or take his flight in the winter, contrary to the command of his Master. So his wife, as a dernier resort, commenced keeping boarders. The baby was sick, and drifting preachers and acquaintances turned into the manse at unseemly hours, and she could not have the meals regularly, and the boarders complained and left. This saintly sister-parishioner drew out the tale of family woes to gratify her curiosity, and then with a sigh, began to condole with the pale, blood-less-lipped woman—more a lady than herself—on their privations. Turning up the whites of her eyes, as some of the primitive preachers of the south were wont to do, as a preface to the words, "Let us look to the Lord and be dismissed," she proceeded to say, as if pronouncing the first words of a funeral address, "My dear sister, your reward is in heaven."

If some poor child of poverty in a cellar had said it as her all, it would have come over that chafed and weary spirit as a wave of balm from the tree of life, but from silks and satins, glistening in the light of diamonds, it was the vilest cant, enough to make religion a stench in the nostrils of decent worldlings. "You have your reward in heaven. Very good, sister, but will your wealthy husband endorse that promise, and make it negotiable to the milkman? "Your reward is in heaven." Will the board of trustees endorse that promise and make it negotiable to the corner grocery man? Will they make it negotiable to pay the shoe bill? Write that promise on a piece of paper, and fancy your pastor unrolling it in the sanctified way it was given, with the whites of his eyes gleaming with heavenly light, giving it to the conductor to pay six cents for a ride to see some dying parishioner too far away for his strength to endure the fatigue of walking. What do you think that conductor would say over the upturned whites of his eyes and funeral tones as he handed your promise and asked for a cent change? Very likely, "That's too thin. Railroad companies are not trading in long faces and upturned eyes."

There is a story told of Christmas Evans, who received for a large portion of his ministry but £17 per annum, and never more than £30. His biographer, himself a Welshman, says, it must be remembered, as among the anomalies of Welsh religious life, that it combines an insatiable appetite for sermons, with a marvellous disregard for the temporal comfort of the preacher. On one occasion a woman said to Mr. Evans, as he came out of the pulpit: "Well, Christmas Evans, we are back with your stipend; but I hope you will be paid at the resurrection. You have given us a wonderful sermon." "Yes, yes," was his quick reply; "no doubt of that; but what am I to do till I get there? And there is the old white mare that carries me—what will she do? For her there will be no resurrection. But what will you do? What reward will you get for your unfaithfulness at the resurrection? It's hard, but I shall get on at the resurrection; but you, who get on so well in the world, may change places with me at the resurrection."—Presbyterian.

TAKING TIME FOR DEVOTION.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

A friend, burdened with many cares, said to me the other day, "I am happy in my soul. I have taken time to read and pray."

I suppose there are few Christian people who do not consider it among their obligations to read God's Word and pray in secret. But too often, amid the hurry and turmoil of life, these duties are not attended to as they should be, and they cease to seem privileges to the unsatisfied heart. The chapter carelessly or hastily gone over, the prayers, abbreviated in the morning because there is so much work waiting to be done, or sleepily uttered at night, when brain and limbs are tired, constitute too much of the private devotions of many. If a blessing is to distil like dew in the soul, if countenance and demeanor and word and act are to testify of communion with the Highest, then must we often have the still hour in which we shut ourselves in and seek the presence of the Lord.

To the busy mother, who has little hands pulling at her dress and little voices calling her hither and yonder, it may appear at times impossible to enjoy the luxury of meditation and quiet reading. Her spirit is famished for the lack of repose. Her nerves are tortured by incessant friction. She loves her home and her children supremely, and toils for them with unculculating self-abnegation. Yet often her brow is clouded and her tones are sharp, and she makes those she would die for, uncomfortable and ill at ease by her fretful complaining. This would be seldomer so if she would take time every day to be by herself with the Master. Dear, tired woman, leave the household perplexities behind you, go to your own chamber, and close the door. Never mind the cross girl in the kitchen, nor the noisy little fellows who are shouting at their play in the back yard. Forget for a little while the overflowing basket, where lie so many garments to be made and mended. Be not oppressed by the thought of the troubles that are not yet, but may be in existence to vex you to-morrow, or next year. If you know that your husband is carrying a heavy heart because of embarrassments in business, do not let that crush you, but all the more, secure for yourself the time to be alone and to pray for him. The merchant in business, the sailor on the sea, the minister in his study, the clerk at his desk, the man tempted, tried, discouraged, wheresoever he may be, is the stronger and the braver if he has some one at home to pray for him.

There is a familiar hymn which we often sing in our prayer meetings, and it never grows old:

"What various hindrances we meet
In coming to a mercy-seat!
Yet who that knows the worth of prayer,
But wishes to be often there."

I think that we fail to instruct children as we should, that prayer is the real refuge for them when they have griefs and disappointments. Living intently in the actual and the present, a child's heart-aches, over what to older people seem small calamities indeed, are very hard to bear. Jesus is their friend, their helper, their guide, as well as ours. They should know that we go to Him when we are annoyed, or wounded, or anxious or terrified. We should not be satisfied with merely establishing in them the habit of morning and evening prayer, though that is much. In the tenderly affectionate ways, which come easily to those who are gentle and trustful, we ought to lead our little ones to "carry everything to God in prayer." The catechism asks, "Why is prayer necessary for Christians?" and replies, "Because it is the chief part of thankfulness which God requires of us; and also because God will gives His grace and Holy Spirit to those only who with sincere desires continually ask them of Him, and are thankful for them." Sometimes our losses and crosses so vividly set themselves in array before our eyes, and so plainly we observe what may happen to be the crook in our lot, that we are not thankful, as we should be, in prayer. Hurried petitions are apt to resolve themselves into requests only, and sometimes into requests which are very limited and very selfish. If we take time, daily, for reading, for prayer, and for devout thought, the grace of thankfulness will be fostered, and its sweet blossoms will hallow our lives and fill our hearts and homes with fragrance.

Next to the Bible itself, the biographies of strong, earnest, good men and women, aid us in cultivating piety. At least one such should always keep company with our Bible, on the little table, where are our choicest books. There are some lives so wholesome and heartsome, that they may be read many times over with pleasure and profit.

There may be many who do not need to be urged to take time to be rested, and rebuilt and refreshed, by going often to God's presence and lingering long there. Yet always there are some who are sadly conscious that they have fallen away from the warmth of their first love. The Christian life is a triumph, but it is to be gained daily, and we climb upward, over stepping-stones of defeat. We never soar as on wings, except when we get so close to the throne that the breath of heaven fills our hearts.—Christian Intelligencer.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

From the London Weekly Review and other Sources.

The Bishops of Sicily have sent an address to the Italian Senate protesting against the Civil Marriage Bill.

Mrs. Henry Kingsley, widow of the novelist, has instituted Bible classes for the young at Cuckfield, the Sussex village in which her husband died.

During the last five years the Established Church of Scotland has gained 50,000 communicants in a population of 3,360,000. This is an increase of 12 per cent. against an increase in population of only 4 per cent.

A new organization has been started in the Church of England, called "The Evangelical Protestant Union." Its object is to oppose extreme ritualism and further the progress of evangelical piety.

A new society called "The Church and Stage Guild," has been organized in connection with the Church of England. Its object is "to provide religious and social sympathy between members of the church and the stage."

It is an interesting fact in the history of missions that during fifty years the number of native Christians connected with the missions of European and American societies has increased from 40,000 in 1825 to 500,000 in the year ending 1875. And this, with good reasons, is claimed to be an under-estimate. At no time, it may be added, has the work been more prosperous than at present.

An animated meeting in aid of the Irish Church missions to Roman Catholics was held at Dover on Monday evening, at which details were given of the violence to Protestants at Clifton and other parts of the West of Ireland, and it was unanimously resolved that a petition should be signed by the chairman, Dr. Moffat, on behalf of the meeting, and forwarded to the members of Parliament for Dover, to be presented to the House of Commons, praying the Government to protect the Protestants.

The following account of Mr. Spurgeon's Pastors' College and its work appears in a contemporary: Mr. Spurgeon's report of this college, just issued reads like an appendix to the Acts of the Apostles. The report states the very suggestive fact that no less than fifty-three chapels have been called into existence in and around London by the efforts of the Pastor's College, many of which are living centres of earnest agencies designed to reach the various classes of the population. Apart from the preaching of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the men of the Pastors' College are nothing, but herein lies their strength and their glory. Added to the work of creating churches, Mr. Spurgeon mentions what he considered the more difficult task of reviving others. In some instances, churches have been saved from utter extinction, and have renewed their youth, under the inspiring ministry of the college men. The prosperity of other churches has also been perpetuated, and their usefulness extended. These, with the above mentioned, make a grand total of eighty-five, a work sufficient of itself to place Mr. Spurgeon amongst the foremost regenerators of society.

What will Mr. Mackonochie do next, is the question which naturally arises as we read the judgment pronounced on Saturday last? The Queen's Bench prohibition is set aside, and the sentence which Lord Penzance pronounced, suspending Mr. Mackonochie for three years, comes into force. The prosecutors in this case were the Church Association, and they are said to have expended upon it the sum of £50,000. Two judges were in favor of upholding the judgment of the Queen's Bench, but three judges being of a contrary opinion, it has been reversed with costs. The question now is will Mr. Mackonochie be content for three years to cease ministering at St. Alban's? Should he refuse, and should he be brought before the Lord Chancellor for contempt, he is of course liable to imprisonment. There are some of his friends, perhaps, who would encourage him to become "a martyr," and to pay no heed to the judgment which has just been given. More than four years ago Sir Robert Phillimore told him very plainly that he must recognize some authority superior to his own. He is now told in briefer, and perhaps sterner terms, that if he continues contumacions the law must be maintained.

Mr. Gladstone contributes to the current number of the British Quarterly Review an article on the Evangelical Movement—its Parentage, Progress, and Issue." The fathers of the Evangelical school, Mr. Gladstone indicates, were such men as Whitfield, Hervey, Beveridge, Romaine, and Toplady, and the main characteristics of the movement were a strong systematic and outspoken reaction against prevailing standards of life. In the subsequent pages of the paper the right Hon. gentleman sets himself to controvert certain passages in Mr. Leckey's "History of England in the 18th century," first, that before the close of the century the movement was downward in England; and second, that at or somewhere near that period it altered the whole tone and tendency of the preaching of the clergy. Against these two propositions, Mr. Gladstone advances the following counter statements:—First, that the evangelical movement never became, properly speaking, dominant in England—never held anything like the position which the corresponding party held in the Established Church of Scotland at the time when the great controversy of Patronage and the Veto Act began; and second, that without becoming dominant in this sense, it did by infusion profoundly alter the general tone and tendency of the preaching of the clergy, not, however, at the close of the last or beginning of the present century, but after the Tractarian movement had begun, and, indeed, mainly when it had reached that forward stage at which it came rather to be known in a loose and general way by the name of Ritualism. In tracing the relation of Tractarianism to Evangelism, Mr. Gladstone describes the former as a movement obviously in the direction of the Church of Rome, whereas the latter was a movement not obviously in the right direction of Tractarianism. Nevertheless he contends that if we detect in Tractarianism the parent of the Romeward movement we cannot stop there, for the evangelical scheme cannot escape a trenchant and prior responsibility.

WILLIAM THE BAPTIST.

The book of which this is the title was written by Rev. J. M. Chaney, of Lexington, Mo., is published by the Committee of Publication of the Southern Presbyterian Church, and is offered as an entirely fair and clear exposition of the significance of the rite of baptism, and of the mode of its administration. Its style of discussion is conversational, the arguments which are adduced in favor of immersion being set forth on the one hand by an inquirer after the truth, fully indoctrinated, however, in Baptist views, and replied to on the other in a manner showing their utter inconsistency with the teachings of Scripture. But the author does not pull down without building up, as the theory of immersion falls, the scripturalness, hence the truthfulness and the propriety, of affusion rises irresistibly and effectually. In the treatise before us, the subject is examined in the light of the Word of God alone, and in accordance with the following plan:

"1. To ascertain the meaning of the word used to designate the rite: To do this by examining those passages wherein the word occurs, and, from the context and attending circumstances, to ascertain in what sense the word is used by the sacred writers."

"2. To inquire what is the significance of the rite, and see what light this throws on the question of mode."

"3. To examine the cases of its administration found recorded in the New Testament: To examine these in the light of circumstantial evidence."

The author justly claims that "these methods are independent of each other, and if they unite in bring us to the same conclusion, we may be assured that we have the truth."

No objection can reasonably be urged against the plan, for to compare scripture with scripture is of all modes the best for ascertaining divine truth. There is no playing upon words, no culling of texts to suit a purpose, no appeal to learned opinions or obstruse disquisitions, but a plain, straightforward, comprehensive and complete examination of the subject in the light of God's Word.

Presbyterians contend that baptism symbolizes the operation of the Holy Spirit in cleansing and purifying the heart. Baptists urge that it represents the burial and resurrection of our Lord. The difference in views just here is radical. If the teachings of Scripture do not confirm the former, then sprinkling as the proper mode should be abandoned; if they do, then affusion, and that alone, must be recognized as accordant with Bible teaching. Our Baptist friends cannot reasonably forbid to other Christians the right to search the Scriptures and determine for themselves what is taught. Nor can they, who maintain their own views as alone Scriptural, deny to others the right to see matters in an opposite light. We do not unchurch those who differ with us. Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ is the essential to salvation, and the benefits of redemption are not invalidated by these erroneous views concerning the nature of baptism.

The criticism of the book in the Biblical Recorder is dispassionate, though the terms used are harsh. It seems enough for us to say that the terms describing the argument of the book not inaptly express the mode of criticism. Culling passages here and there to suit a purpose, cannot do justice to any sustained argument. We make no special complaint, however.

A few things we must notice. The Recorder says, referring to the baptism of the Eunuch: "If Mr. Chaney, or any other Pedobaptist, were to read in a newspaper in this day an account of a baptism in which both the minister and the candidate went down into the water, he would at once say the baptism was immersion, and I ask why will not men apply the same common sense in interpreting the Bible that they do in understanding a statement made in a newspaper? The circumstances in this case do prove that the Eunuch was immersed." In this day, (it is well put in,) the probabilities would all lead to the supposition that a Baptist minister performed the ceremony, and if so, that it was immersion. But this only proves (if it proves anything) that now-a-days certain antecedent circumstances are followed by certain other circumstances. It does not prove that 2,000 years ago there were any Baptist ministers; in fact it proves nothing for centuries ago. And by just such sophistry, followed by just such confident assertion, thousands no doubt are led to believe in immersion. But let us see if the sword is not two-edged. A paper states: "Mr. —— has been for three days and nights without meat and drink, and suffering under severe physical infirmity. He was visited a day or two since by a minister of the gospel, and arose and was baptised." The case might fairly be made stronger (Acts ix), but this will do. Now, would not any one conclude, without a moment's reflection, that the minister was not a Baptist minister, and that that baptism was not by immersion? Unquestionably.

Suppose another case of newspaper reporting: "It is known to our people that two ministers have been imprisoned for preaching the Gospel. Last night, at midnight, services were held in the prison, the Scriptures were expounded, the jailer was converted, and was baptised, he and all his, straightway." (Acts xvi.) The impression, amounting to a certainty on the public mind, from such a recital, would be that the ministers were Pedobaptists—yes, Methodists—and that the baptism was by pouring. Any suggestion of immersion would be ridiculed. Shall we ask, then, why will not men apply the same common sense in interpreting the Bible, that they do in understanding a statement made in a newspaper? Shall we say that in these cases, the circumstances do prove that the baptism was by affusion? The question is beyond settlement by any such means.

Again, "any poor, simple-hearted Christian can find immersion in the Bible, but it takes a deal of learning and special pleading to find anything else." Is that so? If so, poverty and simplicity of heart wield a wondrous power in enabling persons to see what does not exist. In truth, persons who see, or think they see, immersion in the Bible, have had Baptist practice before them, and not improbably have had Baptist teaching on the subject—and none other—presented to them with the energy and persistence for which our friends are noted. Simple-hearted, Bible-reading Christians, moreover, are not confined to that Church which believes in immersion.

As for learning, we believe that it should be employed freely and to its full extent in elucidating the sacred text—and so does the Recorder; at least we would be considered as doing rank injustice to a sister denomination of Christians, should we charge that ignorance was essential, or even conducive, to belief in the theory of immersion.

All ought to have well defined and Scriptural views on the subject of baptism, and William the Baptist is worthy of general circulation for that purpose.

THE HEBREW COUNCIL.

The recent Council of Hebrews in New York city was one of the most notable of recent gatherings, by reason of the importance as well as the singularity of its acts. A Hebrew college is to be opened in Cincinnati in September to give thorough training to Hebrew youth. The faculty will consist of four tutors, and a professor, the latter being also President. Two departments, preparatory and collegiate, will be organized, and special attention will be given to Hebrew literature, and the study of the historical books of the Old Testaments. Successful examination in the whole course will win the title of Rabbi. A plan for circuit preaching was adopted, in accordance with which ministers will visit various cities and towns where no organizations exist, to preach and establish schools. A proposition to secure Sabbath observance did not effect a great deal. The following was adopted:

"That the religious welfare of the Jewish community depends greatly on the preservation of the Sabbath. It is necessary for us, as for all religious bodies, to have certain ideas in common, and to have certain outward symbols to express them. The means for obtaining a better observance of the Sabbath are, however, not within the reach of the Council. Persuasion, example and education alone can produce a proper sentiment on the subject; no legislation by us can influence the matter."

The matter of most moment before the Council was the proposition to establish a Jewish agricultural colony in the West. This, which would almost seem to do violence to Hebrew tastes and instincts was adopted. It proposes to purchase a tract of land sufficiently large to be divided among fifty families, giving each for the term of seven years fifty to eighty acres free of rental. After seven years each family may purchase the land on favorable terms, and the money obtained will be further invested in land. A model farm school is to be established in connection with the above. A committee was appointed to solicit donations of money, land and farming implements. Hon. Horatio Seymour expressed interest in the subject and a letter from him was read. Delegates were in attendance from all parts of the Union, even as far south as San Antonio, Texas, and west as Omaha.

In the hands of others than Jews the land scheme would appear chimerical, but these people seldom fail in any undertaking to which they devote their energies. It is a fresh outbreak and may lead to farreaching results.

THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE LATE ASSEMBLY.

The report of the above in a pamphlet of nearly 200 pages is before us. It is neatly executed typographically, and the arrangement is good. The delay in getting it into print is explained by the following, which accompanies the pamphlet:

The Reporter apologizes to his subscribers that this report has not been issued earlier, and that it is not as full in some parts as he hoped to make it. The providence of God intervened, and rendered him unable to work for a time, and lately, only under much physical pain; so that so much time had been lost that it was better to curtail certain portions than longer to delay the completion of the report.

EDUCATION.

All correspondence with the Committee of Education of the Southern Presbyterian Church should be directed to Rev. E. M. Richardson, Secretary, at Memphis, Tenn. All remittances of money are to be made, as heretofore, to our Treasurer, G. W. Macrae, 300 Front street, Memphis.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

There is something almost ridiculous in the proposal to make Garibaldi, the Italian hot-blood and filibuster, President of the Peace Congress, to assemble at Rome, in 1880. The Congress, under the auspices of the Peace Society, proposes to adopt a system of international laws, looking to the settlement of all disputes among nations by peaceful means. The Society claims supporters in nearly all the legislative bodies of Europe, and also among the South American States, those chronic fighters. When duly assembled we may look out for resolutions.

Tilbury Fox, M. D., one of the editors of the London Lancet, and head of the University College Hospital, recently died. He was widely known as an author on medical subjects, and was a thoroughly scientific man. He requested in writing that in any obituary of him in the Lancet, the following might appear:

"I die a Christian in the now, I fear, much despised sense of that term, a 'simple believer in Jesus Christ as a personal living and loving Savior,' without any righteousness of my own, but perfect and secure in His; and that 'I know in whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him until that day.'"

Dear Sir:

Perhaps one of these warm days, while you are poring over a large batch of exchanges, to cull something suitable for the N. C. P., a few dollars would move your feelings as much as a drink of cool water. * * * Enclosed please find six dollars and thirty cents, &c.

The kind friend in Alabama, who sent the above, has a just appreciation of our labors and what tends to lighten them.

The Interior semi-seriously intimates that it would like to omit one issue of the paper to take a week's rest. This brings vividly to mind the vacation subject. School teachers, ministers, physicians, merchants—all, can slip away for a few weeks and renew their strength, and why not editors? We have no hope ahead, and resign to our fate. Speaking of ministers, city ministers can avail themselves of opportunities, but our heart goes out to those ministers serving country charges, who are held to their work unceasingly. Think of it, you who can give your minister this much needed rest. Bring your ruling elders into service, and make a prayer meeting or two answer your purpose. Don't wait to be asked; tender it cheerfully, and you will not regret it.

NEWS NOTES.

The Concord Register states that the Presbyterian church at Centre, Stanly county, will be dedicated on Saturday, 26th inst.

We hope to have early tidings of the event.

We are pleased to learn, direct, that the health of Rev. Dr. William Brown is excellent, and if his eyesight can remain without further impairment it will serve for almost any ordinary work.

A horse, drawing a buggy, the property of Rev. A. McFadyen, and in which he was seated at the time with Mr. Thomas Graves, runaway on the 12th inst. and completely demolished the buggy. The gentlemen were thrown violently to the ground, but fortunately escaped with slight injuries. Mr. McFadyen was on his way to fill his regular appointment for preaching at South River chapel. The loss of the buggy is no light matter in itself, apart from the inconvenience resulting.

A correspondent favors us with the following:

"Rev. Roderick Henderson has declined the invitation to the church at Lexington, N. C. We have been abundantly blessed in the meantime by having the services of that most excellent preacher, Rev. W. Watson, of Memphis Presbytery, whose sermons delighted the whole town."

The postoffice address of the Rev. S. H. Isler has been changed from Goldsboro, N. C. to Kinston, N. C.

On Sunday, July 1st, the Lord's Supper was commemorated in the First Presbyterian Church at Raleigh, and as no account of the interesting services of that occasion and day has appeared in the PRESBYTERIAN, I must attribute your failure in receiving such a communication rather to modesty on the part of your correspondent here, than to any negligence on his part. I am always pleased to read of accessions to our Churches, and am sure that your many readers will rejoice that, on the occasion referred to, our church was strengthened by receiving fourteen members; nine upon profession and five upon certificate. Of the nine upon profession seven were boys and young men, and two adults. Eight of the nine were from the Sunday School. About forty persons have connected themselves with our Church since our present pastor, Rev. John S. Watkins, has been with us, something less than one year. In the afternoon at the baptismal service, four infants were presented to receive this beautiful service. The congregation only two days afterwards was pained to learn that one of these little lambs, the infant son of one of the adults who joined the church upon profession, on Sunday morning, had been called to the fold above.

Mr. Jesse Brown, our oldest elder, was stricken with paralysis on yesterday, the 15th inst., at his place of business, with Julius Lewis & Co., and was at once removed to his home, where he is now lying, somewhat relieved, but quite sick. Mr. Brown is quite an old man, in rather feeble health. I called upon him this morning and found him composed and cheerful in Christian faith, ready to abide God's will, whatever it may be. Mr. Brown married years ago the eldest daughter of Rev. Dr. McPheeters, a lady of great value to our church.

The Secretary of the Ladies' Home Mission Society, lately organized in the First Church, reports having received several communications, in answer to letters sent, looking to the organization of similar societies in several churches. The Rev. John W. Primrose lately, by special invitation, preached before this Society two sermons that have been productive of good and will further have a good influence.

This morning's papers notice the election of Rev. Dr. T. H. Pritchard, of the First Baptist Church of this city, to the Presidency of Wake Forest College, and his acceptance of the position. I have no hesitancy in saying that in my opinion the Trustees have acted wisely in securing Dr. Pritchard's services. The College may well be congratulated, while his church and our community will suffer a loss by his removal. W. S. P.

The Raleigh Farmer and Mechanic learns that Mrs. Gilchrist, widow of Rev. Adam Gilchrist, for so many years pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Fayetteville, N. C., has recently received a legacy of $100,000 left by relatives in Pennsylvania. We sincerely trust this may prove to be the case.

Correspondents are requested to address Rev. M. W. Edmonds, at Grovewood, S. C., until further notice. His former postoffice was Sumter, S. C.

Rev. S. R. Preston, formerly of Athens, Tennessee, requests his correspondents to address him at Blacksburg, Montgomery county, Virginia.

A LEISURELY CHAT.

GILES COUNTY, VA.

Somehow, I always feel in the leisure of summer vacation as if I wanted to chat a little with the PRESBYTERIAN. And some of my friends turn its pages then with the hope of learning my whereabouts; and (an argument for some better writers to go and do likewise) I never thus write without getting some pleasant letters from old friends. I have been telling myself this summer that certainly before many more summers I will cease to make this annual round, and my scattered friends will cease to look or expect thus to hear from me. The years fly faster, oh! how much faster than they did in by-gone days; the loving hearts, one after another, are ceasing to beat on this side of the river; the loving glances, and tones, and hand-pressures, are fewer and farther between! But we will not repine—rather give thanks that so many are left, though the splashing of the waters of the river are heard in the distance. Like Christiana, Great Heart will lead us safely through.

I am again at Waterside—again looking out at the smiling waters so near my window, now so calm and peaceful, though not many months ago they raged like an angry sea, carrying ruin and desolation in every direction, families leaving in boats in the dead of night, and finding refuge in stables, barns, anywhere; little children left in the storm and darkness alone, till others could be also rescued. Some noble lives were almost lost here. As I glance over the varied scene, hills beyond hills, green to the very top, my heart yearns for the loved ones who have crossed, not the River of Time, but the Father of Waters, to seek in another home to mend the broken fortunes caused mainly by a similar scene.

Our little church on the hill is still prospering. Our new preacher, Rev. W. B. Arrowood; and his sweet wife, live near us, and they are from the Old North State. He is warmly welcomed and much liked. We have preaching twice a month, though he serves four other churches.

Our Sunday school is kept up with unabated interest. There are, I think, eighty names on the books, though in the country all cannot attend quite regularly. Rev. J. M. Humphreys is superintendent, and George L. Bane secretary. We have the International Lessons.

The High School taught by Mr. Humphreys, now in its twelfth year, has just closed for the session with an examination that delighted its patrons. May its shadow never be less. Then came the inevitable but sad farewells, "such as pass the life from out young hearts." Happy they that the sunshine will so soon come again. One of my dear girls writes me, "I cannot sing the old songs; they bring back too vividly the days that are no more. We shall never all sing them together again, unless it is in heaven."

Write to me, dear friends, to White Gate, so when I leave my letters will be forwarded. The PRESBYTERIAN is the best substitute, but still I want letters. Some highly prized ones shall be answered soon.

Langsyne, Va., July 17, 1879.

ECLECTICISMS.

A FORTUNATE MISTAKE.

Presbyterian Weekly:

Felix Neff one day tapped a man on the shoulder whom he took for one of his friends, saying: "What is the state of your soul, my friend?" As he saw his face he apologized for the mistake. Some time after the man met him. He did not recognize him. The man said: "Do you recollect the man in the streets of Lausanne, to whom you remarked, 'What is the state of your soul?' God blessed that question to my soul's salvation."

THE WORK COMPLETE.

Methodist Recorder:

For this fullness of blessing is everywhere proclaimed where ministers honor their ordination vows. The Saviour is an all-sufficient Saviour. He does not necessarily put forth two distinct efforts in one salvation. There is danger that we get a restricted view of the divine grace. Jesus Christ, in rescuing sinners, makes complete work. He does not convert a man in sections,—saying half of him, or any fractional part of him, at one grasp, and then return to supplement His unfinished work by another grasp. That is man's method of work. Man must pause, take breath, recuperate, gain strength to go on; and so man overmore works in peacemeal ways. But, if we understand the work of salvation, it is a unit of power, not a fractional service. "The law of God is perfect, converting the soul." We have utmost regard for those who interpret differently. It is the one great salvation, full and eternal, to all that believe. And let all men magnify the love of God!

INTERMITTENT BELIEVERS.

Zion's Herald:

In all ages the patience of the saints has been tested by a class of jerky believers, who advance along the heavenly road by fits and starts rather than by a regular and continued movement. Life in them is an intermittent spring. Instead of a perennial flow of waters, it bubbles up and gurgles out as though painfully and against some restraint. The troubled flow is usually succeeded by a long period of acquiescence, as though the effort had induced exhaustion. Such people are built in extremes. Their action is often an over-zeal; their reaction very akin to deadness. They are saints with a vengeance, or not at all. They sing their songs in six lines eight, or in some other unusual meter, in which it is very difficult for the congregation to join; and after piping along for a time, they fall back in utter disgust that the silent ones do not join in the chorus. And yet people constructed in this irregular meter seem doomed to make merry and mourn alone. The majority are not able to keep time with them."

REACHING THE MASSES.

Rev. C. S. Pomeroy:

We hear much about "reaching the masses," and this is important in one sense of its meaning but we must remember that people are not saved en masse, but as individuals, and as such we must strive to reach them. People talk about the 'neglected classes,' but who are less frequently approached on the subject of religion than the rich? You can go to a river street man and talk about his soul when you would not dare to approach a resident of Euclid avenue. Your pulpit should be the street, the shop, the store, the steamboat. It may be a buggy, with your congregation on the other cushion. The field is surely wide enough."

WORTH A THOUGHT.

Interior:

When the last agony is over, and the pale face of the sufferer is still and cold in death, how keen has been the anguish to his surviving friends to remember these lost opportunities—to think how a little general sympathy, a few pleasant encouraging words, some small testimonial of esteem or token of affection, or perhaps some substantial aid which might have been given at slight inconvenience by his friends, would have saved him from this sorrowful end, or at any rate have brightened the gloom of his last desolate and struggling years! Oh, the wrecks of happiness and of hope which are scattered all along the shores of life by the wintry winds of coldness and neglect, by crushing indifference, and the mere withholding of helpful sympathy on the part of those we had a right to look to, in need, as our friends.

ROMISH TOLERATION.

S. W. Presbyterian:

Vandry, the priest who renounced Romanism at Baton Rouge, about two years ago, recently attempted to deliver a lecture on Romanism in that vicinity. His former co-religionists broke up the meeting. He has been notified that he will not be allowed to lecture on that subject. This is the Romish idea of a free country and religious liberty.

DIFFERENT WAYS TO USE EYES.

Christian Intelligencer:

How differently people look at us, and how much of the character and disposition of the looker is expressed in this way. Sometimes we meet with a glance of utter indifference which belies the cordial words the lips have framed. Then, again, a keen, comprehensive look takes us in from crown to boot-tips, evidently omitting nothing in its survey. This is a very trying ordeal to nervous or diffident persons, and makes even the most self-possessed somewhat uncomfortable. Some eyes give distrustful glances, chilling your attempts at friendliness by the doubts they express. Other eyes never meet your gaze at all, shifting restlessly all the while, as if their owners were afraid of betraying something.

Among all these ways of looking, how restful is the calm, steady glance of eyes into whose truthful depths we can look as we talk, and read of the soul within. And above all, when the glow and fervor of affection light up the eyes that meet our own, what a charm they have for us.

WOMAN'S SPHERE—HEAR HIM.

Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs:

One of the most foolish questions ever asked is, what is going to be the sphere of woman when she is so educated? The sphere? If she don't make her own we may stop prophesying. For six centuries women taught at Bologna, taught in mathematics, the classics, natural science, philosophy, the civil and the canonical law, anatomy and surgery and medicine, taught when sometimes they must veil their faces lest the thoughts of the students should be distracted from the beauty of the subject to the beauty of the speaker. Authorship is all open to women in every department. Woman has been a physician since the days of the Iliad and the Odyssey. In France and in Russia to-day, as in the mediæval time, women are freely received into the ranks of medical practitioners and often instructors. In England and America it is going to be so. I don't know about the law, but they do say a woman is one of the most skilful conveyancers in London. I don't know about the ministry, though it is a scandal in parishes sometimes; that the minister's wife writes the most brilliant passages in his discourses. I stopped writing mine long ago lest that should be said about me. 'Is woman to have the suffrage?' I don't know, if she wants it, she will have it as sure as the revolution of the earth continues. I remember that Spain in her grandest time, had the government of a woman, the blue-eyed Isabella, the Catholic, gentle and strong, under whom this continent was discovered. I remember that as far as any monarch governs in England or ever will, England has the government of a woman to-day who was our steadfast friend in the long agony and under the heavy gloom of civil war, whose virtue, whose intelligence, have commended her to the admiration and the honor of every American heart while the name of Victoria continues. The fact is, that women, from Isabella down, have a prescriptive right to this continent, and the only wonder to any thoughtful man is, that they are willing to let men live here at all. So if they want the suffrage they will be sure to have it, and I don't know but when it comes it will turn out to be the precious amethyst that drives drunkenness out of politics.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Life and Letters of Madame Bonaparte, by Eugene L. Didier. With Portrait by Gilbert Stuart. 1879. Charles Scribner's Sons. New York. $1 50.

The history of Mrs. Bonaparte, the daughter of Wm. Patterson, of Baltimore, is one of the most romantic, remarkable and brilliant of the past century. It was a period of ninety-four years. Beginning in 1785. Her character was cold, miserly, ambitious, cynical and unfilial; but her career was brilliant and in brilliant spheres; and these letters reproduce it clearly to this age. They have been recently discovered, and though not published by the family have been submitted to their inspection, and seem to appear with their blemishes and excellencies just as she wrote them. It is too fascinating a book to be laid aside even in this sultry weather. The Scribners issue it in their usual tasty style.

Book of Hymns and Tunes for the Worship of God. Approved by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States. Edited by Rev. E. T. Baird, D. D., and C. C. Converse, Esq. From Presbyterian Publishing Committee, Richmond, Va. $1 net, half sheep; or $1 60, gilt edge, roan.

This is a revised edition of this standard Hymn and Tune Book of our Church. Its price has been reduced from $1 50 to $1, to churches. The object in its preparation was to get a first-rate book, compiled with judgment and taste for congregational singing. Not being ourselves a musician, we submitted it to a skilful organist and composer, and give his criticism as ours; viz: For the purpose intended, the work is well done, and the selections well made. It cannot fail to be useful in choirs as well as in congregations. I find fewer "drones" pieces in this work than is usual in works of this class, and unhesitatingly endorse it as a whole. An excellent amateur lady-organist fully agrees in the foregoing estimate of this work.

From S. W. Partridge & Co, 9 Paternoster Row, London, the following beautifully illustrated papers for July, which we heartily praise: The Children's Friend; Band of Hope Review; and The British Workman.

We acknowledge with thanks, the receipt from Mr. Anthony Comstock, Secretary of the N. Y. Society for the Suppression of Vice, 150 Nassau street, N. Y., of four Annual Reports of the Board of Managers. As soon as we can examine them carefully, we purpose to call attention to their grand work.

Sunday Afternoon for August is before us. The Magazine proposes a change of name, which will be announced hereafter. It is one of the freshest and most vigorous Magazines published; we are not sure that in these respects it excels anything in its line that comes to our table.

Price $3 00 a year, postpaid. Published at the office of Sunday Afternoon, Springfield, Mass.

The Eclectic Magazine.—The August number of the Eclectic contains a fine steel-engraved portrait of Professor James D. Dana, of Yale College, one of the most honored names in American science; and the editor accompanies the portrait with an appreciative biographical sketch. The contents of the number are of the usual variety and excellence, though in deference to the season, the proportion of light and entertaining articles is rather greater than is customary. The list is as follows: "The New Bulgaria," by an Eastern Statesman;" "Chesterfield's Letters to His Son;" "Food and Feeding;" "Madame Recamier;" "Calculating Boys;" "An Invitation to the Sledge, a poem, by J. H. Symonds; "Russian Court Life under Peter III. and Catherine II.;" "Historical Aspects of the American Churches," by Dean Stanley; "Schopenhauer on Men, Books, and Music;" "Mademoiselle de Mersac;" "In the Royal Academy;" "Village Life in the Apennines;" "Recollections of Thackeray;" "London Bridge," a poem; and the Editorial Departments of Literary Notices, Foreign Literary Notes, Science and Arts, and Varieties.

Edwin Alden, Advertising Agent, Cincinnati, Ohio, has kindly furnished us with his very complete Catalogue of Legitimate American Newspapers. It is gotten up in the best style and Mr. Alden has our thanks.

PUBLIC EXECUTION.

The Africo-American Presbyterian has this to say on the subject:

It was our purpose to emphasize one aspect of the evil now under consideration, which we do not remember to have seen noticed except in the briefest and most professional manner by newspaper reporters. We refer to the growing custom of turning the scaffold and its surroundings into a sort of religious temple, where the people unite in an elaborate service, the culprit acting as priest, and from which, somewhat in the guise of a martyr and saint, he ascends to heaven amid the shouts and rejoicings of a multitude of devout and happy worshipers. A case in point occurred not ten days since. The condemned man ascended the gallows in the presence of 3,000 people, two-thirds or more of whom were colored, and calmly proceeded to engage in a religious service, conducted by a colored Baptist minister. The minister read the prisoner's "farewell address to the congregation," in which the latter sought to warn sinners and encourage the godly. He also assured all of having been forgiven for the crime that had brought him there, and of his readiness to enter heaven.

The address was interspersed with numerous responses from the "congregation," such as "Oh yes;" "go on brother," and "amen."

The minister now announced a hymn, which was sung with great fervor by the religiously inclined of the "congregation."

When the fatal moment arrived, and the drop fell, which launched the condemned man into eternity, a shout and many hearty amens went up from the religious throng near by.

Now we would not be misconstrued on this subject. None sympathize more than we with the unfortunate victim in his sufferings and prospects, who has been condemned to pay the extreme penalty of the law on the scaffold. We believe every reasonable means should be employed to induce him to make his peace with God, into whose presence he is soon to be called. No effort should be spared in this direction.

This it will be seen has nothing whatever to do with such scenes as the one above described. The condemned usually claim that matter to be settled before, and a mere statement to that effect on the scaffold could not be objected to. But these elaborate religious ceremonies are of no benefit to the culprit. They are very injurious to those present. Instead of contributing to deter the criminal classes they tend rather to abate their fear of the consequences of crime. When Mohammed would incite his followers to crime and bloodshed he abated their fear of any punishment and urged them on by assuring them of a home in Paradise. May not these elaborate religious services at the gallows tend to popularize this conspicuous method of entering heaven, particularly among a people whose religious impulses are very strong? Without a change, in the eyes of the superstitious, the gallows will become a point from which the sainted culprit ascends to heaven in a chariot of fire, though perhaps he did not allow his victim one moment to prepare for death. Thus it is that while the ends of justice may be secured, the salutary influence of punishment is neutralized, and in some cases destroyed, by an unnecessary religious service.

Again. Such services exert an unfavorable reflex influence upon the worshipers themselves. The culprit by avowing his readiness to die and his assurance of heaven, is transformed at once into a hero. He becomes the object of worship. The creature, and often one who has committed the grossest crime, is substituted for the Creator. In other words, these worshipers at the gallows engage in a species of open idolatry.

Finally. Such services are out of keeping with the spirit and intent of the law. The law seeks to vindicate justice, and punish and prevent crime. These services contribute to neither. Therefore all lawabiding professors of religion should discountenance them.

This aspect of the evil, however, can be easily done away with by the substitution of private for public executions.

The presence of the necessary ministers of religion and of the law are quite sufficient.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Last Sunday morning communion was administered at the Second Presbyterian church, Rev. J. E. Booker, pastor. Rev. Dr. G. B. Stricker, who had preached the ante-communion sermons, also preached that morning. There were three additions to the church—one by certificate and two on confession. The quarterly voluntary offering amounted to $135.—Staunton Vindicator, 18th.

On Sabbath morning, July 13th, the regular sacramental occasion, Rev. Dr. Wm. Brown preached at Bethesda church, Rockbridge county, Va. Rev. Dr. Leighton Wilson administered the communion. Rev. C. W. Humphries is pastor of the church.

Five communicants were added to the church at Greenville, S. C., on the 5th inst.—three on profession and two on certificate.

The address of Rev. W. B. Arrowood is Poplar Hill, Giles county, Va. Correspondents please notice.

We learn from the Mexico Intelligencer that Dr. Grasty, pastor of the Presbyterian church in that place, has been quite sick during the last week. He was convalescing, and it was hoped he would be able to occupy his pulpit last Sunday.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

CHANGES OF ADDRESS—Of Rev. J. M. Rohinson, from Salado, Bell county, Texas, to Holland, same county and State; and of Rev. James Knox, from Harmony Hill, Texas, to Henderson, Texas.

Communications on the subject of education should be sent to Rev. E. M. Richardson, Secretary, Memphis, Tenn. Remittances of money should be made as heretofore, to Mr. G. W. Macrae, Treasurer, No. 300 Front street, Memphis, Tenn.

The Presbyterian church at Uniontown, Ala., on the 1st inst. dissolved the pastoral relation between Rev. R. B. McAlpine and that church. Mr. McAlpine removes to McKinney, Texas, with a view to taking charge of that church.

Mr. J. L. Stephens has accepted an invitation to supply the churches of McClellanville and John's Island for the next six months. His postoffice will be McClellanville, S. C.—Southern Presbyterian.

The church at Berryville, Clarke county, Va., has lately had several additions to its membership. Also one elder and one deacon ordained and installed. The pastor, Rev. C. S. Lingamfelter, has been encouraged in his labors there.—Central Presbyterian.

Vienna and Alabama churches, Lincoln parish, La., situated twelve miles apart, are without any regular preaching. It is a broad and interesting field for some active minister. It is a high healthy country, with good water, and on the west of the prospective railroad from Monroe to Shreveport. These churches are about midway between the Ouachita and Red rivers, and are in as healthy a country as any in the South on this latitude. It has never been visited by an epidemic. There are doubtless ministers who will be glad to correspond with Hon. E. M. Graham, Vienna, La., in reference to this interesting field of labor.—Christian Observer.

The postoffice address of Rev. Jerry Witherspoon will be, until September 1st, Okolona, Miss. He has leave of absence from the church at Maysville, Ky., until that time.

At the church in Richmond, Ky., of which Rev. Harvey Glass is pastor, the two Presbyterian churches, Northern and Southern, on the 6th inst. worshiped together for the first time since the late war.

Rev. W. T. Spear has entered upon his labors at Union church, Boone county, Ky., Rev. W. T. McElroy, by invitation, has been preaching there for some days. Six persons professed faith and united with the church; one will unite with the Baptist church. Mr. McElroy recently closed a meeting at Lebanon, Ky. There were nine additions to the Presbyterian church. They will unite with the church at Verona, as there is no organization at Lebanon.

GENERAL.

The congregation of the Chestnut Street Presbyterian church, in Wilmington, N. C., held their regular quarterly communion service on the 6th inst. Nine persons were publicly received to membership in the church. Seven on profession of faith and two by certificate. Four adults and one infant were baptized. The Lord came graciously and powerfully near to his people, and many were the unmistakable evidences of supremely blessed joy and renewed consecration to his service. We were made to sit together in a heavenly place in Christ Jesus, and we arose with thankful hearts and proceeded on our way with brighter hopes and nobler aspirations.—Africo-American Presbyterian.

Rev. Dr. Pritchard, of the First Baptist church of Raleigh, has accepted the Presidency of Wake Forest College, and will enter upon the duties of his office September 1st. Dr. Pritchard is one of the editors of the Biblical Recorder.

Rev. B. S. Bronson, late rector of the Episcopal church of Charlotte, N. C., has accepted a call to the Episcopal church of Wilson, this State.—Southern Home.

There is a Baptist nobleman at Chatham, Va., who is himself a tract society. He is President, Secretary, Treasurer, and gives all the money and does all the directing. He has his own colporteur, and, we hear, he likes the business so well that he will increase his force in the field.—Religious Herald.

The Methodists, have commenced the publication of a newspaper at Dallas, Texas, called The Western Protestant. This would seem to indicate progress for that denomination in Texas.

NORTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The death of Rev. Dr. D. H. Hamilton, pastor of the Presbyterian church at Ripley, Ohio, is announced. It occurred on July 4th. At the time he was at Kingsboro, N. Y., whither he had gone to recruit his health.

Rev. Samuel Newell, D. D., pastor of the church at Paris, Ill., died at home on the 22d ult.

The Second Presbyterian church of St. Louis, Mo., Dr. Niccolls, pastor, has been tendered and accepted as the place for holding the session of the National Evangelical Alliance, next October.—Presbyterian.

BAPTIST.

The Baptist church of Medfield, Mass., is the recipient of a gift of $2,100 from George Cummings, Esq., of that place.

The Baptist Home Missionary Society received in donations $128,808 42, against $135,778 09 last year. It closed the year with a debt of 31,000.

The Franklin Baptist church, of Massachusett, some twenty miles south of Boston, after a long and fruitless effort to gain a permanent foothold in a hard field, has voted to disband.

The Chicago Times says: "The Michigan Avenue Baptist Church of this city, is said to have the largest debt, in proportion to its membership, of any Church in the country. The debt is $1,275 for each family of the congregation."

At the Fourth Avenue Baptist church, Pittsburg, Pa., after the sermon, by Rev. J. H. Hartman, it was announced that $2,400 were needed to defray certain expenses. The sum was promptly raised, and $4,000 more, to be applied to the Church indebtedness.

LUTHERAN.

A Lutheran Synod in Illinois has directed ministers not to baptize a candidate by immersion under any circumstances.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The First Congregational Church in Chicago suspended from his post as Sunday School teacher, a Mr. Turner, for teaching a probation after death.

The average age of the thirteen ministers of Maine, connected for a longer or shorter period with the Congregational churches in that State, and who during the past year have deceased, was seventy-four.

The Rev. D. N. Beach, of Westerly, R. I., a young and active minister, has received the $250 offered by the Congregational Publishing Society, for the best book for adult classes next year. The committee consisted of the Rev. Dr. Behrends, W. E. Gould, of Portland, and Miss A. E. Carter, of Wheaton Seminary. They did not know who the successful writer was until the award had been made.

DUTCH REFORMED.

Mr. Eugene S. Booth, having been commissioned by the Board of Foreign Missions as a missionary to Nagasaki, Japan, was ordained as a minister of the gospel by the Classis of New Brunswick, at Metuchen, N. J., on Thursday afternoon, June 26th.

REFORMED EPISCOPAL.

The Reformed Episcopal Church has now 6,448 communicants, an increase of 3,140 for the last year, the largest gain in any previous year except probably the first. There are 5,000 children in the Sunday Schools, and 100 ministers. Fifteen new congregations were added last year, and six new church buildings were opened.

EPISCOPAL.

The Rev. E. M. W. Hills, for thirteen years a priest of the Roman Catholic Church, has separated himself from that communion, and united with the Episcopal Church, in which he was brought up. He will be received by the Bishop of Southern Ohio.

METHODIST.

The late Abel Stearns, of Highgate, Vermont, left $3,000 to the Methodist Church in that place for the support of preaching.

The $670,000 which the Methodists aim to raise during the present year for mission purposes, home and foreign, are nicely proportioned out among the one hundred and four different conferences, and each is told just what it ought to give. For the Northeast Conference the amount is $20,000; Providence Conference, $12,000; Philadelphia has $46,00, the largest amount, and Arizona, $50, the smallest.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

The Catholic Union says that "the Rev. John S. Siebold, an Episcopalian clergyman, formerly rector of St. Mark's Church, N. J., in the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Western New York, was received into the Catholic Church on Sunday morning, June 29th, in St. Joseph's Cathedral, Buffalo, New York, by Rt. Rev. Bishop Ryan. Mr. Siebold is a native of Buffalo; the house now occupied by the Christian Brothers was formerly the Siebold family mansion."

SECULAR NEWS.

Winston has voted an appropriation of $20,000 to the Yadkin Valley Railroad.

Great preparations are making to signalize the installation of Rev. Dr. Pritchard as President of Wake Forest College.

No probability that laws for the expulsion of the Jesuits will be revived in France.

The news from Memphis is appaling. The yellow fever, which was thought to have died out, has revived. Cases are increasing daily, and a panic exists with the usual consequences of all cessation of business, and a general stampede of the inhabitants. The last reports (21st) were thirty-six new cases reported; for several days there had been no reports. Physicians declare the city to be dangerously infected and the disease spreading. The fever has appeared at quarantine in New York and Philadelphia. At the former place there have been one or two deaths.

Reports come that while some sections have been blessed with copious rains, in many others the drought has been unparalleled and is proving disastrous to growing crops, especially corn. The eastern section of North Carolina seems to be suffering most severely.

A thunder storm occurred at all points of the compass around Wilmington, N. C., on the night of 17th inst., and copious showers of rain fell in all quarters a few miles distant from the city. In the city itself there was no rain, and there has been very little or none for many weeks. Vegetation is dying and the cisterns are failing. On the occasion of the storm referred to telegraphic communication was entirely suspended for awhile.

It is not improbable that Jules Ferry will resign as Minister of Public Instruction in consequence of the failure of the anti-Jesuit bill advocated by him.

The relatives of Mrs. Sarah A. Dorsey will contest the will which bequeathed $250,000 to Jefferson Davis.

News from Zululand is more encouraging, and confidence is expressed that the war will be closed during the present season.

TAYLOR COTTON GINS.—In calling attention to the advertisement of these gins we can only say that, while of the gins themselves we can know nothing, we do know that any statement made by the gentlemen offering them for sale would be accepted by us, and may be accepted by any one as a sufficient guarantee.

The Fall and Winter session of the Charlotte Institute for Young Ladies (and children, too,) opens on the 10th of September. The management of the Rev. Wm. R. Atkinson, the Principal, has been tried by our citizens, and we are justified in saying that all are satisfied and pleased. Nearly all his Assistants are home teachers of experience and high standing, well qualified by long practice for the discharge of their respective duties. Prof. Bidez, the principal Musical instructor, is thoroughly competent, and esteemed as a gentleman by his pupils and our citizens who know him. Mr. Atkinson claims that a comparison will prove that his charges for tuition, &c., are as low and reasonable as any institution of the kind in the country. See advertisement in another column, and address him for further information.—Charlotte Democrat.

A DESIRABLE ARTICLE.

We verily believe that it would be rendering any family a very great service to introduce into it Kitto's Cyclopedia. This Cyclopœdia is the work of John Kitto, D. D., F. S. A., author of the "Pictorial Bible," the History and Physical Geography of Palestine, and editor of the Journal of Sacred Literature, etc., etc. It is arranged expressly for Sunday School Superintendents, Teachers and Bible Students, and embraces a complete and authentic description of all the characters, customs, countries and events mentioned in the Bible, and those connected with them in Egyptian, Persian, Assyrian, Grecian and Roman History. Including the period of over four hundred years between the Old and New Testaments, to which are added many valuable tables, and the products of the latest researches in Biblical literature, together with the knowledge gained by the explorations and discoveries of eminent travellers. The whole illustrated with numerous cuts, maps and full page engravings from the best authenticated models and designs that antiquarian research and ancient monuments can produce.

By special arrangement we can furnish this work well printed and bound in cloth, with the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN one year for $4 50—or to any new subscriber, or any one sending us a new subscriber, at $4 00 for paper and cyclopœdia. Publishers price is $4 50.

June 20th, 1879, at the residence of her parents in McDowell county, N. C., MARY HARRIETTA CARSON, child of John and Harriet Carson, aged 2 years and 5 months.

She was an amiable, lovely child, and ardently loved by the fond parents, and the other children of the family, six in number. Her death was a crushing blow to the mother. But let her be comforted with the thought, that "it is well with the child"—far better for her to depart and be with Christ, than to remain longer in this world of sin and sorrow.

June 14th 1879, in Caswell county N. C., MATTHEW B. McCRARY, aged about 20 years.

For nearly four months this estimable young man was confined to his couch of suffering under the wasting ravages of consumption. Naturally of an amiable and gentle disposition, his sickness was borne without any show of impatience, and it seemed wonderful that one so weak and emaciated, and suffering so from sores induced by his long confinement, never murmured, and could bear his trials with such quietness and cheerfulness. "I have to lie in one position sometimes," he once said to the writer, "for about twelve hours, and of course I get very tired, but I do not want to be troublesome or complain. I only want to be patient and entirely submissive to God's will." Fond of pleasant conversation, he would engage in it with a quiet smile upon his features, even when we knew he was in pain, and his whole face bespoke deep interest when any one began to talk with him of Christ, and personal religion. He loved to allude to God's goodness to him in all his illness, and referred to the beginning of his sickness in a distant State some four years ago as a great mercy and blessing to him. His faith in Christ was very simple and childlike, always expressed with great humility, and grew brighter and stronger as his end approached. Death had no terrors for him. "My mind," said he, "is at perfect peace." His last dying struggle was severe and attended with slight delirium, but as it passed he opened his eyes with an intelligent expression, looked round about him, his features resumed their natural repose, and then, as though something caught his eye, he looked upward intently, a sweet smile lit up his face and he gently breathed his last.

"Welcome, sweet hour of full discharge,
That sets our longing souls at large;
Unbinds the chain, breaks up our cell
And gives us with our God to dwell."

H. T. D.

In New Hope Congregation, near Hillsboro, N. C., June 10th, Mrs. MARY STRAYHORN. She was born in November, 1799.

Mrs. Strayhorn lost four sons and two sons-in-law in the late war. Since that time her husband and a daughter have been taken. Under this heavy load of trouble she traveled on towards heaven without a murmur. She died a worthy member of New Hope church, which she joined many years ago, and in full hope of a blessed immortality beyond the grave.

P. H. D.

On the 22d of May last, near Clarkton Bladen county, in the 93d year of her age, Mrs. JANE McKEE, leaving 6 children, 42 grandchildren and 28 great-grandchildren. She was for many years a member of Brown Marsh church, and the Bible was the only book she read.

After a lingering disease JOEL MOORE departed this life on the eve of July 8th, aged 28 years. He died in the full hope of a blessed resurrection.

In Richmond county, June 23d, Mr. JAMES McDONALD, aged 65 years.

He was for many years an invalid, but from the testimony of one who had a right to know he bore his afflictions with much Christian submission, never murmuring or complaining. He was for about forty years a consistent member of the Presbyterian church. He has left behind a family and many friends to lament their loss. But, thanks be to God, they mourn not as those who mourn without hope. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

At Manchester, N. C., June 26th, RACHAEL WEST, daughter of A. K. and Mattie K. McDiarmid, aged 6 months and 12 days.

The removal of this dear child has darkened a cheerful home and extinguished many a cherished hope. But so the Heavenly Father has ordained. The little bud has been transplanted to a more congenial soil, to bloom in the garden of the Lord above. Jesus died to redeem even little children, and has declared that "of such is the kingdom of heaven." He calls them to himself—from their home on earth to their home in heaven; from a world of sin, and blight, and suffering to a world of light, and love, and everlasting happiness. Taken in infancy, they leave us without the pangs of parting. They die without feeling that death is a penalty, or the grave a lonely place. They have no dread of the eternal world or its retributions. They fly back to the bosom of their Heavenly Father with the same confidence that they exercise when falling into the arms of their earthly parents. Thus are they ever with the Lord—safe! happy! beautiful! glorified!

"We miss the smiles we loved to greet,
We miss our lovely, darling child;
Our Father, we have priceless treasure now,
A bounteous store laid up in heaven;
O, lead our footsteps here below,
That it may back to us be given."

Resolutions of Respect.

At a meeting of the session of Statesville church, the following resolutions expressive of their feelings in reference to death of Colonel THOMAS A. ALLISON, who died June 8th, 1879, were reported and adopted:

Resolved, That in the death of Colonel ALLISON, who for more than half a century was a prominent member of the session of this church, we feel such bereavement as only sons can experience in the loss of a venerable father, and would exclaim, as did he who witnessed the triumphant departure of the heroic old prophet, "My father! My father!"

That while we bow with humble admission to the appointment of Him who "doeth all things well," we desire to express our gratitude for His mercy in sparing so long, one whom we loved and revered, for the distinguished example of unwavering integrity, Christian manliness and generosity, which characterized his whole life, extending through a long period of undisturbed prosperity and the lost sad years of deepest adversity, and for that cheerfulness under trial, which for its constancy and brightness was truly sublime.

That we here record our gratitude to the King and Head of the Church, for that Divine Grace which so developed and guided the noble faculties of mind and soul with which Colonel ALLISON was endowed, as to make him a useful and honored officer in the church, and a man trusted and faithful in the many positions of honor in the State, which his fellow citizens called him to fill.

That we humbly pray for a "double portion" of that Grace which will enable us to follow him in all things wherein he illustrated the principles of our Holy Religion, and that we commend his example to the many friends who knew and respected him, as worthy of their study and imitation.

That our Christian sympathies are cordially extended to his bereaved family and relatives, with the earnest desire that his virtues may be cherished and imitated, and that his mantle may rest upon worthy shoulders for many generations.

That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN for publication.

J. H. HILL,
By order of Session.

THE MAP OF PALESTINE.

We have sent out this map quite extensively, and it has, we believe, given universal satisfaction; at least, no complaints have been made, and many have expressed hearty appreciation.

It is 28x42 inches in size and sold by publishers at $1 00.

We furnish gratis with one new subscriber at $2 65.

Col. John L. Brown, at Charlotte, N. C., and Messrs. J. D. McNeely, at Salisbury; J. D. Williams, Fayetteville; W. S. Moore, Greensboro, N. C.; will receive and receipt for any subscriptions to this paper. The checks of these and many other agents, on their local banks of deposit, will be cashed here, without discount, and save expense of postal order or registration.

Mr. McNeely is Agent for the Missionary also.

MARRIED.

☞ No notice of a marriage or death will be inserted unless accompanied by a responsible name, which is wanted not for publication but as a guaranty of good faith.

On the evening of June 14th, at the residence of the bride's father, REV. WM. B. ARROWOOD to Miss MARY V., eldest daughter of Rev. Walter W. Pharr, the officiating clergyman.

A Wise Deacon.

"Deacon Wilder, I want you to tell me how you kept yourself and family so well the past season, when all the rest of us have been sick so much, and have had the doctors running to us so long."

"Bro. Taylor, the answer is very easy. I used Hop Bitters in time and kept my family well and saved large doctor bills. Three dollars' worth of it kept us all well and able to work all the time, and I will warrant it has cost you and most of the neighbors one to two hundred dollars apiece to keep sick the same time. I guess you'll take my medicine hereafter." See other column.

TO AGENTS.

It will not be practicable to write to each one of the Agents of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, and ask them to continue their exertions. We now make the general request, and take occasion to thank them and all other friends for the disinterested kindness so fully and so constantly manifested in the past.

R. L. Dabney, LL. D., Hampden Sidney College, Va., speaks of the "Vest Pocket Cure" as follows: It is highly esteemed here by the medical faculty. It is excellent for indigestion, flatulent colic, and all other forms of dyspepsia. Sold by all druggists at 25 cents per bottle.

Charlotte Institute.

THE next session begins September 10th, 1879, and ends June 8th, 1880.

No Institute ever made more rapid progress in securing the confidence and esteem of its patrons than this one during the past session. Before the end of the scholastic year the number of its pupils, attracted by the well-earned reputation of the school, increased to 117, exclusive of the adult ladies who availed themselves of the superior advantages here given in the departments of Music, Art, and Modern Languages. In no respect is this Institute inferior to any other first-class boarding-school in the Southern or Middle States. Such testimonials as will satisfy an one as to the high standard and thoroughness of the instruction here are published in the catalogue. These testimonials are peculiarly trustworthy, inasmuch as they are given by gentlemen engaged in teaching in well known schools and colleges of the highest grade, and who are therefore qualified to express an opinion in regard to educational institutions.

The total expense for the half session or term will be $125. This amount includes board, with washing, fuel, lights, furnished room and servants' attendance, tuition in all the English branches, Latin, with either French or German, Calisthenics, text-books and stationery for school purposes. Pupils are not permitted to incur additional expense without permission of their parents. Parents are thus assured that their bills will not be greater than they expected.

Special arrangements and special terms for young ladies who wish to take only Music, Painting and Drawing, and Modern Languages, severally or collectively.

THE BUFFALO LITHIA
For Malarial Poisoning, Especially Hepatic Diseases and Malaria.
Testimony of Distinguished Medical Men:
MALARIOUS FEVERS.

Extract from Letter of Dr. Wm. T. Howard, of Baltimore, Professor of Diseases of Women and Children in the University of Maryland, of August 1st, 1873.

Dr. Howard compares these waters with those of the celebrated Greenbrier White Sulphur, West Virginia, and adds the following:

The Greenbrier White Sulphur Waters will be recognized by all informed upon such subjects as one of the most noted Mineral Fountains of the World.

"Indeed, in a certain class of cases, it is much superior to the latter. I allude to the abiding debility attendant upon the tardy convalescence from grave acute diseases: and more especially to the cachexia and sequels incident to MALARIOUS FEVERS IN ALL THEIR GRADES AND VARIETIES."

* * * * * * * In short, were I called upon to state from what mineral waters I have seen the greatest and most unmistakable amount of good accrue in the largest number of cases in a general way, I would unhesitatingly say the BUFFALO SPRINGS, in Mecklenburg county, Virginia."

—o—

Extract from Letter of the late Dr. Thos. P. Atkinson, of Danville, Va., Ex-President State Medical Society, dated August 15th, 1874.

"The Buffalo Lithia Waters have unquestionably displayed great power in the peculiar diseases of the warm, miasmatic regions of the South, which may be grouped together under the general head of Malarial Cachexia, covering Hepatic Engorgements, Enlargements of the Spleen, Jaundice, &c."

"It is not pretended that these Waters possess any anti-periodic properties, such as belong to Quinine—At the same time, however, it is unquestionably true, that in the intermittent and remittent fevers in a chronic form, they have in numerous instances, given relief in cases which had obstinately resisted all the anti-periodic drugs of the shops. From my experience with them, I feel fully warranted in saying that, with rare exceptions, whenever disease is found originating under malarial influence, a potent remedy may be found in this water."

—o—

Extract from a Letter of Dr. John C. Coleman, of Halifax county, Va., (prior to the War a surgeon of the U. S. Navy, now retired) dated near Scottsburg, Va., January 1st, 1879.

"Perhaps no claim made for the Buffalo Lithia Waters is more thoroughly established than that they are a powerful antidote to malarial poison in all its forms and varieties. In that large class of disorders, included in term Malarial Cachexia, embracing Engorgement of the Liver and Spleen, Jaundice, Indigestion, Dropsies and Neuralgias, of which the warm malarious districts of the South are so prolific, the action of these waters as a general rule is most decided and happy, and oftentimes astonishing. In Chronic Intermittent and Remittent Fevers, they are especially efficacious. I presume there is no season at these Springs in which some cases of this character do not find relief from these Waters, which have before baffled the healing art."

—o—

Extract from Letter of Dr. Alfred Plumber, of Manson, N. C., dated March 16, 1874.

"I have known the Buffalo Springs of Mecklenburg county, Va., for twenty-five years, and have sent many patients to them. In Chronic Intermittent and Remittent Fever, and in all diseases originating in malarial poison, I have found their action almost that of a charm. I have sent young ladies to these Springs so enfeebled from this influence as to be scarcely able to walk across a floor, and in a few weeks they would become so invigorated as to be able to dance half of every night."

—o—

These springs open for guests the 1st day of June. The water in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, $5.00 per case at the springs. Springs pamphlets sent to any address.

JOHN ... the Rain Behaves.

Beating the clover
Under and over,
Tossing it thither,
Flinging it hither,
This is the way the rain behaves!

Pelting the garden,
Begging no pardon
Though all the roses
Fall on their noses,
This is the way the rain behaves!

Drubbing and rubbing,
All the leaves scrubbing,
Then the trees shaking,
Leaving them quaking,
This is the way the rain behaves!

Splashing and dashing,
Merry drops clashing,
Each other hustling—
O, what a bustling!
This is the way the rain behaves!

Jack's Lesson.

Here is a true story. Jack H. told it to me of his own boyhood. He was born and reared in the North of Ireland. The winters there are not usually very severe, he says, but occasionally they have very deep snows.

Father came through the shed where I was fixing straps to my new snow-shoes, one day, and said, "Jack, do you get the sheep together, before night, in the lower fold. It looks as if this storm would last all night; and if it should, it may be easier done to-day than to-morrow."

I looked up through the open door at the snow, which was falling gently and steadily. It did not seem to me likely to be much of a storm. But I had been taught unquestioning obedience, and only replied, "yes, sir, I will," and went on with my work. Before it was finished Tom Higgins came, and he had a new plan for a rabbit trap, and we spent half the afternoon in trying to carry it into execution, and the short winter day passed and the sheep were not folded. In short, it quite slipped my memory, only to be recalled by my father's question as he drew the Bible towards him for the evening worship: "Jack, have you folded those sheep?"

The blood leaped to my forehead as I was forced to reply, "No, sir. I got to playing with Tom, and forgot it."

The silence that followed my reply was dreadful to me. If my father had upbraided me with violent anger, I think I could have borne it better.

"I am very sorry, sir," I stammered out at last.

"I fear you will have reason to be," said my father. "If those sheep are lost to-night, remember there will be no more play for you until they are found. People who will not take trouble will be overtaken by trouble."

Nothing more was said. The reading and the psalms and the prayer over, I slipped quietly away to bed, taking a peep, as I went, through the shed door, to see how the weather was progressing. I saw it had increased, and the wind was rising.

Nothing had power to keep me long awake in those days, however, so I slept soundly. In the morning I found the storm was still raging. The snow lay deep on the ground, and the wind was drifting it into the hollows and packing it away into solid masses. Father came in from taking a survey of the weather, bring a rod full fifteen feet long.

"The snow is deep," said he, "I am troubled about those sheep; they always seek shelter in the hollows and along the hedges, just where the drifts will be deepest. How we shall find them I do not know. I hope you are ready for a week's hard work, my son Jack?"

"Yes, sir; I am very sorry, and I will do my best," I replied.

"Your best would have gone much farther yesterday than it will go to-day. But we won't spend our strenghth groaning over a bad job. After breakfast we will go out and try what we can do."

"In this storm, father?" said my mother, deprecatingly. "It is the worst storm of the year. The snow blows so you can scarce find your way."

"There are two hundred of those sheep," said my father. "I can't afford to lose them."

Breakfast over, we bound on our snow-shoes, and with the long pole and a snow shovel, went out to look for the lost sheep. It cleared a little before noon, though the wind still sent the snow whirling about our faces; so it was not easy or agreeable work. Father found one here and another there, and I was set to work to dig them out. Fifteen sheep were found and brought home that day.

The next day the neighbors came and helped, for the weather had moderated, and there was always danger that a sudden thaw would follow such deep snows and the sheep be drowned before they could be rescued. One by one, or in twos and threes, the poor creatures were found and taken from the snow. But at the end of a week of hard work there were still seventy-five missing.

"How long will they live under the snow, father?" I asked when a second week of work had only reduced the number of missing sheep to forty.

"I've heard of their living three weeks. We will keep on as long as we can find any alive," said my father.

The snow had settled into compact masses near thirty feet deep in some of the valleys, but we still found now and then a sheep by the hole which the warm breath of the creature made in the snow as it rose. I searched diligently for these holes. Little I cared that I hadn't had a moment's play in all the days since the storm. I was most anxious that all the sheep should be found alive. I think the first real prayers I ever offered were sent up that the thaw might keep away till all the sheep were found.

It did keep away wonderfully. At the end of three weeks all but twenty-four were rescued. Still, we searched, and now and then found a poor creature, famished and emaciated, but alive, which we carried to the farmhouse and consigned to my mother and the girls, who chafed and fed and tended it till it was won back to a degree of strength, while we spared no time from the search.

"It's no use to hunt longer; the rest are all dead," said my father one night when we were coming home dispirited and weary, having found five of the poor things lying together drowned in one of the hollows. "You look thin and pale, Jack. You have worked well. I think I must release you now."

But I would not be released. The word had been, "No play till every sheep is found," and alive or dead, they should be found. I toiled alone next day, but I found three, and one was alive. The thaw carried away the snow so fast that I had less and less area to search over now. But it was poor encouragement to work, for all I found were dead. A dozen times I was tempted to to yield to my mother's persuasions not to throw away any more labor. But my father said not a word, and I kept on.

"The sheep are all found now, father; I took off the pelt of the last of the dead to-day," I said, one evening, when he came in late from work.

"Well, Jack, this lesson has cost me almost a score of sheep and both of us a good deal of hard work; but if it teaches you to be faithful to all your duties in future, I shall not be sorry."

"Thank you, father!" said I; and I vowed inwardly that it should, and I believe it did.—Congregationalist.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Two Days' Sport with a Tiger in the Botanical Gardens Near Calcutta.

On Monday, 6th January, two tigers belonging to the ex-King of Oudh, whose house is on the left bank of the Hughli, escaped from their cages, a keeper having incautiously left the door of their cage open when cleaning it. One was shortly after killed in the King's grounds by a Superintendent of Police; the other swam across the river and landed near the ghat in the Botanical Gardens. Shortly after landing he knocked down and mauled Mr. Bierman, one of the European assistants. Mr. Scott and he had, after first seeing the tiger, gone into a house, but came out again to look for the brute, their attention being momentarily disturbed by the chattering of a monkey (an unusual sound in the Botanical Gardens.) The brute seized his opportunity, and springing past a native, who was in front of the two gentleman, knocked down one; he then immediately returned to his lay and remained in the gardens all day. Owing to the presence of Stripes in the gardens various picnic parties had to return without landing, though one party foolishly insisted on landing notwithstanding contrary orders, but was soon obliged to beat a retreat. Towards nightfall the brute was heard giving tongue near the banyan tree, and shortly before daybreak it killed two bullocks in a small clearing a short distance to the north of the tree. The bullocks were tied up in a shed: one it dragged outside and ate one hind quarter, the other left dead inside. Early on Tuesday morning some native shikaris were in the garden trying to stalk Stripes: one of them, while peering into a small brake, was severely handled, and is not expected to recover. During the day these shikaries were reinforced by some gentlemen from Calcutta; but their efforts to get near Stripes were unavailing, and they retired about four o'clock and left the grounds. In the afternoon a machan was erected in a jungle to the north of the gardens, near the scene of the kill, from the top of which the shikaris might have an opportunity of potting Stripes, should he return to the scene of his feast the night before. To make matters doubly sure, an awning was improvised on the roof of a small pucka house not far from the kill, and a live bullock was securely tied to tree a few yards distant from the house within full view of the shikaries on the roof, some plantain trees being cut away to give better aim. A speculation had arisen as to whether Stripes would prefer dead meat to live; in the course of the night the question was soon set at rest Shortly after 6, four gentlemen proceeded from Bishop's College to the scene of the kill, and placed themselves in position for a good shot: two on the machan; two on the top of the pucka house. It was then discovered that shooting could not be depended on without something to eat: one of the party immediately went off for materials for food and drink, and as he was returning with a chukidar, distinctly heard Stripes not far off He hastened on with the food, which was soon dispatched inside the pucka house, tables and chairs being dispensed with. Posts were again taken up, and soon after the brute was again heard giving tongue, as he was prowling about in search of food; this went on for about an hour, the bullock near the house showing evident signs of intense alarm, though perfectly silent. For half an hour after this the stillness of a clear moonlight night remained perfectly unbroken; all eyes were on the stretch, when suddenly, with a magnificent bound, a fine full grown tiger was on the bullock, Instantly a shot was fired, the brute doubled up, and the bullock bolted off at full speed; another shot was now fired, and Stripes evidenly received this, too, for he sprung aside into the jungle twenty paces, moaned, and all was still. The shikaris being uncertain whether Stripes was really dead, determined to spend the rest of the night where they were, it not being considered safe in the uncertain light of the moon to venture in search of him, beaters being at a discount. Soon after, some chukidars arrived with beaters, and passed close to where Stripes was last seen; the men on the machan then came down and spent the rest of the night on the more comfortable roof of the pucka house belonging to a cowkeeper.—Englishman.

The English, Scotch and Irish Soldiers.

The warlike qualities displayed by the British soldier have ever been strongly marked. Certain of them are common to all the races which make up the population of these isles. The high courage which is born of physical superiority, the nerve, self-reliance which animates the man of muscle and many inches—these are the military virtues belonging to Englishman, Scotchman and Irishman alike. But each nationality possesses certain peculiar circumstances of its own.

THE ENGLISH.

The Englishman is cool, not easily roused to enthusiasm, caring little for the pomp and pageantry of war. He has none of the romantic craving after military glory which animates the Frenchman; addresses, declamatory or inspiring, do not appeal irresistibly to him. He is of brawny build in the upper part, has a deep chest and muscular arms, but his legs are less vigorous, and he has never been famed for his marching powers, although some of his feats of pedestrianism are as remarkable as any on record. The English soldier is not easily dismayed; his courage and spirits rise as danger increases. He is stubborn and tenacious, never knowing, as Napoleon said, when he is beaten. Want of practical experience in warfare places him often at a disadvantage at the commencement of a campaign. He is not very ready to shift for himself; not quick-witted and fertile in resource; expects to have everything done for him, and where this is impossible, grows discontented, and grumbles to his heart's content. Of the English soldier more than of any other is the aphorism true that he fights with his belly. He suffers severely from privation and hardships, and does not submit to them cheerfully even when inevitable. Jackson describes him as inferior in intelligence to many, but "when well clothed, well fed, and well lodged, no man performs his duty more steadily and more efficiently." A high sense of duty is really his sheet-anchor and finest trait. This can always be drawn upon when other appeals fail, and those who work with him may rely upon him to the full. But if he does his own duty he expects others to do their duty by him. He has the keenest appreciation of his rights, and will never submit to be "put upon" or treated with injustice by those under whom he serves.

THE SCOTCH.

In the Scotchman the warlike spirit of fiery and untamable ancesters still lingers, and the Scotch soldier is in many respects superior to the English. In frame he is more lithe and sinewy; he marches better, and can endure greater fatigue. His early life has generally inured him by exposure to hardship; he does not mind a wetting, can sleep under a hedge, is contented with the toughest and scantiest of fare. In the fight he is more impetuous and enterprising than his more stolid comrade of the south. "The impetuosity of the Scot is proverbial. It leads him far, and, on some occasions, into difficulty and danger; but it also now and then leads to the achievements of things beyond calculation." With his screeching pibroch and his wild shouts, his mediæval costume, and old clannish enthusiasm which led them "shoulder to shoulder" into many a deadly breach, the Highlander has always been a terrible foeman to encounter.

THE IRISH.

The Irishman, last of all, is an excellent soldier, to whom fighting for mere fighting sake is always a delightful pastime. He is never so happy as when in a row, whether at Donnybrook or Waterloo. He wields his rifle as readily as a shillelagh or pike, and he slaughters the enemy with the same satisfaction that he breaks the head of the man who treads on the tail of his coat. His mercurial temperament and recklessness detract rather from his usefulness in the field; his courage, like that of the lively Gaul, sometimes evaporates before he has gained the day, and he cannot be relied upon to exhibit the calm fortitude or resolute energy of the Englishman or Scot; but his elan will carry him always to the front, and he is incomparable in a charge. The Irish soldier is not always easy to govern. He is quick-tempered and impulsive, but he loves those officers who understand him and deal tenderly with him, and may be easily led where he could not be driven. In times past the poverty of his native home made him laugh at what the Englishman would deem privation. Compared to the rude cabin on the wild bogs, and his unvarying diet of potatoes and "point," the soldier's rations, his snug barrack-room, or water-tight tent, were luxuries which he had seldom hoped to obtain even in his wildest dreams. —Major Griffiths.

A Great Swamp Reclaimed.

A correspondent of the Times writing from Goshen, N. Y., tells hows 500 acres of pestilential marsh east of that village have been converted into the richest of farm land through the wisdom of one man. The reclaimed swamp is crossed by the Erie Railway, and was one of the most serious obstacles encountered by its engineers. To construct a foundation for the road bed it was necessary to drive a multitude of piles to the depth of 100 feet, and cover them with hundreds of thousands of loads of stone and dirt; the building of one mile of the road across the swamp costing more than any other five miles of the road from Jersey City to Piedmont.

Twenty years ago a farmer conceived the idea of draining a portion of the tract and making it tillable soil. By ditching, he reclaimed 60 acres. The first acre he bought for $1. When it was found that the draining left as a soil the finest of black muck, composed almost entirely of vegetable mould, the price advanced to $17 an acre. After the 60 acres were reclaimed, the price still further increased, until to-day as high as $1,000 has been paid for the reclaimed land. The ruling price is $500 an acre. The great value of the land is owing to its extraordinary adaptibility to the culture of onions. A crop of 800 bushels to the acre is not uncommon, and the Greycourt onion meadows are celebrated throughout the country. Quite a number of acres, (about 300) are under cultivation this year, and the success of the onion business in the meadows has led to the reclaiming of similar lands in other parts of the country, until it is believed that the onion crop of Orange county will amount to 500,000 bushels this year. The average price received by onion raisers is $1 per bushel. The average yield is 300 bushels to the acre. The crop is almost invariably sold for cash as soon as it is ready for market, and as it matures early in the season, the farmer is allowed abundant time to keep his land in the condition necessary to its productiveness.

There are 17,000 acres of swamp land in the Wallkill Valley, which will eventually be converted into this muck soil, which is the best in the world for vegetable raising. The land, after draining, is tilled with slight labor. Onion seed is sown with a hand drill, and the greatest labor in keeping down the weeds after the plant begins to grow. This work is done by boys and girls. Hundreds of these may be seen in the growing season on their hands and knees between the onion rows, pulling up the weeds that the rich soil calls rapidly into existence. The weeding requires skill and care as the soil is so loose that there is constant danger of tearing up the young and tender plants by their roots, or removing their covering of earth. The red onion is the variety grown most successfully, as the dark muck gives the white onion a dirty hue, when the onion tops are at the height of their growth, their odor fills the air for great distances around.—Scientific American.

Poetry the Greatest of the Arts.

A poem consists of all the purest and most beautiful elements in the poet's nature crystalized into the aptest and most exquisite language, and adorned with all the outer embellishment of musical cadence of dainty rhyme. Hence it presents us with the highest and noblest product of the æsthetic faculty, embracing as it does in their ideal forms, the separate beauties of all its sister arts. Whatever loveliness in face or feature, in hill or stream or ocean the painter can place before us on his breathing canvass, that loveliness the poet can body forth in his verse, with the superadded touch of his vivid imagination. Whatever floods of sound the singer can pour out from his ever-welling fountain of liquid treble and thundering bass, that glory the poet can reproduce for us in his graphic delineation of all things seen or heard. Even more than this the poet can do. For while painting can only portray for us the forms and colors of the human face or of external nature, with at best some pregnant suggestion of the passions and emotions at work within it—while music can only play upon our inner chords by dim hints and half-comprehended touches, "telling us of things we have not seen, or things we shall not see"—the supreme art of all can utter in clear and definite language every feeling, external or internal, which makes up the sum of human life. Besides the beauty of summer flowers, the green English meadows, and Alpine snows, and the maiden's pensive face; besides the beauty of every-mingled harmony that swells from deep-toned organ pipes or trills from modulated lips; besides its world-pictures and its music, poetry can tell us also of every love, or fear, or hope that throbs within the heart of man. Therefore we feel that this art is the first and greatest of all arts, the art which sums up and comprehends within itself the separate excellence of all the rest.—Scottish American Journal.

SECULAR NEWS.

The cholera has broken out in Smolensk, Russia. In Bessarabia diphtheria continues its ravages. A rescript of the government is published ordering the universal fumigation of the dwellings and clothing of the peasantry. The rescript states that the epidemic has now been raging seven years, carrying to the grave in some districts almost all of the rising generation.

The Concord Register says that the factory is running on full time, and the operatives are looking happy. The Company say that they have orders for their plaids as fast as they can turn them out.

The drought seems to be prevaling generally in North Carolina, and news from Richmond states that the drought is affecting the crops alarmingly. Many small water courses are entirely dried up, people having, in some cases, to drive cattle a long distance for water. A number of mills in the surrounding country have suspended operation on account of the scarcity of water. The James river, just above the city, is so low that it can be crossed at various points on foot without wetting the shoes. With all this, however, no cases of sunstroke are reported. An Augusta, Ga., dispatch of July 16th says: "There has been no rain in this section to do any good to the crops for two months. The corn in many places is literally burnt up, and will not average a fourth of a crop. Cotton is very much behind; the weed is very small, yet it is fruiting well for the size of the stalk. This has been the hottest and dryest weather since 1839." The excessive heat has been noted North and South of us. On the 16th inst., the thermometer marked 102 in the shade in New York city.

The life of the King of Belgium has again been threatened by public placard.

In the cotton report of the Agricultural Department at Washington universal complaint is made of the drought. The condition of June has not been maintained generally, though North Carolina is marked as better; being 104, against 98 for June—a gain of 6. The acreage for the whole country shows a decrease. The acreage of corn is increased, especially in North Carolina, Mississippi, Arkansas and Tennessee. In tobacco only North Carolina only shows an increase of acreage.

A terrific storm burst over Boston on 16th inst. A schooner capsized off Bird Island, and four women and boy were drowned. A man, of all on board, alone was saved. A boy was drowned by the capsizing of a boat off Hull, and a man buried in the ruins of a building struck by lightning. The damage throughout the city can hardly be ascertained at present, but it will probably amount to many thousand dollars.

Close confinement, careful attention to all factory work, gives the operatives pallid faces, poor appetite, languid, miserable feeling, poor blood, inactive liver, kidneys and urinary troubles, and all the physicians and medicine in the world cannot help them unless they get out doors or use Hop Bitters, made of the purest and best of remedies, and especially for such cases, having abundance of health, sunshine and rosy cheeks in them. None need suffer if the if they will use them freely. They cost but a trifle. See another column.

Any Physician in your own locality will confirm the above statement. 45 Years Before the Public.
THE GENUINE
DR. C. McLANE'S
CELEBRATED
LIVER PILLS,
FOR THE CURE OF
Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,
DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.
Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression Dr. McLANE's LIVER PILLS.
The genuine McLANE's LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.
Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

PRESBYTERIANISM IN NORTH CAROLINA.

BY REV. J. RUMPLE.

[FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, CHARLOTTE, CONTINUED.]

THE REV. CYRUS JOHNSTON

was installed pastor of the Charlotte Church on the 23rd of May, 1846, and at the same time became Principal of the Female Institute. For five years he continued to serve both the church and the school. But in 1850 he gave up the school and devoted himself entirely to preaching. In the ten years of his ministry here the membership increased from 28 to 118; a net increase of 90, or an average of nine per year. The church in the meantime had been thoroughly organized, trained to benevolent work, and became thoroughly self-supporting. In 1854 the congregation gave to church purposes, including pastor's salary, $2,361 00.

CYRUS JOHNSTON, of Scotch-Irish lineage, was born in the north-eastern part of Mecklenburg, N. C., in 1798. In conformity with a rule adopted by many of the well-to-do Presbyterian families of that day, to set apart one son and prepare him for the ministry, Cyrus, the eldest of seven sons, received early advantages of education. He was prepared for college at the Rocky River Academy, by the Rev. John Makemie Wilson, D. D., and was graduated from Hampden-Sidney College, Virginia, in 1821, with the first honors of his class. Returning home he studied theology, under the Rev. John Robinson, D. D., of Poplar Tent, and was licensed by Concord Presbytery, in 1823, and ordained by the same in 1824. For about fifteen years after ordination, Mr. Johnston preached at Bethesda, Cedar Shoals and Mt. Pleasant churches, in Bethel Presbytery, South Carolina. From this field he returned to Mecklenburg, N. C., in 1839, and preached at Providence and Sharon churches, at the same time teaching a flourishing school at Providence. From thence he removed to Charlotte in 1845 and took charge of the Female Academy, and on the 23rd of May, of the following year, he was installed pastor of the church at that place. Here he spent the remainder of his life, working for the Master, now passing through the furnace of affliction, and now rejoicing in the outpouring of the Spirit upon his labors. Not long after he went to Charlotte, five of his children—three nearly grown—were called away from earth, and his heart was filled with sorrow. The last few years of his ministry were signalized by two gracious revivals in his church, one in the summer of 1848, and the other in the fall of 1853—the latter under the preaching of the Rev. Dr. Daniel Baker, of Texas. Many of the neighboring churches were refreshed at the same time, and in a number of them Dr. Johnston rendered efficient services. At one of these meetings, held at Bethphage church, Dr. Johnston and Rev. D. A. Penick preached for a number of days at a camp-meeting. One of Dr. Johnston's sermons was peculiarly searching, and through its influence a number of professors were driven to doubt their acceptance in Christ. Upon being approached upon the subject by one of these, Dr. Johnston stated that his aim was to upset the hope of every careless church member. The ministers were regarded with great affection and reverence, and a gentleman present said that they seemed to him to be like Paul and Barnabas of old. But the faithful minister was drawing near the close of his labors, and he was called from earth in a sudden and mysterious way. Being low of statnre, thick-set, and somewhat corpulent, he had had several premonitions of apoplexy. On the 25th of January, 1855, after a somewhat uneasy night he rose and started from his home to solemnize a marriage, at some distance from home. The Rev. Albertus L. Watts, of Steel Creek, had been asked to perform the service, but his death occurred on the 23rd, two days before, and the party had then engaged Dr. Johnston's services. But again they were disappointed, for just as the omnibus was starting from his door to convey him to the station, he fell forward, and in a few minutes expired.

Dr. Johnston was a fine classical and mathematical scholar, a sound theologian, a skilful casuist, and an earnest and powerful preacher. His last years, being free from the distraction of teaching, were characterized by increased zeal for the advancement of Christ's kingdom. As a trustee of Davidson College, he worked earnestly to raise that institution to a higher grade of scholarship and usefulness, and it was during the latter days of his life that important changes for the better were made. His services in Charlotte were eminently useful to the church, and the period of his ministry may be regarded as the turning point in the history of the church, securing its success by perfecting its organization and making it self-supporting. He was also a strong and somewhat active advocate of internal improvements, and he did not hesitate, at suitable times, by public address, to encourage the people to undertake the building of railroads and plank roads. He was fearless in denouncing immorality in every form. Having one day preached a sermon that laid bare some prevalent evils, one of his congregation declared that he would never go to hear him again. Upon being told of this, Dr. Johnston remarked that he ought to come back; for on the next Sabbath he would hear much severer things than he had heard before. Curiosity, or a better mind, led the offended hearer back the next Sabbath, and he was so impressed with the truth of the preacher's remarks, that he became a stronger friend than before.

Though American-born and educated, Dr. Johnston had a very broad Scotch accent, and a peculiar pronunciation of some words, that was striking and somewhat unpleasant to strangers, but did not attract the notice of his constant hearers.

After a few months of vacancy, during which the Rev. Thomas P. Johnston preached part of the time, the church united in calling the Rev. A. W. Miller, of Fishing Creek church, Bethel Presbytery, as their pastor, in July, 1855. He accepted the call, and continued to serve them with acceptance for nearly two years. At the expiration of this time he removed to Petersburg, Va., the Presbytery dissolving the pastoral relation April 16, 1857. From November, 1857, until April, 1862, Rev. Alexander Sinclair was pastor of the church. During these five years the membership increased from about 150 to 228. After Mr. Sinclair's resignation the church was supplied for a time by Rev. Dr. Kirkpatrick, President of Davidson College, and then by Rev. R. Burwell, Principal of the Charlotte Female Institute. In 1864 Mr. Sinclair again served the church for a season, but was led to resign by the state of his health.

In October, 1865, Rev. A. W. Miller was a second time installed pastor of the Charlotte church, and continues laboring there to this day. The membership has increased to 317, and the church is now the strongest and ablest in Western North Carolina, and perhaps the most influential church in the State. In 1878 the church reported $5,186, as paid for church purposes, including pastor's salary.

Near the beginning of Dr. Miller's pastorate, in 1856, it was found that the church building was too small to accommodate the congregation, and it was determined to remove the old building and erect a new one. The result was the present beautiful and commodious church, which was completed in 1858, at a cost of about ($20,000) twenty thousand dollars. In 1875-'76 the congregation erected a neat and comfortable manse on the church lot, at a cost of about ($5,000) five thousand dollars. The church, surmounted with its tapering spire, and accompanied by its tasteful manse embowered with venerable oaks, in a spacious square, presents a beautiful and attractive scene to the attentive visitor passing up Tryon street.

Some years ago this congregation undertook a mission enterprise in the western part of the city, erected a suitable building of wood, and have been carrying on a day school and a regular Sunday School there, which have been a blessing to that part of the city.

THE SECOND CHURCH.

For nearly fifteen years the city of Charlotte has been growing rapidly, increasing from about 3,000 to 8,000 inhabitants or more, the centre of an important railroad system, trade increased, and the people gathered there from many points. Situated in a Presbyterian county, and surrounded by counties both in this State and South Carolina, where there were strong Presbyterian churches, it came to pass that the incomers embraced many Presbyterians. As the population grew there was felt a necessity for a second Presbyterian church. Accordingly, a number of persons petitioning, the Presbytery of Mecklenburg, on the 22nd of October, 1873, organized the Second Church of Charlotte, consisting of thirty-three members. Within six month this little band increased to sixty, and in the spring of 1878, one hundred and six members were reported, and $3,620 given to church purposes, including pastor's salary. Dr. Plummer, of Columbia Theological Seminary, at first was an occasional supply, preaching in the Court House, but on the 15th of October, 1874, the Presbytery received the Rev. E. H. Harding, as pastor elect of this congregation. They soon began to prepare for building a house, and securing an eligible site on Trade street, two squares from Independence Square, they erected a commodious structure, of a style of architecture somewhat unique. Here by the blessing of heaven, they have continued to worship and labor, with every prospect of continued growth and prosperity. In the growing and enterprising city of Charlotte there is room for abundant work, and material for a large increase.

"OR EVEN AS THIS PUBLICAN."

The first remark made in the account given of the devout man who offered the prayer, of which the above is an extract, is that "he stood and prayed thus with himself." The words seem to intimate that his religion and his worship was of an exclusive kind. The Scripture incident was forcibly suggested by reading the following paragraph clipped from a Northern paper published not far from Dr. D.'s home:

"Dr. Morgan Dix, of Trinity church, New York, in his 'Manual of the Christian Life,' warns churchmen not to attend the places of worship of the denominations or sects. 'Go not at all,' he says, 'neither to hear preaching out of curiosity nor to oblige friends. Keep to the church alone. You have naught to do with those without the church but to pray for them and treat them with kindness.'"

"Manual of the Christian Life!" Attending the places of worship of the denominations or sects is inconsistent with the Christian life—inimical to holiness, injurious to piety! So much so as to call for special exhortation on the subject, charging those who are within "the church" to avoid them, not to allow any consideration to induce them to attend. "Go not at all." And then this great apostle adds, "You have naught to do with those without the church but to pray for them and treat them with kindness."

There is something peculiarly touching and tender about that last sentence. One is inclined to weep in grateful appreciation of the magnanimity of this successor of the Apostles to the poor misguided, blinded wretches who are "without the church."

Of course if this big gun thus delivers himself, the pop-guns throughout the country will echo his sentiments. There is nothing new, however, in all this; it is just a bold uttering of what everybody knows is the prevailing opinion of the Episcopal church. And they justify their course by reminding one of the rules of their church as if this were any justification. They politely hope that you will think nothing of it, as you know the rules of our church: i. e., "I cannot associate with you in worshiping God; do not think hardly of me for it; the only reason is because we do not think you are a church at all. You understand this." Yet if their bishop comes along this same person will invite you to attend his "services," and seem surprised that you do not go gladly to hear him. Moreover, if they are without a suitable place of worship they will accept the proffer of your "house of worship," as the bishops call it in their reports; but they will not think of allowing your preacher to use their consecrated church should anything deprive you of your "house of worship." Oh! no; "it is against their rules, you know; you must not think hardly of it; you understand how it is."

You have doubtless seen the leader of this flock in your church upon some funeral occasion, but when did you ever see him darken the doors of your "house of worship" at any other time? You might have preaching every night for three weeks, and yet he would not come near you. Did you ever see him unite with the ministers of the town in any religious intercourse? Do they belong to any undenominational Bible societies or evangelical alliances with the other ministers? Do they attend any union prayer meetings? Do they offer their churches to any of the denominations when a Presbytery, Synod, Conference or Association meets in the town? Ah! no; but you know this is "against their rules." This is no satisfactory reason. The question recurs, why is it against your rules? It is because they must stand and pray "by themselves."

And yet the members of the various "sects" accept this trite threadbare explanation as satisfactory! Consider the colossal arrogance of a denomination 5,000 strong unchurching over 200,000 consistent Christians in North Carolina, whose lives certainly will bear favorable comparison with those in their own communion to say the least of it; whose ministers are not so very far behind these successors of the Apostles in intelligence, education and zeal in the Master's service; withholding all sympathy, encouragement and fraternal association from them; bidding them stand aside as those "without the church." By what standard or text can this discrimination be justified, these pretensions supported? Where are the marks of an exclusive title to be the church of God? "By their fruits ye shall know them," was the God-ordained text; according to this text the sects need not blush to be compared with "the church." Can the same be said of "the church" itself?

IDEM.

A MEMOIR OF BISHOP MEADE.

BY BISHOP JOHNS.

Biography is one of the most fascinating forms of composition. Accordingly, the Bible, inspired by God for the use of man, is largely made up of it. In the Old Testament patriarchs, prophets, saints and sages pass before us as in a magic mirror; the heroes of the olden time stand out upon the sacred canvas "in form and moving how express and admirable!" In the New Testament we have not less than four biographies of our Lord, independent but harmonious: and these several lives of Christ constitute a distinct and most important branch of the Christian evidences.

Our own literature is particularly rich in this department. There is no more delightful reading in our language than Southey's Life of Nelson, Lockhart's Life of Scott, and Boswell's Life of Johnson. It is not often that we meet with a biographical sketch so attractive and edifying as the Memoir of Bishop Meade, by Bishop Johns. The author and the subject alike were among the most exemplary and venerable members of the order to which they belonged; and they would both have been eminent ministers of God in any age and in any branch of the Church. For nearly if not quite twenty years associated with the subject of the biography in the intimate relations of Assistant Bishop, the author had every opportunity of knowing not merely grand outlines of his character and the principal events of his life; but the man as he was, in those unpremeditated and unconscious manifestations of character, which are visible when a man is off his guard, and the genuine voice of nature speaks. It is like taking a man's picture when he is not sitting for his portrait. As I write the images of both of these truly apostolic men rise up before me. Bishop Johns I have known from my youth. Bishop Meade from my boyhood. As unlike as two good men and able men, of the same generation, of the same church, and of the same party in the church, could well be. The one an ornate and brilliant preacher, of finished elocution; if anything a little too studied. The other plain and unadorned, but having perhaps all the more weight and authority from his seeming indifference to the arts of the orator. In no man did force of character and will appear more impressively in his public addresses than in Bishop Meade, or contribute more to the effect. Behind every sentence the hearer felt there was a man, a man of settled convictions and indomitable will. His great, honest, manly soul transpired through his sentiments, words, tones and questions. His speaking was not an art or an inspiration, but the simple utterance of sincere conviction. He perfectly disdained the tricks of the rhetorical declaimer, and purposely adopted, or rather unconsciously employed, the more energetic and effective because the plainest and most direct style of preaching. It was not any peculiar felicity of prose, or even any remarkable originality and vigor of thought, that gave such signal weight and authority to what he said, but the known and felt character of the man.

By birth and marriage Bishop Meade was connected with many of the old historic families of Virginia, so lovingly commemorated in his quaint and curious volume entitled The Old Families and Old Churches of Virginia. His honored father was Aid-de-Camp to the Commander-in-Chief, and one of his military family. Col. Meade was highly esteemed as a man and an officer by his illustrious chief. There is an amusing story told of a conflict of politeness between them. The year before the death of Washington, Col. Meade made him a visit at Mount Vernon. They happened to meet on the opposite sides of a pair of draw bars. The Colonel insisted on pulling them down in deference to the General's rank. The General insisted upon taking them down in his character of host.

Bishop Meade's life, from youth to age, has all the unity and progress of an epic poem.

Servetur ad imum
Qualis ab incepto processerit.

He was a conscientious, manly, truthful and noble boy; affectionate to his sisters, obedient and loving to his widowed mother. A woman of strong sense and sterling piety, she trained him to filial obedience from his childhood. He was taught to obey, as George Washington was taught to obey; and so he learned to govern. The first lesson to be impressed on a child, in point of time and in point of importance, is implicit obedience to lawful authority, and eminently to parental authority. No matter what personal qualities our children may have, we need never expect to see our children men like Bishop Meade and Gen. Washington until we have parents who will have sense enough and firmness enough not only to inculcate but to enforce obedience. The modern sentimental humanitarians will never get beyond the poetical wisdom of the Bible, teaching on this subject or any other; and they will have to come back to the Scriptural doctrine of family discipline or see their children perish before their eyes. Men like Bishop Meade, like Gen. Washington, like the Hodges (Charles and Hugh), like the Wesleys (Charles and John), are not formed by unaided development, but by wise training.

A more perfect pattern of a hard-working, disinterested and conscientious parish minister than Bishop Meade it would be hard for Chaucer, or Goldsmith, or Richard Baxter to draw, for fancy or fact to supply, working with his own hands to support his family while "laboring more abundantly" than others for the interest of his own parish and the church at large, showing that it is possible for a man to pursue a secular occupation when needful and not become secularized in spirit. While scrupulously neat and clean, and therefore not indifferent to his dress, Bishop Meade was conspicuously plain in his attire to the day of his death, for many years after he became a minister of the Gospel wearing Virginia cloth. He probably gave away more than any man of his day and of his means, to purely religious and benevolent objects. As for making anything by his ministry, or choosing one place rather than another because he could get more money by it, the thought probably never entered his head. The ministry of no church can ever lose its power while it can point to men like Bishop Meade, giving away all that he got from his congregation, though far from rich himself, and receiving a very moderate salary as Bishop; or to a man like our own James W. Alexander—clarum et venerabile nomen—who positively refused an addition of one thousand dollars to his salary, when his salary was not large, compared with what other men of less note around him were getting; and he had not like some of them, a private fortune to fall back upon. It is far better for the church and for themselves when men lose by the ministry than when they make by it.

Bishop Meade fell upon evil days, and his life, from the time he entered the ministry to the day of his death, was a life of conflict; not that he was constitutionally perverse and contentious, but because a king among men, he was the slave of his conscience, and was manifestly called in the providence of God, to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the Saints. When he entered the ministry, the Episcopal church in Virginia was at the lowest point of depression. He lived to see it, and mainly under God, through his own agency and influence, in high prosperity. His contentions were not with other churches, but with errorists and evil-doers in his own. He did not seek a cheap representation for orthodoxy and zeal, by offensive flings at other churches, but boldly confronted the most eminent dignitaries of his own, as Paul confronted Peter, "because he was to be blamed." Probably the most painful period of his life, the most painful event in his life, was that in which he was constrained to take the leading part in the trial of the Onderdonks and of Bishop Doane.

He belonged in spirit to an earlier and a nobler time. Much of the mettle, the courage, the disinterestedness, the heroic energy, and the noble daring of the heroes of the Revolution: Of Washington, of Marshall, of Jefferson, of Hamilton and of Warren were his. He was made of the stuff of which heroes and martyrs are made: Luther, Knox, Zwingle and Calvin, the first and greatest of the Reformers. Without any claim to original genius or extensive erudition, his talents and attainments were of a much higher order than was commonly supposed. His practical writings on dancing, on horse-racing, on card-playing, and on worldly conformity in general, are unsurpassed in wisdom, force and moderation combined.

The latter part of his life was a fitting close to a faithful and steadfast course. In many respects he was peculiarly favored, and taken away from the evil to come; before the prosperity of the Confederate States grew dark. From his own home he could hear the roar of our victorious cannon on the glorious field of the first Manassas. He died with the pleasing, though delusive hope that the Confederate cause would triumph. Inheriting his father's Federal views, which were those of Washington, he was opposed to secession as a constitutional remedy, but went thoroughly with his State and section when the only choice lay between her invaders and herself. This was, in fact, the position of a vast majority of the best men and bravest soldiers of the South. It was the position of his intimate and life-long friend, whose character had been largely formed under his own personal influence—the peerless Robert E. Lee—a man who when his detractors are forgotten,

"Shall live in story and in song,
By many an age remembered long."
A man "whose name and fame shall be An echo and a light unto Eternity."

* * * * * * * *

Bishop Meade descended the dark valley without a fear—not, as he himself said, from courage, but from faith. Still less from a vain confidence in his own merit, but from an humble trust in his crucified Saviour. His sun went down in cloudless splendor as his descending beams had so often clothed with peaceful glory, the purple summits of those grand old mountains, within whose shadows he lived and died.

THE END.

The course of the weariest river
Ends in the great gray sea;
The acorn for ever and ever
Strives upward to the tree.
The rainbow the sky adorning
Shines promise through the storm;
The glimmer of coming morning
Through midnight gloom will form.
By the time all knots are riven
Complex although they be,
And space will at last be given,
Dear, both to you and me.

Then, tho' the path may be dreary,
Look onward to the goal;
Though the heart and the head be weary,
Let faith inspire the soul.
Seek the right, though the wrong be tempting,
Speak truth at any cost,
Vain is all weak exempting
When once the gain is lost.
Let strong hand and keen eye be ready
For plain and ambushed foes;
Thought earnest and fancy steady
Bear best unto the close.

The heavy clouds may be raining,
But with evening comes the light;
Through the dark are low winds complaining,
Yet the sunrise gilds the height,
And love has his hidden treasure
For the patient and the pure;
And time gives his fullest measure
To the workers who endure;
And the Word no law has shaken
Has the future pledge supplied;
For we know that when we "awaken"
We shall be "satisfied."

SILENT FORCES.

Workmen in stone quarries sometimes find a very hard kind of rock. They pick little grooves for the iron wedges, and then, with great sledge-hammers, drive and drive the wedges into the flinty rock. And yet, once in a while they fail to divide the solid mass. The iron wedges and the sledges prove useless, and the workmen wonder at the stubborn rock.

But there is yet another way. The iron wedges are removed from the narrow grooves. Then little wooden wedges of a very hard fibre are selected. Now you begin to shake your heads and think, "Well, if iron wedges will not do, how is it possible for wooden wedges to be used successfully?" Just wait until we explain. The sharp, well-made wooden wedges are first put into water. They are then inserted in the grooves tightly, while wet, and water is kept in the grooves, and no sledge is needed to drive them. They would break under the severe blows of the ponderous hammer. But the workmen just let the wet wedges alone. They will do what the driven iron failed to do. How so? The damp wood swells. The particles must have room to enlarge. And the granite heart of the rock cannot withstand this influence. In a little while the solid rock parts from top to bottom, and the workman's will is accomplished.

It is so, often, in other things. What noise and visible effort fail to do, some quiet power, when applied will surely achieve. Teachers may remember this fact in mechanics, and manage some very stubborn natures by the application of the silent forces. The iron and the sledge-hammers often fail; but tears, prayers and a patient example never fail.

A CLOUD DISPELLED.

A faithful minister of Christ one day overtook an aged saint who, in reply to a question regarding his welfare said, "I know not how it is but I have been much disquieted of late. It is now nearly sixty years since the Lord Jesus found me in my sins and spoke peace to my soul, and then I had such an unquestioning repose in his love, such assurance of hope and such joy in believing that it seemed that heaven had begun on earth. But now such darkness has come over me that at times I am tempted to doubt whether I ever knew Him in truth and that it all was but a pleasing dream in which I had deceived myself." "And the reason of that is," replied the minister, "that sixty years ago, when the Lord found you you knew that you were a hell deserving sinner; you never thought of finding any good in yourself but you looked away from your sinful self to Christ and you found all that you needed in Him. You were satisfied with his finished work, his blood spoke peace to you. You saw Him as made unto you God's wisdom, even righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. But now you are beginning to say with yourself, "if I am a child of God," and there is darkness in that "if;" "if I have been a subject of divine grace for sixty years, then surely there ought to be abundant fruit to his praise, and great spiritual attainments. And you have turned away from Christ, to seek satisfaction in your life or in your own heart and all is darkness; for the earth does not become a luminous body, however long and clearly the sun may shine upon it. The Lord is dealing mercifully with you, and will not permit you to find rest in self. He will have you to turn to Christ again as ever—and will have you end where you began, rejoicing in Christ Jesus, and having no confidence in the flesh; at the end as at the beginning, a sinner saved by grace."

MORAL COWARDICE.

In nothing is the moral cowardice of men more clearly seen than in their unwillingness to stand by the defenceless and weak when they are being wronged by the strong and wealthy. Especially is this the case if our bread and butter depends upon our silence.

How very few are capable of standing boldly for an oppressed and injured man when such a course is likely to injure us. And how many wink at injustice and wrong when their interests are conserved by so doing. The stuff which reformers like Luther were made of seems to be a very scarce article nowadays.

How any man can profess to be a Christian when he has not the courage to defend what he believes to be the truth, and is willing to keep quiet when he sees the weak oppressed by the strong, and cruel injustice done to those who cannot defend themselves, passes our comprehension. What God wants of Christians, is that they should be men of strong, clear convictions and should live up to them. A true man and Christian will say, and act accordingly, "Let the truth prevail, and justice be done, though the heavens fall, and though they crush me in their fall." This is moral courage and heroism, and anything less than this is moral cowardice. May God help us to be true to our convictions and allow no false notions of temporary self-interest to hush our voices when truth and justice are in peril.—Golden Censer.

A WIFE'S RIGHTS.

It is a great mistake for a husband to keep his wife in ignorance of his business affairs. In ordinary families it is she who regulates the outgo, and she ought to know what is the income. Not long since, I heard a young wife, just in the early experience of housekeeping, say: "How shall I know whether we are living beyond our means? I can't get any idea of what we have to spend; and, while I try to be very careful, of course, I might spend less on my table if we were getting in debt." Surely, she ought not to be blamed if the debt and credit accounts are not prosperous. A loving and anxious wife suffers untold imaginary fears, if she sees a tired or perplexed expression on her husband's face, unless she is assured of the truest confidence between them and knows that no great concern of his is kept a secret from her.

SELF-RESPECT.

Always remember no one can debase you but yourself. Slander, satire, falsehood, injustice—these can never rob you of your manhood. Men may lie about you, they may denounce you, they may cherish suspicions manifold, they may make your failing the target of their wit or cruelty; never be alarmed—never swerve an inch from the line your judgment and conscience have marked out for you. They cannot, by all their efforts, take away your knowledge of yourself, the purity or your character and the generosity of your nature. While these are left, you are in point of fact unharmed.—Hints for Daily Life.

PEACE.

The believer's peace is like a river, for continuance. Look at it, rising as a little brook among the mosses of the lone green hill; by and by it leaps as a rugged cataract; anon it flows along that fair valley, where the red deer wanders and the child loves to play—with hum of pleasant music the brook turns the village mill. Hearken to its changeful hum as it ripples o'er its pebbly bed, or leaps adown the wheel, or sports in eddies where the trees bend down their branches to kiss the current. Anon the streamlet has become a river, and bears among its flood full many a craft. Then its bosom swells, bridges with noble arches span it, and grown vaster still, it becomes a stream broad enough to be an arm of old father ocean, pouring its water flood into the mighty main. The river abides the lapse of ages; it is no evanescent, moving cloud or transient rain flood, but in all its stages it is permanent.

"Men may come, and men may go,
But I flow on forever."

Evermore throughout all generations, the river speedeth to its destined place. Such is the peace of the Christian. He has always reason for comfort. He has not a consolation like a swollen torrent, which is dried up under the hot sun of adversity, but peace is his rightful possession at all times. Ever is the river in its place. And even thus, come night, come day, come sickness, come health, come what will, the peace of God which passeth all understanding will keep the Christian's heart and mind, through Jesus Christ.—Spurgeon.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

From the London Weekly Review and other sources.

The native churches of South Africa have now a membership of 50,000 men and women; and the missionaries of all nations and churches in that section number 500.

Intelligence has been received from Kars announcing the arrival there of 300 Stundist and Molokani dissenters, being the first batch of 2000 persons who are to be banished this year from South Russia to Armenia for professing Evangelical opinions.

The Scottish Bible Society has at present in press a reprint of the Gaelic Bible of 1826, in which it is proposed to change nothing but the few misprints which escaped the careful eye of John Macdonald, afterwards the Rev. Dr. Macdonald of Comrie.

The Ritualists are said to be promoting a new religious order—the "Order of Widows." An invitation is given by the Rev. G. C. White, of Newland, Great Malvern, to "any widow who is free to give herself for Christ's sake to work for His poor and little ones to join the order.

Since Rome became the capital of united Italy, twelve Protestant churches have been built in that city, of which three are Episcopal and two are Methodist. The Baptists and Presbyterians have one each. Bibles are now openly sold in the streets of the principal cities.

Bishop Steere, of Zanzibar, on the east coast of Africa, has discovered that a translation of the Bible prepared by him in the Swahili language is intelligible to some of the tribes living round the great central lakes, and many copies have been sent into that region.

The Rev. T. Guy, a Methodist pastor in Florence, gives an interesting account of the conversion of a Roman Catholic prelate, Monsignor Count Andre de la Ville, a man of great learning. He has joined the Italian Episcopal Methodist church, of which M. Lauua is pastor.

At the St. Augustine mass for the Prince Imperial, the introduction of a dove, which perched at the moment of the elevation on a gilded eagle, was very effective. The bird, which is tame, had been trained for three days, and was attracted to its conspicuous resting-place by grain thrown on the eagle's back. It presented a beautiful effect, swaying to and fro above the rising cloud of incense.

The death is announced of the Rev. J. M. Phillippo, author of the standard history of Jamaica, and a very encyclopedia of reference of all the matters relating to that island. He had reached his eightieth year, and was fifty-six years a Baptist missionary in Jamaica, where he was a fellow worker with the illustrious Knibb, who did more than any man to bring about the abolition of slavery.

The revision of the Rubrics of the Book of Common Prayer committed to the Convocation of Canterbury, by royal letters of business six or seven years ago, was brought to a conclusion last Friday. The differences of opinion between the two Houses on the subject of the Ornaments Rubric were smoothed away by a conference, a very unusual proceeding, and a new rubric was agreed to, which, without disturbing the old one, gives considerable liberty to both sides.

Reports which have reached the Vatican from Catholic missionaries in Burmah, of massacres of missionaries and others, have led the Pope to address all the Roman Catholic powers, urging that a common effort should be made to put an end to such outrages. Those powers are requested to communicate on the subject with those not in diplomatic relations with the Vatican. New missionaries are being prepared to go out.

A meeting of persons interested in the reunion of the Roman Catholic, the Greek, and Anglican Churches was held on Tuesday at the Westminster Palace Hotel, under the presidency of Earl Nelson. Addresses in support of the movement were delivered by the chairman, the Rev. A. Gurney, the Rev. T. W. Perry, and other gentlemen, and resolutions were adopted declaring that the revival of 1833 could only attain its proper and adequate completion in the corporate reunion of Christendom; that the "religious difficulty in Christian countries; and the comparative failure of missionary enterprise were at once a record and a warning of disunion;" and affirming that there was much in the present attitude both of the religious and irreligious world as well to encourage the hopes as to deepen the zeal of those who were laboring for the restoration of visible unity.

A bazaar in aid of the Mission to Italians in London was opened last Friday by Lord Shaftesbury at the Grosvernor Hall, Buckingham Palace Road. The mission, which has been established for the Italian community in London, which now numbers upwards of 10,000, has been placed on its present footing for little more than twelve months. Previous to the formation of the committee Dr. Passalenti ministered without remuneration to those of his countrymen who came over to work at the new Law Courts on account of the strike among the masons, and now on Sabbath held a service in Italian at St. Thomas' Church, Chancery Lane, which was lent by the vicar, the Rev. J. H. Moran. A school had also been established, under the supervision of a ladies' committee, in connection with the mission. The hall was prettily ornamented in honor of the occasion, and the bazaar had some novel features in connection with it, the ladies who presided at the stalls being dressed in suitable costumes, with Italian colors. Lord Shaftesbury, Dr. Passalenti, and others having addressed those present on the work which the mission was carrying on, the bazaar was formally opened to the public.

WHAT SHOULD BE DONE?

One of the dread considerations connected with the appalling calamity which is upon us—for it is upon the whole country—is that whorever there is danger there seems to be panic. The hearts of men fail them from fear, and the wisest counsels are thwarted from lack of means to enforce them. There is no concert of opinion even, and what is proposed is rather thrown out, with whatever appearance of confidence, in the hope rather than the assurance of favorable results. The exception to this statement is found in the call for all who can to leave any locality in which the pestilence has reached, or is likely to reach, an epidemic form. But whither shall they flee? The gates of every city and town and village are closed against them. The very means of conveyance are denied them. Hear this wail from Memphis:

"All along our lines of railroad the people are prepared to force quarantine, after their own fashion, regardless of the rules and regulations of the Sanitary Council of the Mississippi Valley. They will cut off all intercourse, and save the State Board of Health the expense and the people the trouble of medical examinations and chemical fumigation. Already boats have refused to land at our wharf. In a few days, when the crazed have become crazier, and the idiots more idiotic, we shall perhaps find ourselves in a living hell, where to maintain order and respect for life and property will be found impossible save at the point of the bayonet."

Not only is escape prevented, but to pestilence is to be added anarchy, with all of its accompaniments of plunder, perhaps of indiscriminate bloodshed. The picture may be overdrawn, but at best it is frightful. Hundreds, aye thousands, of human beings forced to remain and await death in one of its most terrible forms. Can nothing be done? We shall be slow to condemn that instinct of self-preservation which seems to destroy every impulse of humanity, for to welcome fugitives would be to enlarge the area and multiply the victims of the scourge.

While all sanitary precautions should be taken to prevent the introduction of the disease in any new locality, in Memphis the pestilence should be encountered with all the medical skill that may be needed, and with all the pecuniary means that may be required. Never were cool heads and fearless hearts more needed. Never were prompt decision founded on wise judgment and accompanied with energetic action more imperatively demanded.

System, inexorable and authoritative should be introduced; a system of government, strict as the strictest martial law, and disobedience to which would be most summarily punished. The hand of power only can inspire confidence where men are crazed with fear. Pestilence is terrible, but anarchy adds tenfold to its horrors. Under such a system medical men of the highest skill, sure that their counsels would be followed, would be prompt to answer a call for their services, and the millions which will be forthcoming to relieve suffering, might be obtained to prevent it.

Not heartlessness, but humanity prompts these suggestions; not regard for the citizens of Memphis alone, inspires them, but the remembrance that the cities of North Carolina may soon be enduring those horrors, which, in the mercy of God, as yet we are spared.

Our Board of Health system we regard as a blessing. To control or to prevent disease in such times as these, we would clothe it with any amount of power that might be necessary. From no source can such power be derived; then it behooves all good citizens voluntarily to render unquestioning obedience to whatever is required, and the lawful authorities to compel such obedience from others.

TRUTH IS MIGHTY.

Duty requires us to show that the following extract from the Church Messenger, an Episcopal paper, published at Winston, N. C., is not founded on fact:

Criticasters like the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN and some other papers, "too tedious to mention," hailed or anticipated the appearance of the Messenger with flippant remarks about "the" Church, and attempted ridicule of "Low" Churchmen, and the scant number of Episcopalians in the State.

The epithet is unworthy of notice. The attempt to magnify the Messenger by making it appear that its advent was dreaded by numerous papers is evident, but we do not remember among all our exchanges to have seen a single expression of the kind referred to. Of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN we furnish this record:

The first notice was in our issue of May 7th:

A Protestant Episcopal paper to be called the Church Messenger is to be established in Winston, N. C., in May.

This was the anticipation.

Receipt of the first number called forth this notice:

The Church Messenger, published at Winston, N. C., and edited by Rev. W. S. Bynum, is neatly printed and contains a large amount of reading matter. It certainly bears the impress of ability in the editorial management, and will no doubt serve its branch of Christ's Church well. Bishops Atkinson and Lyman endorse and recommend it. It ought to be sustained by Episcopalians, and we heartily add that we trust it will.

The misrepresentation was not studied and intentional. That we concede; but the carelessness in looking after facts, and the indifference manifested as to the rights of others is hardly excusable.

The Messenger in a recent number contained an article commenting on Presbyterian lack of unity. We replied and assumed the aggressive, by holding up in a light vein, the absurdity of our neighbor's claiming to represent the church. Hence the indignation of the Messenger. Doubtless the blow was heavy, but if any apology is needed we find it in the excuse of the Irishman for knocking a man down: "He stood so fair I couldn't help it."

We cannot rise to the height of indignation, indulged in by our contemporary, and here dismiss our readers from consideration of the subject, in its aspects personal to this paper, without any irritation of feeling in the matter.

It may as well be understood, that we shall exercise the liberty of exposing the fallacies, or absurdities in the principles or practice of our sister denominations when proper occasion arises. Seldom, indeed are we aggressors, but under any circumstances we shall try to take and give in genuine good humor. The humblest Presbyterian minister, as a servant of Christ, is the peer not only of any diocesan bishop, but of the archbishop of Canterbury himself, and the Episcopal Church, the Methodist Church, and all other evangelical churches are but branches, and they are branches, of the true Church of Christ. We hold further that there is no historical continuity, in succession of the Apostles, but that the Presbyterian church can fairly lay claim to historical continuity in the principles of truth, and essentially in the form of government, of the New Testament church. Of this more hereafter.

A CURIOUS RELIC.

The keeper of the lighthouse on Oak Island, at the month of Cape Fear river, lately dragged up from a depth of ten feet in the water, a leaden plate, upon which were very rudely impressed or carved various figures.

The plate was presented to the Historical and Scientific Society, of Wilmington, N. C., and at a late meeting the matter of its origin and significance were discussed at length. We give a description of the designs upon the relic, as reported by the Wilmington Star:

"This metal, which is somewhat in the form of an oval shield, bears upon its face a series of characters. The central figure is that of an ecclesiastic, with long hair and beard, a mitre upon his head and a cross upon his breast. On his right is a tree, with the figure of a fish across the trunk, thus forming a cross, and a bell hanging from a limb. On the left there is a larger bell, on the top of which is a bird. Beneath the figure of the ecclesiastic is an inverted fish with a ring in its mouth."

Various opinions were advanced. One that the figures were Roman Catholic symbols, and that the plate was an ancient relic left here by Irish immigrants previous to the discovery of the country by Columbus; another that the whole was somewhere, at sometime, attached to a church; and a third that it was merely a decorative attachment to a vessel built at Glasgow, Scotland, and which was destroyed on our coast while engaged in blockade running during the late war. The extreme rudeness of execution seems to militate against this theory.

The key to the historic significance of the emblems, and possibly to the age of the relic, was furnished, we think, by the following extract of a letter from Mr. Hunter Stedman, of Philadelphia. The information was obtained by Alexander Sprunt, Esq., British Vice Consul, at Wilmington, and the letter was read by him:

"I am sorry I have not had more time to look into the matter of the city of Glasgow arms. I enclose a clip from a late copy of the Glasgow Herald, which comprehends the pith of everything that seems to be known there at present. How such a leaden plate, evidently very old, could have reached these shores is something remarkable. The old Roman Bishops, in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, had seals, and portions of the arms are represented in some of them—birds, fish, bells, &c.,—but none that I have seen are so perfect in their detail as the photograph from the leaden plate reveals; therefore I imagine the plate may have been made at a much later date, probably two or three hundred years ago. But the mystery is, who brought it here, and also how was it lost in the sea? also, what it could have been used for? Undoubtedly the figure represents St. Mungo, otherwise named St. Kentigern, although the mitre is the same as represented on the seal of Jaycelin, 1675 to 1699. St. Mungo's mitre as represented in the Glasgow arms is more of a crown shape. Still I do not suppose that would make any difference. St. Patrick, I think, has nothing to do with it, even if he was born in Kilpatrick, which is more than doubtful. There is, I think, something that represents the bird on the upper left side of the tree. It was probably not until the sixteenth century that the fish, bird and bell were placed on the tree. In older times they were represented apart, and on your leaden plate they appear both ways.

"Yours sincerely,
"H. STEDMAN."

We here give the clip from the Glasgow Herald referred to above:

A correspondent desires to know what led to the origin of the motto, "Let Glasgow Flourish by the Preaching of the Word," and when and by whom was it placed on the escutcheon of the city. These queries are not easily answered. The origin of the arms is variously accounted for by local historians, but no definite conclusion has been arrived at beyond the fact that the arms first appeared on the seals of the bishops of Glasgow during the 12th and 13th centuries, from which they were transferred to the common seal of the city in the beginning of the 14th century; and prior to the Reformation St. Mungo's head mitred appeared on the shield, which had two salmon for supporters, together with the motto, "Let Glasgow Flourish through the Preaching of the Word." It is, therefore, clear that we are indebted to the Church of Rome for the armorial bearings of our city. The legends connected with the arms are somewhat mythical, and savour strongly of the dark and superstitious days when miracles were wrought by Popish saints with an ease and facility truly amazing to the matter-of-fact folks of the nineteenth century. For example, we learn that the tree is a token of a miracle which St. Mungo wrought at Culross, when, the lamps of the monastery having been extinguished, he tore a frozen bough from a neighboring hazel, and, making the sign of the cross over it, it instantly kindled into flame. The bird represents a tame robin, the favorite of St. Serf, which, having been accidentally killed and torn to pieces by his disciples of Culross, was miraculously brought to life again by St. Mungo. These pretty stories might be multiplied, and perhaps the most plausible given by Dr. Cleiland in his "Historical Scraps" may be quoted here to some purpose. It has the merit of being at once poetical and sensible. The tree is emblematical of the spreading of the Gospel, its leaves being represented as for the healing of the nations. The bird is also typical of that glorious event, so beautifully described under the similitude of the winter being past, and the rain over and gone, and the time of the singing of the birds being come, and the voice of the turtle heard in our land. Bells for calling the faithful to prayers were considered so important in matters of religion that the rite of consecration was conferred on them by the dignitaries of the Romish Church. As to the salmon, it may refer to the tradition of the lady's marriage ring being lost, and afterwards found in the mouth of a salmon, at the prediction of St. Mungo, in the year 600, or it may have reference to the staple trade of the town, which was fishing and curing salmon from a very early period. In conclusion, if "P. P." wishes further information on the subject let him try and procure a copy of the late Provost Blackie's publication concerning "The Armorial Bearings of Glasgow."

G. LINWOOD.

The subject was not pressed to a final vote, and will be again discussed at a future meeting of the Society.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

The education bill in France does not aim at excluding all religious orders from teaching—an amendment to that effect was lost. It is merely designated to enforce those laws which prevent teaching by those organizations which are illegal. This will exclude Jesuits.

The Covington, Va., Alleghany Tribune announces that Rev. J. J. Keane, Roman Catholic Bishop of Richmond, will deliver a free lecture in the Methodist church on the 6th prox.

We are afraid that our Methodist friends are destined to a rude awakening.

The English Parliament passed the Irish University bill. The bill was manfully opposed by Protestants of Great Britain, and was finally passed, shorn of its objectionable features. The London Times thinks that a suggestion in the course of debate, that hereafter a yearly award of considerable amount might be made for those who passed the examinations, was intended to convey to the Irish Catholics that having got the University they may yet expect the money.

Under the head of a "Magnificent Reward for Risking Life" the Christian Herald presents the following:

"In consideration of the gallantry displayed by the non-commissioned officers and men at Rorke's Drift, the English military authorities have sanctioned the issue of a pair of pants and a flannel shirt to each man who was present on the occasion, to compensate for damage done to their clothing. The London Standard, in an amusing article on this announcement, says: 'It can no longer be justly said that England fails to reward the heroism of her sons. Nowadays the deeds of heroes are not to be allowed to pass unnoticed. The gallant defendants of Rorke's Drift probably fought in their shirt-sleeves, and so there was no necessity to present each of them with a new coat; but a few days' extra pay in the pockets of those new pants would make them all the more acceptable.'"

A Methodist paper says:

"Among the Presbyterians, those who do not take the church papers give (comparatively) nothing to missions."

We are not in position to verify this, but it is doubtless true, and it furnishes a hint to our ministers and elders.

The Canada Presbyterian, which, by the way, we reckon among our most valued exchanges, states the truth very plainly:

"It is little more than a truism to say that it is easier to stop an evil in its beginnings than at any other part of its course. It is so with Sabbath desecration, as the church-going people of New York are just finding out. It is almost too late to cry out when Sunday trains on the elevated railway are thundering past the church windows while the services are going on. The Christian Intelligencer bitterly complains of the injustice, and, apparently without any intention of playing on words, calls it "highway robbery." But if the church-goers of New York had been more faithful in using their power and influence to keep people from breaking the fourth commandment they would find it somewhat easier to keep them from breaking the eighth."

The Christian Union thus summarizes the famous Mackonochie case:

The Mackonochie case has been advanced another step by the decision of the Court of Appeal. The history of this proceeding may be briefly told. In 1874 action was commenced against Mr. Mackonochie, perpetual Curate of St. Alban's, Holborn, for ritualistic offences which had become notorious. Letters of request from the Bishop of London carried the matter before Sir Robert Phillimore, then Dean of Arches, who pronounced Mackonochie guilty of the offences, and sentenced him to suspension from clerical functions for six weeks, and admonished him to desist from such illegal practices in the future. This decision and monition were served on Mr. Mackonochie in June, 1875. In 1878 application to Lord Penzance, Dean of Arches, brought to his official knowledge the fact that the ritualistic rector continued the practices he had been admonished to give up, and a further monition was issued March 29. Mr. Mackonochie having disregarded this second monition, formal application was made to enforce the monitions. Mr. Mackonochie failed to appear at the hearing of this application, and Lord Penzance declared him "guilty of contumacy," sentencing him to a suspension from the functions and emoluments of his position (ab officio et a beneficio) for three years, and to pay the costs. Mr. Mackonochie then applied to Queen's Bench Division for a prohibition to restrain the execution of the sentence on the ground that it was outside the jurisdiction of Lord Penzance, and, after argument, the prohibition was granted. An appeal from the decision was at once taken to the Court of Appeal, who gave judgment June 28th, reversing the Queen's Bench, sustaining Lord Penzance, and enforcing his suspension of Mr. Mackonochie. As the English Church Union—the leading ritualistic society—is determined to test this question by bringing it to the judgment of the very highest tribunal, they will undoubtedly take an appeal to the Judicial Committee of the House of Lords and, if again defeated, to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

NEWS NOTES.

Our friends will please bear in mind that we desire week by week to furnish all the news possible for this column. They have been very kind. A postal card will often contain a large amount of such news as it is most desirable to have.

Our ministers are taking their vacations. The churches of Rev. J. Alston Ramsay have given him a vacation, which he will spend at Hampden-Sidney, Va.

Rev. J. Rumple will spend some weeks at Rocky River Springs, in Stanly county.

Correspondents will please note that the address of Rev. A. Currie has been changed from Graham, N. C., to Reidsville, N. C.

The Southern Home of last week says:

"There was no service in the Second Presbyterian church Sunday, the pastor, Dr. Harding, being absent on a short vacation in Virginia. Dr. Miller, of the First Presbyterian church, leaves this week for evangelical labors in the mountains. The following gentlemen will supply his pulpit during the summer: Rev. W. T. Waller, of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian church, of this city; Rev. G. L. Cook, of Paw Creek; Rev. W. E. McIlwain, of Hopewell; Rev. L. McKinnon, of Concord; Rev. James Thornwell, of Concord; Rev. R. B. Anderson, of Morganton; Rev. G. D. Parks, of Sugar Creek; Rev. F. L. Cooper, of Fort Mills, S. C.; Rev. W. R. Atkinson, of Charlotte."

We learn that Rev. A. Currie, former pastor of Graham church, will open a male school in Reidsville on the first Monday in August. At present he is without a charge, but he is a ripe scholar and a faithful instructor, and should not be allowed to remain long out of pastoral work. Probably he will supply some of the feeble churches in the vicinity of his school.

A PRACTICAL QUESTION.

Presbyterians have much to be grateful for. God has used them as instruments in his hand in the accomplishment of much good for the human race. Their past history presents many reasons for humble gratitude to him and sincere congratulation to each other. This side of their history is not infrequently made the subject of notice, and very properly so. It is profitable, however, to take a somewhat wider range, to look not alone upon the work of Presbyterians, but that of others, and see what our work is as compared with that of other denominations. The Scriptures warn individual believers against "comparing themselves with themselves." Perhaps this applies to churches also. A study of statistics in a volume recently published by our State Government reveals some facts and suggests some comparisons which may be a matter of surprise to some of our worthy, staid, conservative Presbyterians.

According to these statistics there are two hundred and thirty-nine (239) Presbyterian churches in North Carolina. Our own official records give only two hundred and seventeen, so that the volume referred to does us more than justice. According to this volume there are thirty-four counties in North Carolina in which there is not a single Presbyterian church. There are sixteen counties where there is only one. There are two counties in the State which have no Methodist church. With these exceptions there is only one county which has less than four Methodist churches, and it has three. In the thirty-four counties in which there is no Presbyterian church, there are two hundred and eighty-eight Methodist. There are in the State, according to this government publication, two hundred and thirty-nine Presbyterian churches and thirteen hundred and twenty-one Methodist! Suppose that as many as one-half of these are colored churches, still they have six hundred to our two hundred! Leaving the statistics published by the State and consulting the official reports of the two denominations, we find that the Methodist Church (exclusive of that portion of the Holston Conference which is in North Carolina) has a membership of 61,613 whites and 445 colored, 62,058 in all. Presbyterians have 17,046.

Such are the figures. Why this is the case, is a question well worth serious consideration. To the credit of Presbyterianism in North Carolina it may be said very justly that:

1. Its ministers are fully equal in general and special culture to those of the sister denominations. Their training is as thorough, the standard of scholarship is fully as high and is as rigidly enforced. Their sermons will compare favorably with those of their brethren in the Methodist pulpits.

2. They are as zealous and diligent in the performance of their duties; are as fully alive to the importance and responsibility of their work; are as thoroughly consecrated to this work.

3. The private members of the Presbyterian church seem to be as devoted to its interests, as zealous in its good works, and as consistent in their lives as those of the Methodist Church.

4. Presbyterians are not behind Methodists in liberality. On the contrary the official statistics place them far in the lead.

According to the Conference record of the Methodist Church, 62,058 Methodists gave $6,894 78 for the three great causes of foreign and domestic missions and education; while 17,046 Presbyterians gave $11,539 00 for the same three causes; the Methodists averaging 11 cents per member, the Presbyterians 67 cents. So that lack of liberality cannot be the cause. Why is it that Methodists outnumber Presbyterians in North Carolina three to one?

Is there not cause for serious questioning here? Is there anything the matter with us? Is our system defective, either in matter or in manner? Can some brother explain why it is that Presbyterianism lags so far behind its sister in our State?

ONE MORE BOY.

Found him in an old cabin, with a poor old wreck of a man. His parents were dead and the old man was hardly able to support himself. His brother and sister have been given to childless people, and now this boy is waiting for the next application. He is a little brighter and a little better than the average orphan boy. He claims the Presbyterian as his church. The Rev. Jacob Doll was certainly his friend, his best earthly friend. Now is there any childless couple who would like to adopt such a boy? He is doing well with us, but others could do more for him than we can, and at the same time increase their own happiness.

MONTHLY REVIEW of FOREIGN MISSIONS.

A letter from Mr. Graybill, of the 13th of June, published in our present issue, giving an account of the various operations connected with that Mission, will be read with more than ordinary interest. Senator Leandro's labors among the neighboring ranches seem to be attended with very important results. On the last of his monthly tours he was permitted to receive at San Juan, nine persons into fellowship with the Church.

A letter from Rev. J. J. Read, of the 21st of June, giving an account of the examination at Spencer Academy, and which is published in the present number of the Missionary, furnishes an interesting account of the condition and prospects of that Institution, and will be read with satisfaction by all who feel an interest in the improvement of the Indians. A letter from Mr. Turnbull, a Choctaw preacher, located in the neighborhood of Spencer, speaks of being much encouraged in his work, having just received to the communion of one of his churches four persons on a profession of their faith and ten children by baptism.

A letter from Miss Ronzone, of the 14th of June, has just come to hand, from which we learn that her school in Milan is growing in popularity. The number attending the school at present is about fifty, of whom twelve are boarders. The number especially of the latter class, might be greatly increased if she had the means to aid in their support. She makes an earnest appeal to Christian friends for one or two hundred dollars to enable her to enlarge the school. Who will furnish the needful help?

We have a somewhat hurriedly written letter from Rev. J. Rockwell Smith, of the 10th of June. It is mainly occupied in setting forth the necessity and urgency of a reinforcement for that Mission. He says nothing about the state of his health or the condition of his work, but we infer from the tenor of his letter that both were in a favorable condition.

We have letters from Hangchow to the 2nd of May, and from Soochow to the 3rd of the same. Some of the missionaries at Hangchow were again suffering from the effects of malaria, and it was feared that it would be necessary for Mr Stnart and family to go to the Island of Poodoo to spend the hot summer months. Mr. and Mrs. Davis had recently been on a visit to Hangchow. The missionaries in Soochow were generally in good health.

From Greece we have intelligence as late as the 9th of June. Dr. Kalopothakes and Mr. Sampson had recently visited the stations at Volos and Salonika. At each place they had the pleasure of receiving one young man to the communion of the Church. These brethren were also cheered by learning that effective measures were being employed to secure a larger measure of religious liberty both in Greece and in the Provinces that are to be annexed.—Missionary.

Kirwan's Letters to the Rt. Rev. John Hughes, Roman Catholic Bishop of New York. 18 mo. cloth, 60 cents; paper, 15 cents. From Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia.

The first series of these famous letters, by the Rev. N. Murray, D. D., have been republished recently in the N. Y. Observer, in which paper they originally appeared. The times demand of Protestants fuller knowledge of the Romish church and its doctrines; and we know of no source of information better than this little book for the general reader. Piquant, wise, searching, true and unanswerable, it affords most pleasant reading, and constitutes an armory of powerful weapons against the daring Papal apostacy. The three series of letters are embraced in this volume, many thousands of which have been circulated, and we hope many thousands more will now be called for.

The Westminster Normal Class Outlines. Junior Course. By Rev. James A. Worden. Pp. 132; flexible cloth. 1879. Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia.

Mr. Worden is General Superintendent of Sabbath School Work of the Board of Publication. He has prepared this book of twenty-six lessons of "Normal Class Outlines" with rare judgment. Each lesson has two parts; first, "Bible Study;" or illustrative methods of Systematic Study of God's Word; embracing a study of the Bible and its books, its divine origin, authenticity, &c., and the Life of Jesus. Second, "Bible Teaching," or the Fundamental Principles of Sabbath School Work, and the qualifications and methods of the Teacher's Work. A three years' course of Normal Class Instructions will be provided, and this little book is the first instalment. It will be to the advantage of every Sabbath School to enter on such a course, if they desire to secure true efficiency. A good map of Palestine in the time of Christ is inserted.

WESLEYAN MISSIONS.

Sir Arthur Gordon, Governor of the Fijian Islands, was one of the speakers of the late annual meeting of the Wesleyan Missionary Society of London. We give the following extract: "My testimony to the work which I have seen going on in the Pacific is not, perhaps, really of much importance. Still it is the evidence of a man who is not a member of the Wesleyan body, and who, in the course of a varied life, has had opportunities of observation which, if he has not wholly thrown them away, must enable him, more or less, to form some judgment on what is put before him. It is the testimony of one whose official position ensures his being made acquainted with all that can be said against the missions, and with every kind of accusation that can be brought against them. In that capacity, I say, my evidence may not perhaps be considered as utterly valueless. I, therefore give it; and I say that in my opinion it is impossible to use exaggerated language, or to speak in too strong terms of the wonderful services and the wonderful results, both religious and social, which have attended the Wesleyan missions in the Pacific. All those who are acquainted in the slightest degree with the history of Wesleyan missions must be more or less acquainted with the history and origin of their mission to Fiji. You all know, therefore, what was the state of the country when that missions was undertaken. You all know what, within the memory of living men, that condition was—perpetual tribal wars, cannibalism, infanticide, murder of widows, every kind of evil and wickedness perpetrated universally. Those were the characteristics of the people of Fiji Islands. What is their condition now? Their condition now is as different from what it was then as can possibly be conceived. Out of a population of something like 120,000, more than 102,000 are regular attendants at Wesleyan churches and the remaining 18,000 are not heathens, but for the most part members of other Christian Churches. Those who have not made open professions of Christianity are but a few old men here and there, who are not to be considered or thought of when speaking of the Fijians as a people. The people of Fiji are now a Christian people. Not to mention smaller and inferior places of worship, about 800 churches have been built. Of course there are some persons who will say that this conversion to Christianity is often but external and unreal. Those statements I certainly am prepared emphatically to deny. No doubt in some cases, where you come to a population of these numbers, the profession of Christianity will be but slight and external. No doubt also in many cases, their ideas of theology may be different from our own. I dare say that many Fijians habitually use words and expressions which we use, attaching to them very different meanings and ideas from those which are associated with them in our minds; but, still, on the whole, I am quite sure that the lives and hearts of thousands among them are really swayed and guided by Christian principles, and that Christian doctrine does exercises a real and true influence over their lives and actions. Out of sixty-two ordained ministers now employed in those islands, over fifty are natives, and nearly all the lesser teachers, such, for instance, as school teachers, number over 3,000, and these are natives also. I, for my own part, never lose an opportunity of going into a native church, and hearing a native minister preach. I have often asked these ministers when they have concluded their sermons, to give me the notes from which they have preached. Most of them preach from written notes, though they do not write the whole of their sermons. In that way I have got quite a library of Fijian theology, and I can assure you that for the most part it is very good theology too. I have listened with great admiration to sermons preached by native ministers—admiration not only of their intellectual power as showing that they had grasped and understood the doctrine they were preaching, but also as evidencing that they themselves felt that which they desired to teach to others. There are many of them to whom I have listened with pleasure, and I trust, not wholly without profit."

ANALYSES FOR STATE BOARD OF HEALTH.

We regard the following circular from Dr. A. R. Ledoux, in regard to Analyses for the State Board of Health, as worthy of insertion, entire. The matter is one of the greatest importance.

LABORATORY STATE BOARD OF HEALTH,
CHAPEL HILL, N. C., June 20, '79.

By an act of the Legislation of 1879, entitled "An Act supplemental to an act creating a State Board of Health," the Chemist of the State Experiment Station was made Chemist to the Board of Health. In compliance with the requirements of the law, the Station is prepared to make such analyses as may be approved by the Secretary of the Board. The following instructions for sending samples must be carefully complied with by those wishing to avail themselves of the facilities afforded by the laboratory of the Station, and provided by the law:

1. In cases of suspected poisoning the Coroners and County Superintendents of Health must comply with special instructions which have already been sent them, or which may be sent them, or which may be had on application.

2. Analyses of articles of food, drugs, etc., examinations in cases of suspected adulteration of foods and medicines, and investigations desired in connection with the hygienic duties of the Superintendents of Health, will be undertaken when authorized by the Secretary of the Board.

3. Parties desiring a chemical examination of the waters of public or private wells must first write to Dr. Thomas F. Wood, Secretary State Board of Health, Wilmington for permission. They will then proceed to obtain a sample according to the following directions. These directions will also be complied with by agents of the Board, taking samples of water by their order: Secure one or more glass bottles, or a demi-john, which will hold at least two gallons. These bottles must be PERFECTLY CLEAN (better new.) When possible, secure a sample by letting the bottle down into the well, being careful not to stir up the bottom or touch the sides. Cork tightly with new corks and seal with wax. Mark each bottle with designating numbers. Pack in saw-dust, straw or tan-bark, and prepay the express charges to Chapel Hill.*

Having sent the samples, directed to the Experiment Station, fill out and send by mail the accompanying blank. Samples sent during the winter run great risk of freezing and bursting the bottles.

By order of Board of Health:
A. R. LEDOUX, Chemist.

*The analyses will be made free of charge to the sender, but the Board of Health has no funds with which to pay express charges.

We are requested to say that "all communications on church enterprises intended for Longwood church, (Pettis county) should be sent to Rev. W. G. F. Wallace, who has occupied that pulpit for the past seven months, and is engaged to supply it for twelve months to come; and that all communications for the First Church, Pettis county, should be sent to Mr. Miriam Thornton (Elder), Thornleigh P. O., Pettis county, Missouri."—St. Louis Presbyterian.

PRESBYTERY OF TOMBECKBEE.—At a pro re nata meeting of Tombeckbee Presbytery, held in Enterprise, Mississippi, Thursday, July 17th. Mr. W. G. Woodbridge, a licentiate under care of Presbytery, was ordained to the full work of the ministry. Rev. S. J. Love, Rev J. W. Moseley and Rev. Joseph Bardwell, D. D., were appointed to install Mr. Woodbridge Pastor of Enterprise church, on Sabbath, July 20th. Mr. Woodbridge is a son of Rev. J. Woodbridge, of Wesson, Mississippi.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

GENERAL.

Measures are being taken to build a Baptist church in Lincolnton, N. C.

Rev. T. Jervis Edwards, pastor of St. Paul's P. E. Church at Louisburg, N. C., has accepted a call to the church at Harrisonburg, Va., and will enter upon his duties the first of next month.—Star.

The Shelby Aurora learns that the Rev. Dr. Pritchard has been invited to preach a series of revival sermons in the Baptist church in this place.

The parishioners of Rev. E. A. Yates, pastor of Front Street Methodist church, Wilmington, N. C., visited him unexpectedly a few nights since and left with him many substantial evidences of regard in money and goods.

It is proposed by some of the Baptists of Georgia to build a church at Washington, in that State, as a lasting memorial of all that the Rev. Jesse Mercer, M. D., the "Father of Georgia Baptists," did for the Baptist cause in the South.

NORTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Dr. A. L. Lindsey, of Portland, Oregon, is on a missionary tour in Alaska. Some members of his own church are residing in that territory and he expects to organize a church at Fort Wrangle.

The New Middletown Presbyterian church in Delaware county, Pa., has been recently dedicated. The building cost $2,000. Over $300 were contributed at the dedication for erection of a manse.

LUTHERAN.

The Evangelical Lutheran Synod Conference of America closed its session to-day. The next meeting will be held in Chicago, on the first Monday in October, 1881. Among the results of the meeting was the adoption of a paper, which was discussed several days, providing for various changes and advances in the rules of the Church. The Conference adopted a plan to form a Stated Synod and establish a General Theological Seminary, near Chicago or Milwaukee, with three distinct faculties, viz: German, English and Norwegian. Every State Synod, however, is to have its own college.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

Bishop Riley, the newly consecrated Episcopal Bishop of the Church of Jesus in Mexico, recently came into possession of a fortune from his father, and has already given $100,000 to the new Mexican church.

Rev. Dr. Hardie, of Danville, Va., a Protestant Episcopal clergyman, has been engaged by the congregation of the Groveland Presbyterian church, New York, to supply them for a year.

The annuity of $1,500 allowed to Bishop McCoskry by the diocese of Michigan will cease with the current month. But it is said that legacies left him during the year places the late Bishop above fear of want.

The sextons of Trinity Parish, in New York city, have been uniformed in black gowns, after the English fashion. For Trinity Protestant Episcopal church the gown is worn whenever the sexton is on duty; in the other churches of the parish only during public services.

METHODIST.

The corner-stone of the new M. E. church, Murfreesboro, Tenn., was laid July 4th. The church will cost when completed $3,000, and is quite a heavy undertaking for these colored people.

The new M. E. church at Ripley, Ohio, was dedicated Sunday, July 6th. Dr. Payne, of the Ohio Wesleyan University, delivered the dedicatory sermon. The church, one of the handsomest in the State, cost $40,000 and is entirely free from debt.

BAPTIST.

A new church edifice costing about $12,500 has been dedicated at Freeport, Ill., and practically free from debt, the last $2,000 being provided at the dedication.

The colored Baptists of Kentucky are moving ahead in their efforts to secure a theological school. They have purchased a desirable property, and from present indications will pay for it.

The Baptist cause in Elizabeth; N. J., has suffered from the spirit which has hurt the city—extravagance. The churches both built houses altogether beyond their means. One church, the Broad Street, lost its fine house of worship years ago, and under a new name and organization, worship in a hired edifice. They are getting along very well. The First Baptist church has an excellent pastor and preacher, the Rev. Mr. Gessler. But this church, too, has been greatly in debt, and has felt the embarrassments incident to the times.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Thirty-seven churches have been formed in Michigan in the last thirty months.

It is announced that the Rev. C. J. K. Jones, lately of San Francisco, formerly of New Bedford, and still more recently of Nantucket, is about to become a Unitarian minister.

The Rev. George Hood, late pastor of the Presbyterian church in Bethel, N. Y., has taken charge of the Congregational churches of Afton and Lakeland, in Washington county, Minn., he residing at Afton.

Mrs. Dr. Stoddard, who died in Mystic Village, Groton, Ct., a few days since, aged 79, bequeathed $2,000 to the Mystic Bridge church and $1,000 to the American Home Missionary Society.

MORAVIAN.

The Moravian church at New Dorp, Staten Island, recently celebrated the one hundred and sixth anniversary of the laying of the corner-stone. The cemetery adjoining the church is the oldest in the county.

SECULAR NEWS.

A renewal of the Indian war is feared. Four thousand of Sitting Bull's warriors, it is supposed, will enter the field.

Rev. Dr. Lovick Pierce, of the M. E. church, father of Bishop Geo. Pierce, is reported at the point of death at his home in Georgia. He is 94 years old.

Dr. W. W. Lane, of Wilmington, proposes to establish an infirmary in Wilmington for the treatment of Medical and Surgical diseases. On or about October 1st, it will be opened probably. We learn this from the Wilmington Star.

Copious rains North and South, as well as through the Cape Fear section of this State, have put a brighter face on nature. In Virginia destructive woodland fires which had been raging have been suppressed. The rains will prevent much of the damage that was feared to growing crops, but in some sections corn is ruined.

The International Bank of Hamburg has decided on voluntary liquidation. It has had a succession of losses since the Franco-German war, and its capital, £800,000, has been expended in supporting schemes in railways, banking and land.

The yellow fever at Memphis continues its work of destruction, but the mortality is light as yet. Matters are being systematized. A committee of Safety has been formed and hopes are entertained that wants can be supplied and suffering relieved without calling for funds from abroad. A faithful effort will at least be made. The Board of Health has not yet declared the fever epidemic, as the number of deaths from yellow fever is not yet so great as from all other causes. The Governor of Tennessee has assigned Col. Jno. F. Cameron, of Memphis, to the command of the local troops of the city. Two colored companies have reported for duty. A protest has been made by the citizens of Willbur, on the Paducah railroad, against establishing the yellow fever camp at that place as proposed.

Later notes of the fever.—Fourteen new cases were reported to the Memphis Board of Health on Sunday, and nine deaths as having occurred the night previous. The Howard Association returns thanks for kind offers of assistance, but declares that there is at present no need for physicians or nurses from abroad. The two colored military companies have gone into camp, and a part of the forces are employed in policing the city by day. On Monday afternoon ten new cases and two deaths were reported. Camp has been established five miles below the camp of last year. Trains have been discontinued on the various railroads leading to Nashville and the city is absolutely quarantined against Memphis.

One fatal case of yellow fever has been reported at New Orleans. Another refugee from Memphis has died in New York, but at the quarantine hospital.

The National Board of Health at St. Louis has been telegraphed by the Mayor of St. Louis that the arrival of fever refugees from Memphis is becoming so numerous that the establishment of a quarantine camp is necessary. He asks that tents and rations for a thousand persons, for thirty days, be forwarded forthwith.

Mr. Evarts, Secretary of the Treasury of the United States has been appealed to by the Mexican and British Ministers to interfere and prevent the establishment of quarantine in accordance with the proclamation of Governor Nicholls, of Louisiana. The appeal claims that the quarantine will injuriously affect foreign commerce and apparently result in a sweeping proscription of same. The Secretary declines interfering on the ground that every State has a right to establish its own quarantine and health laws, and that customs officers are subject to State authority in such matters.

There was considerable excitement in New York city on Saturday last in consequence of the death by yellow fever of Mrs. Brennan, a refugee from Memphis. She had taken lodgings in a tenement house located in the filthiest part of the city, and in which were five other families. Other refugees who were ill were promptly removed to quarantine. Some of the papers advise a landward quarantine.

THE MAP OF PALESTINE.

We have sent out this map quite extensively, and it has, we believe, given universal satisfaction; at least, no complaints have been made, and many have expressed hearty appreciation.

It is 28x42 inches in size and sold by publishers at $1 00.

We furnish gratis with one new subscriber at $2 65.

Col. John L. Brown, at Charlotte, N. C., and Messrs. J. D. McNeely, at Salisbury; J. D. Williams, Fayetteville; W. S. Moore, Greensboro, N. C.; will receive and receipt for any subscriptions to this paper. The checks of these and many other agents, on their local banks of deposit, will be cashed here, without discount, and save expense of postal order or registration.

Mr. McNeely is Agent for the Missionary also.

A Wise Deacon.

"Deacon Wilder, I want you to tell me how you kept yourself and family so well the past season, when all the rest of us have been sick so much, and have had the doctors running to us so long."

"Bro. Taylor, the answer is very easy. I used Hop Bitters in time and kept my family well and saved large doctor bills. Three dollars' worth of it kept us all well and able to work all the time, and I will warrant it has cost you and most of the neighbors one to two hundred dollars apiece to keep sick the same time. I guess you'll take my medicine hereafter." See other column.

In Robeson county, N. C, June 13th, 1879, Mr. ALEXANDER McPHERSON, in the 82d year of his age.

He was long afflicted but we hope he is now happy with his Saviour in whom alone he trusted for salvation.

At Lagrange, N. C., June 21st, at 4 P. M., Mrs. LETITIA A. WOOLEY.

She was the daughter of Eben. and Louisa Hearne, was born near Albemarle, Stanly Co, N. C., June 23, 1830, and married Dr. P. W. Wooley Nov. 20, 1851. She joined the Presbyterian Church at Sharon, Montgomery county, 1850, since which time she has lived the life of a faithful and devoted Christian. None knew her but to love her. All recognized her as a model of imitation in all the attributes of a genuine lady. In addition to a host of friends to mourn her loss, she leaves her husband and son, the latter of whom she lived to see grown to manhood. She bore her severe afflictions for five weeks with patience, frequently expressing thanks to her numerous friends that constantly attended her for their efforts to gratify all her wishes; and all the time acknowledging that the Lord had been most merciful to her.

Truly can it be said of her, that in all the relations of Christian, daughter, wife, mother, sister, teacher, neighbor and friend, she faithfully performed every duty.

Charlotte Institute.

THE next session begins September 10th, 1879, and ends June 8th, 1880.

No Institute ever made more rapid progress in securing the confidence and esteem of its patrons than this one during the past session. Before the end of the scholastic year the number of its pupils, attracted by the well-earned reputation of the school, increased to 117, exclusive of the adult ladies who availed themselves of the superior advantages here given in the departments of Music, Art, and Modern Languages. In no respect is this Institute inferior to any other first class boarding-school in the Southern or Middle States. Such testimonials as will satisfy an one as to the high standard and thoroughness of the instruction here are published in the catalogue These testimonials are peculiarly trustworthy, inasmuch as they are given by gentlemen engaged in teaching in well known schools and colleges of the highest grade, and who are therefore qualified to express an opinion in regard to educational institutions.

The total expense for the half session or term will be $125. This amount includes board, with washing, fuel, lights, furnished room and servants' attendance, tuition in all the English branches, Latin, with either French or German, Calisthenics, text books and stationery for school purposes. Pupils are not permitted to incur additional expense without permission of their parents. Parents are thus assured that their bills will not be greater than they expected.

Special arrangements and special terms for young ladies who wish to take only Music, Painting and Drawing, and Modern Languages, severally or collectively.

FOR THE FAMILY.

What Makes a Woman.

Not costly dress nor queenly air;
Not jeweled hand, complexion fair;
Not graceful form, nor lofty tread,
Nor paint, nor curls, nor splendid head;
Not pearly teeth nor sparkling eyes.
Not voice that nightingale outvies,
Not breath as sweet as eglantine,
Not gaudy gems nor fabrics fine;
Not all the stores of fashions's mart,
Nor yet the blandishments of art;
Not one, nor all of these combined,
Can make one woman, true, refined.

'Tis not the casket that we prize,
But that which in the casket lies.
These outward charms that please the sight,
Are naught unless the heart be right.
She, to fulfill her destined end,
Must with her beauty goodness blend;
Must make it her incessant care
To deck herself with jewels rare;
Of priceless gems must be possessed,
In robes of richest beauty dressed;
Yet these must clothe the inward mind,
In purity the most refined.

She who doth all these goods combine
Can man's rough nature well refine;
Hath all she needs in this frail life
To fit for mother, sister, wife.
Contentment dwells within her mind,
And peace doth there a lodgement find;
He who possesses such a friend,
Should cherish well till death doth end.
Woman, in fine, the mate should be,
To sail with man o'er life's rough sea;
And, when the stormy cruise is o'er,
Attend him to fair Canaan shore.

The Professor's Chair—Frogs.

The Professor wonders how many of the class who live in the country and paddle every day in the brooks and pools know anything at all about frogs? Oh, yes! you know what they look like, and what kind of a noise they make, and very likely you have felt the tadpoles nibbling at your toes; but really and truly, now, what do you know about their ways and their appearance, and how they live? The next time you go to the brook or the pool take a look at them—if you can get near enough—and see what interesting reptiles they are. Afraid! Did the little girl say she was afraid? The Professor is surprised. What is there to be afraid of in a nice, clean, sociable frog? Why the French eat them; and the Egyptians used to worship them; and that reminds the Professor that about the first mention of frogs we have in history is when they overran Egypt. What a time the Egyptians must have had, for while one frog may be quite interesting and half a dozen may make a very palatable meal, a million or two hopping over the floors and covering the beds are far too many for comfort. The Professor wonders that, with such a visitation, Pharaoh didn't let the Israelites go long before he did.

There are lots of fabulous stories, too, about frogs. All the scholars will recollect one in particular about a very vain frog who thought he might grow as large as an ox, but in making the experiment he came to an untimely end. Some of the most entertaining frog stories are told by Frank Buckland in "Curiosities of Natural History"—a book which the Professor recommends every boy to get. The Professor's observations of frogs has run so nearly in the same direction as Mr. Buckland's and his conclusions are so similar, that he thinks he cannot do better than to quote a little from this book:

"So loud and continuous is their song," says Mr. Buckland, "especially in the breeding season, that I find it recorded—in the former good old times of France, when nobles were nobles, and lived in their magnificent chatteaux scattered throughout the country—that the peasants were employed during the whole night in beating the ponds within earshot of the chatteaux with boughs of trees, to prevent the slumbers of the lords and ladies being broken by their paludine neighbors. The frogs can produce this noise under water as well as on land. Ovid alludes to this fact when he says:

"Although they are under the water, yet they try to curse under the water.
Their voice, too, is hoarse, and their inflated throats swell."

"Returning from the University of Giessen, I brought with me about a dozen green tree-frogs, which I had caught in the woods near the town. The Germans call them Laub Frosch, or leaf-frog; they are most difficult things to find, on account of their color so much resembling the leaves on which they live. I have frequently heard one singing in a small bush, and, though I have searched carefully, have not been able to find him: the only way is to remain quiet till he again begins his song. After much ambush work, at length I collected a dozen frogs and put them in a bottle. I started at night on my homeward journey by the diligence, and I put the bottle containing the frogs into the pocket inside the diligence. My fellow-passengers were sleepy old smoke-dried Germans; very little conversation took place, and after the first mile, every one settled himself to sleep, and soon all were snoring. I suddenly awoke with a start, and found that all the sleepers had been aroused at the same moment. On their sleepy faces were depicted fear and anger. What had woke us all up so suddenly? The day was just breaking, and my frogs, though in the dark pocket of the coach, had found it out, and, with one accord, all twelve of them had begun their morning song. As if at a given signal, they one and all of them began to croak as loud as ever they could. The noise their united concert made seemed, in the closed compartment of the coach, quite deafening; well might the Germans look angry; they wanted to throw the frogs, bottle and all out of the window, but I gave the bottle a good shaking, and made the frogs keep quiet. The Germans all went to sleep again, but I was obliged to remain awake to shake the frogs when they began to croak. It was lucky that I did so, for they tried to begin their concert again two or three times. These frogs came safely to Oxford; and the day after their arrival a stupid housemaid took off the top of the bottle to see what was inside; one of the frogs croaked at that instant and so frightened her that she dared not put the cover on again. They all got loose in the garden, where I believe the ducks ate them, for I never heard or saw them again. These frogs cost six shillings each in Covent Garden Market; they are not difficult to keep alive, as they will eat black beetles, and these are to be procured at all seasons of the year.

"In the green-tree and edible frogs there are fissures at the corners of the mouth for admitting the external protrusion of the bladder-like cheek-pouches which are inflated from the windpipe; and these are the instruments with which they produce their noise. These cheek-pouches they invariably protrude in their struggles to escape when held by the hind legs. Under these circumstances they are also capable of uttering a peculiar shrill cry of distress, differing completely from their ordinary croak."

In Germany these green tree-frogs of which Mr. Buckland speaks are made to serve as a sort of "Old Probabilities," being put in long bottles containing a little wooden ladder. When the weather is going to be fine the frogs ascend the ladder, hoping, perhaps, to get out and enjoy it; when it is likely to rain they retreat to the bottom of the flask. Prudent Germans keep these animated barometers constantly on hand, and by consulting them before going off on a Fourth of July pic-nic are warned whether or not they must carry an umbrella and overshoes.

Speaking of rain reminds the Professor that people who have sometimes gone out of doors after a heavy rain and found the ground all covered with frogs have not unnaturally supposed that they have come down in showers. The fact is that the phenomenon has generally happened after a hot, dry time, during which the frogs were hid away under stones and lumps of earth, and that when the rain came down they have come out for a bath.

Frogs everywhere are famous jumpers, one of them—the jumping frog of Calavoras—having become celebrated on account of his feats. But the Professor doubts whether even that vivacious animal could equal the performance of the grunting frog of the West Indies, who makes nothing of a standing jump over a five-foot wall.

People who have eaten frogs say that the flesh resembles chicken. The Professor, however, is well enough satisfied with chicken, without experimenting with frogs. In Vienna they are kept in preserves, where they are brought from the country in quantities of 30,000 or 40,000 at one time, and are there fattened for food. In Paris you may get them in the markets at about one cent a piece, and have them flayed and cooked while you wait. In South Africa, too, they are used for food; and the Bechuanas have the same notions about their coming down in showers. Here in America frogs do not begin to be as large, or to make as much noise, as in tropical countries. In the neighborhood of Rio Janeiro there is a huge fellow known as the blacksmith frog, whose voice is described as being like the clanging of a hammer on an anvil; and in Peru there is a frog of such large dimensions and immense vocal powers that his croak can hardly be told from the grinding of a sugar-mill. The Professor spent last Sunday in the country, and felt deeply grateful that there were no vocalists of this kind to disturb his afternoon nap.—Christian Union.

Hercules-Jack and the Bull.

Jack now at length determined upon an encounter with the bull. But first he went down the lane and took a private look at the creature from behind a stone wall. He seemed so little formidable as he peacefully grazed in the meadow, that Jack promised himself an easy task in his subjugation.

In playing the part of Hercules, it was desirable, of course, to look as much like the hero as possible, and accordingly, one fine afternoon Jack slipped off to the barn with a big bundle under his arm, and there proceeded to dress himself as nearly as he could like the picture in the old mythology.

As Hercules had bare legs and arms in the picture, Jack first tucked up his trousers and sleeves, and tied them securely to his waist and shoulders; then for the lion's skin, which the hero wore, Jack fastened about his shoulders a bright red sheep-skin mat which he borrowed from the hall in the house. Next throwing off his hat, tossing his hair about like the picture, Jack seized his club and strode up and down the barn floor, feeling so brave and confident that it may be doubted if Hercules himself ever felt more so.

Thus equipped, Jack at length marched off down the lane, accompanied by three or four of his comrades, whom he had let into the secret. Precisely what he was going to do, or how he was going to do it, he evidently had no clear notion; but in this he was only like a great many other heroes, after all. However, the first thing was to seek his prey. On he went, down the lane, his bare legs blue with the cold, the sheep-skin flapping up and down on his shoulders, and the big club—too heavy to carry—dragged along behind.

Arrived at the bottom of the lane, the boys stationed themselves upon the wall, while Jack jumped over into the pasture where the bull was. He didn't walk quite so proud and erect here as in the lane—he took shorter steps; there was, perhaps, less occasion for striding now that he was near at hand. However, he advanced slowly and cautiously towards the distant herd of cattle. Now and then he turned around in a deliberative way. His pace grew steadily slower. At length when he was still some yards distant, the bull unexpectedly lifted his head to brush away a fly, and brought Jack to a sudden stand-still. Reflecting, however, that Hercules would probably not have acted in this way, Jack plucked up courage and marched boldly up very near to the unsuspecting bull. Jack had read somewhere that the most savage beast cannot endure the gaze of the human eye, and he therefore resolved to overawe the bull first with his eye, and complete his subjugation at leisure.

With this intent he planted himself about a yard distant from the bull, and putting his arm akimbo, glared fiercely at him. The unconscious animal peacefully continued his grazing. No doubt if he could have known who Jack was, and what was his errand, or if he had understood that when a small boy goes about bareheaded with his trousers tucked up and the parlor mat tied to his back, that means Hercules, and that Hercules was a hero, and that Jack meant to be another hero, and had now fixed his small blue eyes upon him with the intent of striking terror to his heart—no doubt, I say, if the bull could have understood all this, he would have been terribly frightened, and would have shaken in every limb. Certainly, if he had cast his eye upon that club, and understood that it was intended for him, I am sure he would have run away as fast as his legs could carry him. As it was, the stupid creature kept on quietly grazing and paying no more attention to Jack than if he had been a post.

This was too humiliating for a hero to endure. The boys from the top of the wall shouted:

"Don't be afraid; give it to him! Punch him in the ribs! Stare him out of countenance! Knock his horns off! Twist his tail!"

Jack advanced a little nearer; he coughed, he flourished his club. Presently, incited by the cries of the boys, he picked up a stone and threw it at the passive animal.

The bull lifted his head, and for the first time looked attentively at Jack, who immediately struck an attitude and glared at him. To his astonishment, the bull did not quail in the least; on the contrary, as if suddenly appreciating Jack's hostile purpose, he glared back so angrily and fiercely that Jack became very much discomfited and began slowly to retire. The bull tossed his head, uttered a low bellow, and stood watching Jack attentively. The red mat, about this time, began to slip from Jack's shoulders, and he pulled it up so that it hung in front of him, when at once, as if maddened by the sight, the bull made a furious rush at his antagonist. Jack did not wait to try the effect of the human eye any longer; indeed, he forgot all about the human eye, he forgot all about Hercules, and every other hero, ancient or modern, but throwing his club at the rushing animal, he fled to a small apple tree, which fortunately was near at hand. The bull stopped to toss the club, and this gave Jack a moment's time and saved his life; for he had only just scrambled up to the nearest branch when the vicious beast came bellowing up underneath, and stamping with rage.

From this unheroic position Jack was not released until the farmer came and drove the bull away. Then Jack returned to his home a sadder and a madder boy.—St. Nicholas for August.

The Flight of James the Second.

The account given by Rapin of James' departure from England is somewhat ludicrous. The Queen went first. On the night between the 9th and 10th of December, 1688, she crossed the Thames in disguise. She waited under the wall of a church at Lambeth, until a coach could be got ready for her at the nearest inn. She went from thence to Gravesend, where she embarked with the Prince of Wales on a small vessel, which conveyed them safely to France. The King set out on the following night. He entered a small boat at Whitehall, dressed in a plain suit and a bob wig, accompanied by a few friends. He threw the Great Seal into the water, from whence it was afterwards dragged up by a fisherman's net. Before he left he gave orders to the Earl of Feversham to disband the army without pay, in order, probably, to create anarchy after his flight.

James reached the south shore of the Thames. He travelled, with relays of horses, to Emley Ferry, near the Island of Sheppey. He went on board the little vessel that was to convey him to a French frigate lying in the mouth of the Thames ready to transport him to France. The wind blew strong, and the little vessel was unable to sail.

The fishermen of the neighborhood boarded the vessel in which the King was. They took him for the chaplain of Sir Edward Hales, one of his attendants. They searched the King, and found upon him four hundred guineas and several valuable seals and jewels, which they seized. A constable was present who knew the King, and he ordered restitution of the valuables which had been taken from him. The King wished to be gone, but the people by a sort of violence conducted him to a public inn in the town of Feversham. He then sent for the Earl of Winchelsea, Lord Lieutenant of the county, who prevailed with him not to leave the kingdom, but to return to London.

And to London he went. The Prince of Orange was by this time at Windsor. On the King's arrival in London he was received with acclamations, as if he had returned from victory. He resumed possession of his palace. He published a proclamation, announcing that having been given to understand that divers outrages had been committed in various parts of the kingdom, by burning, pulling down, and defacing of houses, he commanded all lord-lieutenants, &c., to prevent such outrages for the future, and suppress all riotous assemblies.

This was his last public act. He was without an army. He had few friends. The Dutch Guards arrived in London and took possession of St. James' and Whitehall. The Prince of Orange sent three lords to the King to desire his Majesty's departure for Ham, a house belonging to the Duchess of Landerdale, but he requested them to tell the Prince that he desired rather to go to Rochester. The Prince gave his consent.

Next morning the King enterd his barge, accompanied by four earls, six of the Yeomen of his Guard, and about and hundred of the Dutch Guard, commanded by the colonel of the regiment. They arrived at Gravesend, where the King entered his coach, and proceeded across the country to Rochester.

In the meantime, Barrillon, the French ambassador, was requested to leave England. St. Ledger, a French refugee, was requested to attend him and see him embark. While they were on the road St. Ledger could not forbear saying to the ambassador, "Sir, had any one told you a year ago that a French refugee should be commissioned to see you out of England, would you have believed it?" To which the ambassador answered, "Sir, cross over with me to Calais, and I will give you an answer."

Shortly after James embarked in a small French ship, which landed him safely at Ambleteuse, a few miles north of Boulogne; while the army of William marched into London amidst loud congratulations, and William himself took possession of the Palace of St. James, which the recreant King had left for his occupation.

The Highest Bridges in the World.

The immense height of the towers for the support of the Forth Bridge has created some surprise, and no wonder when it is taken into account that when completed they will be the highest buildings of any kind in the world. Science will, therefore, wait with some anxiety their completion. The height of the towers on the Island of Inch Garvie, midway between South and North Queensferry, will be 560 feet to support a bridge 150 feet above high-water mark; but the reason for this great altitude is that in the generality of suspension bridges the towers are built on land on either side of the span, and were this the case in the Forth Bridge towers of 150 feet less height, or 410 feet, would be sufficient; but this is impossible from the great length of the bridge.

It seems that by natural laws there is a limit to everything on this earth—that is, that man can go a certain length and no further, as, for instance, in telescopes nothing larger than Lord Ross' having been perfected for many years. In reference to buildings a correspondent the other day quoted St. Rollox stalk 430 feet high. St. Paul's cathedral is about 460 feet to top of dome, St. Peter's, at Rome, 480 feet, the Pyramids at Egypt, at least the great pyramid, is 180 feet at present in its imperfect state, but by calculation would reach 500 feet in height when finished. When it is remembered that this structure only reaches a height of 500 feet with a base of about twenty-six acres, it will be a very difficult matter to raise the Forth Bridge towers to 560 feet with a small base. These towers are to be formed of solid masonry to a certain height, and then by groups of iron pillars girded together in layers upwards.

The Niagara Suspension Bridge has one large span of 821 feet, the railway track above the water is 245 feet, or 95 feet higher than the Forth Bridge; the towers are only 60 feet high, being built on either side of the shore. The Alleghany Bridge has two large spans of 344 feet each, and the towers are 45 feet high. The Covington and Cincinnati Bridge has a single span of 1057 feet; its height above low water is 103 feet, and the towers 230 feet high. The bridge seems to give the best proportion to the Forth Bridge, which is 1680 feet for two spans, 150 feet high, and towers of 560 feet. Those we have mentioned are finished and in working order, and we may mention also the East River Bridge, connecting New York and Brooklyn. The towers of this bridge are also built on the land, and are 278 feet high. The single span is 1595 feet long, or only 85 feet less than the Forth Bridge; while the total length is 5989 feet. There is, therefore, no doubt that the Forth Bridge, when completed, will be an engineering triumph.

SECULAR NEWS.

Advices from Hayti as late as the 22nd inst., indicate that after severe fighting with heavy slaughter, the insurgents had triumphed. The President Canal had abdicated and left the Island. Public order had been restored at Port-au-Prince, and a new President will be elected.

Advices from South Africa are to the effect that Lord Chelmsford repulsed an attack from the Zulus, and inflicted a loss upon them of from 800 to 1,500 persons. He afterwards burned Ulandi. Sanguine hopes were entertained that this would lead to speedy peace, but later advices have in great measure dispelled such impressions, and the operations of the British army appear to indicate much further service.

A most unfortunate mistake, ending in tragedy, occurred a few miles from Wilmington a day or two ago. A negro under commitment for a slight offense, was being brought to this city for confinement, when he made his escape from the constable. A few hours afterwards, having heard that he was at home, the officer summoned a posse and, at night, went to the place to capture him. A colored man proceeded in advance to reconnoitre. Soon afterwards a man, supposed to be the prisoner, came running from the house towards the officer, and was hailed by the latter several times. No answer being returned when he had come so near as to disclose that he had a pistol, the officer again hailed, and receiving no response, fired. The shot took deadly effect, and the victim proved to be the negro who had been in the advance search. The officer delivered himself, and after a thorough investigation of the circumstances, he was placed under bond for his appearance at the next term of the Criminal Court.

The yellow fever continues its ravages at Memphis, though the increase in new cases is not rapid and the type is not so fatal as during the last season. Hopes are entertained that there will soon be an abatement from lack of material. It is stated, however, that negroes are flocking into the city in search of free rations, and fears are entertained that, in the absence of able-bodied men to protect property, indiscriminate plundering will soon be resorted to. The government has furnished a large number of tents to be used in lodging refugees in the country. Rations have also been furnished for twenty days. At Bon Aqua Springs, Tenn., there have been three deaths. Two cases occurred in Louisville, among refugees, but no alarm exists. Pensacola, Fla., and Galveston, Texas, have instituted strict quarantine. A fireman from a steamer plying between Havana and Brooklyn, died of yellow fever a day or two since. Every precaution has been taken to prevent the disease from spreading.

Factory Facts.

Close confinement, careful attention to all factory work, gives the operatives palid faces, poor appetite, languid, miserable feeling, poor blood, inactive liver, kidneys and urinary troubles, and all the physicians and medicine in the world cannot help them unless they get out doors or use Hop Bitters, made of the purest and best of remedies, and especially for such cases, having abundance of health, sunshine and rosy cheeks in them. None need suffer if the if they will use them freely. They cost but a trifle. See another column.

CHEROKEE AND HER NEIGHBORS.

I have just returned from a long tour of exploration in the extreme western part of our State: and have been requested to write something about the things that impressed me most.

The first impression is the almost entire absence of Presbyterian churches in that great extent of country. This is a fact full of sadness. It is a standing reproach to us, for our lack of aggressiveness. It is not because the soil is too poor to produce Presbyterians; by no means, for that is good enough; besides, there are many citizens of that beautiful country that were once Presbyterians or are descendants of Presbyterian ancestors, and are now favorably disposed towards our Church. But they have no organizations in the section I speak of, and no shepherds to lead them into the fold of their choice. I had been commissioned as evangelist to labor in four counties, where there is no church of our denomination, while I support myself by working in the school room five days out of seven. After visiting the field, I am more thoroughly convinced than ever that all my time ought to be devoted to the work of the ministry—to organizing and building up churches in that long-neglected territory; I mean long-neglected by our Church.

Second. I find a great many people scattered about through that region that are not members of any church, and owing to their peculiar mental conformation, never can feel at home in any ecclesiastical connection outside of the Presbyterian system of faith and polity. This fact greatly increases our obligation to "go and work" in that part of the vineyard. But where is the support to come from while we go into the "regions beyond." An empty treasury answers, "Not here." And yet there are multitudes of rich Presbyterians, who are yearly growing richer in this world's goods, unwilling to lay their tithes upon the Lord's altar to build up the broken-down walls of Jerusalem, and to beautify the waste places of Zion.

Third. The establishment of our Church in that beautiful country, would tend rapidly to its development. People of a kindred faith would be induced to move in and add their wealth and intelligence to the general stock. The country is naturally rich in soil. It bears grain and grasses abundantly. Her minerals are gold, silver, iron, lead, corundum, mica, precious stones, marble without end and a multitude of other substances and combinations that are absolutely nameless. If our Church was only established in this country of such varied and exhaustless resources I think a large part of our moving Presbyterians would find healthful and happy homes nearer by than the far West.

Fourth. Railroads are in building to that country, both from the south and east. The railroad from Marietta, Ga., to Cherokee, N. C., is expected to be finished in eighteen months or two years. In a short time there will be a strong force put on the Cherokee & Asheville Railroad. A large amount of work has already been done on this road through Buncombe and Haywood counties. Our mountains are destined to become, not many years hence, the play-grounds of the States south of us, and to furnish homes and summer retreats for the wealthy and prosperous. Now is our time, as a church, to "go up and possess the land." A little longer delay, and it will be too late. It will be more than forty years then before some Joshua will lead us into possession.

Fifth. I was surprised to learn that the Latter Day Saints, or Mormons, are making a earnest effort to obtain a foothold in North Georgia, Western North Carolina and East Tennessee. Their shrewd and well-furnished advocates are urging their cause by every means in their power—by public addresses, by personal appeals, by printed documents, while the United States mail is constantly burdened with their messages—and I am sorry to say with too much success among the susceptible. Man is a religious animal, and if his natural craving cannot be satisfied with the pure, it will accept the impure. The field is ready for the seed, and if seeds of truth are not sown, error will take root and grow vigorously. If there ever was a time for us to work—to deny ourselves, to give liberally to the Lord's cause, to lengthen our cords and strengthen our stakes—it is now. Our cause should be pressed with all the earnestness that its greatness demands. O Lord help us to work.

Sixth. Our Methodist brethren are doing a noble work in that section. I attended a meeting of District Conference at Murphy, and was much pleased. Some of their younger ministers are above the medium grade. Their views are more comprehensive and positive than usual; and unless I prove to be a false prophet, some of them will make a mark in the world. May God bless the Methodists. They have a great work to do, and they are doing it. May their zeal stimulate us to more earnest devotion.

THE HILLSBORO SCHOOL.

Your correspondent, P. H. D., recently gave writers about schools, colleges, commencements, &c., a gentle hint not to put verity on the rack, nor to make such strong appeals to the credulity of their readers. He did not accuse anybody of falsehood; but intimated very broadly that some of them, to use an army phrase, "handled the truth mighty careless." He gave our good friend W. S. L. the meed of his approval for saying that certain speeches were "creditable, but rather too long," and proved his competency to give an opinion by avowing his own presence on the occasion. Now in what we have to say about the institution mentioned above it is our purpose to profit by Bro. P. H. D.'s remarks, to adhere strictly to the truth, and to give a judgment based on personal knowledge.

A few weeks since it was the privilege of your correspondent to attend the concert closing the session of the School of the Misses Nash and Kollock, at Hillsboro. A large and cultivated audience was present from the town, the vicinity and a distance. Not a few persons in the assembly were capable of appreciating both simple and artistic music. The entertainment was designed and accomplished with great good judgment. The decorations of the stage and hall were well chosen and skilfully arranged. The order maintained was admirable, reflecting honor alike upon the principals, the pupils and the auditory. The time occupied was so wisely limited as to avoid all tedium and fatigue. The pieces selected embraced such an admixture of vocal and instrumental, simple and scientific music, as to suit all tastes and afford much gratification to all classes.

The performances of the young ladies exhibited growing science, tending towards high art, and reflected credit both on themselves and their accomplished instructors. The present head of the musical department in the school is Professor D'Anna, an Italian by birth, and deemed by those competent to judge, able and enthusiastic in his profession, and a gentleman in character and manners.

Long and intimate acquaintance with the principals of this school, with many of their assistants, and with a large number of the pupils whom they have educated, enables the writer to pronounce it one of the best institutions in our land for promoting the cause of learning. It affords its pupils all the advantages of a home, cares for their physical and moral nature, as well as their intellectual development, and brings them into close and friendly contact with persons who have no superiors in the State, for culture, refinement and social position. A SUGGESTION.

Far be it from me an humble disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ to attempt to direct or even advise His ministers of the gospel. Yet I feel constrained to offer a few suggestions which may add to their usefulness:

I suggest that in their ministrations of the word from the pulpit, they be more diffusive, always adhering, however, to the scripture as embraced in the Old and New Testaments. Human nature is so constituted that it soon becomes weary and inattentive to truths which are often or frequently promulgated. Hearers say and think this is nothing new. We have long since known or heard it, and are therefore not interested. They are like the Athenians who were always searching after something new. Now my idea is, that whilst holding on to the same truths and doctrines, that they, (the ministers) diversify their application. As for instance, taking up the ten commandments and showing forth their expositions, applications and requirements; also their constant breakers without even a knowledge of the fact that they are breaking them. We have recently known a case of this kind where the eighth commandment was the text, and was luminously expounded in all its bearings and applications by the minister, to the delight and admiration of his hearers. Although many, yes nearly all, were rebuked no one seemed to take offence. I mention the above as only an instance of that to which I would call attention. My object being to recommend a small departure from the ordinary routine of expounding the scriptures.

We have the example of St. Paul and other apostles in this application. They touched upon in their teachings, nearly all of the sins of the human race, and applied the doctrine to the offence with its denunciation and correction.

In support of the above I would respectfully call your attention to certain individual ministers, as, for instance, Spurgeon, Moody, Talmage and Beecher, the two former with praise, the two latter only as exemplifying my point. Now it is known to all that these men by their diffusiveness, originality and perspecuity, draw large and increasing crowds of hearers, many of whom, it is true, go to church merely out of curiosity. But it is a good thing to bring men under the sound of the gospel, whatever may be their motives. They are in the first place restrained from doing worse, and in the second place some are induced by conviction to embrace Christianity.

When the Holy Scripture was first written knowledge was in its nascent state and its illustrations therefore limited, but now the world is illuminated by a higher order of intelligence and, its ministers should illustrate the text of the Holy Writ by all the lights of the age and of science, and take a new departure in its application, not adhering to a single exposition of its precepts. We have heretofore contended that all ministers of the gospel are in the true sense of the word scientists of the highest order. The paths which are trodden and worn by ordinary and weekly service excite but little interest, because we are accustomed to them, but if our ministers would teach views of sins against God's law as exemplified by many good men, as set forth in the Spectator, the Rambler, the Guardian, and other moral and religious writings, they would excite a new interest, which would result in a more general attendance at their churches and more ultimate good.

I subordinate the above views to the test of scriptural authority, recommending nothing which would conflict with its requirements. I do not advocate a broad latitudinarianism or a divergence from our particular creed, but a more extended administration of scriptural doctrine, illustrated by the lights which science and moral and religious experience have promulgated and authorized. These views are presented not in a censuring or complaining spirit, but for consideration.

EVERY DAY A LITTLE.

Every day a little knowledge. One fact in a day. How small is one fact! Only one! Ten years pass by. Three thousand, six hundred and fifty facts are not a small thing.

Every day a little self-denial. The thing that is difficult to do to-day will be an easy thing to do three hundred and sixty days hence, if each day it shall have been repeated. What power of self-mastery shall he enjoy who, looking to God for grace, seeks every day to practice the grace he prays for!

Every day a little helpfulness. We live for the good of others, if our living be in any sense true living. It is not in the great deeds of philanthropy that the only blessing is found. In "little deeds of kindness," repeated every day, we find true happiness. At home, at school, in the streets, in the neighbor's house, in the play-ground, we shall find opportunity every day for usefulness.

Every day a little look into the Bible. One chapter a day! What a treasurer of Bible knowledge one may acquire in ten years! Every day a verse committed to memory. What a volume at the end of twenty-five years.

THE TRUE WIFE.

The true wife is often unfashionable in loving her husband and him only, in not caring to attract idle admiration or the homage of the more serious adorer. When she married it was for love, pure and simple; and she did not look to her wifehood as to her papers of release from control and her charter for unlimited freedom. She has no very decided opinions on politics, women's rights, or the doctrine of the fates and free will. She slips insensibly, and by the natural training of love, into the grooves of thought where her husband finds himself, and holds his position to be the best of all because it is his. She is more content with his fame than she would be with her own; indeed, she finds hers in his, and would not care to be a personage on her own account. She desires for herself, for her honor and supreme personal happiness, only his love, only his health and prosperity; and so long as he is safe her star is without a cloud to veil its brightness.

"I DON'T LIKE THE MINISTER."

Perhaps he does not like himself any better than you like him. Perhaps he may be thoroughly convinced that there is need of some change in his make-up. But how to bring it about is the question.

We cannot see that your staying away from church will improve him. On the contrary, it will probably add to his discouragement. And discouragement is not the soil most favorable for the growth of excellence. If you would like to see your pastor abler, freer, more whole-souled and cheery, stand by him. Make him feel the stimulus of a warm friendship. It will put him upon his best for progress.

We are at a loss to see how your absence for the above reason can improve the church. Absenteeism is not a curative. It creates many ills, but we do not know of its curing any.

Least of all does it appear how your staying away from church and prayer meeting because you do not like the minister will help your own soul. Christian graces do not flourish under the deadly nightshade of a dominant criticism. There is one further view to be taken. How will your continued absence from the sanctuary where you are covenanted to worship, please the Master? It is related that for us he did some things which were not pleasant. Perhaps we may in return do for Him a thing even so very hard as to attend church although we do not like the minister.

THE BEST KNOWLEDGE.

The knowledge of religious truth is plainly the top of all knowledge whereof we are capable; not consisting in barren notions, not gratifying idle curiosity, not serving trivial purposes, but really bettering our souls, producing most goodly and wholesome fruits tending to ends most noble and worthy: this indeed is the highest philosophy, the true culture and medicine of our soul, the true guide of life and mistress of action, the mother of all virtues, the best invention of God, and rarest gift of Heaven to men. * * Hence the Christian rustic or mechanic can tell us what a learned infidel doth not know; a child can assure us that wherein a deep philosopher is lost. For, ask a peasant, ask a boy educated in our religion, who made him? he will tell you God Almighty; which is more than Aristotle or Democritus would have told. Demand of him why he was made? he will answer you, to serve and glorify his Maker; and hardly would Pythagoras or Plato have replied so wisely. Examine him concerning his soul, he will aver that it is immortal, that it shall undergo a judgment after this life, that accordingly it shall abide in a state of bliss or misery everlasting; about which points neither Socrates nor Seneca could assure us anything. Inquire of him how things are upheld, how governed and ordained? he presently will reply, by the powerful hand and wise providence of God; whereas among philosophers, one would ascribe all events to the current fate, another to the tides of fortune; one to blind influences of stars, another to a confused jumble of atoms. Pose him about the main points of morality and duty, and he will in a few words better inform you than Cicero, or Epictus, or Aristotle, or Plutarch, in their tracts and voluminous discourses about matters of that nature.

SACRIFICE IN EDEN.

In the institution of sacrifice we see the grand symbol that shadowed forth the curse and the blessing—the death and the life of the world. It was no offspring of reason, or of our moral nature, but given by God—given, too, before the expulsion from Eden. And there must have been with its institution a somewhat intelligent apprehension of the promise of a Restorer, as well, too, of the peculiar nature of the interposition, or the rite could have had no meaning. It was from its sublimely symbolic character that the institution of Sacrifice drew its glory and the proof of its divine origin—guilt could no more have invented sacrifice than innocency. Its offering, whether by individuals or companies of men, was peculiarly the expression of faith. Faith beheld in this symbol something more than an instituted worship; it was the transcript of a divine purpose hereafter to be filled. At first it was heard in a whisper only, by those still hearts longing after heavenly wisdom; but it pealed forth in clarion note on the banks of Jordan, as John the Baptist cried—"Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world;" and as "the voice of many waters," the salvation it symboled shall be chanted by the redeemed.—Appeal.

"ALL THINGS THROUGH CHRIST."

"Power into strengthless souls He speaks,
And life into the dead."

What poor, weak creatures we are until the hand of faith—however feeble—touches Christ, the fountain, the source, of all strength. We cannot see, we cannot believe; we know that our faith cannot help being the medium; that there comes an intangible power, that wondrous strength pours into the soul. The timid one becomes brave; the discouragate full of joy; the helpless strong. Just as that piece of iron, when the wire of the electric battery is applied, becomes a powerful magnet, holding scores of pounds in the air. We see not the stream, hear not the flow, see not the shine, of the electric current; but it is there, —the fact is clear,—the steel filings rushing to show it. The quiet unassuming trust, like the wee fingers of the child thrust into the father's large hand seem a trifling hold; but the father's grasp—the father's muscular power—the father's love—is at the back of it. It is the father's grasp that is the source of safety. So we are "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation." But the hand must be stretched out; try! If it has been paralyzed hitherto, try! He can make it whole. He says "stretch forth thine hand;" try! You cannot touch it in vain; power will come; the old sore shall be healed; the old habit, that has thrown you down so often, shall be overcome; and you shall surely say: "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me."

THE SILENCE OF SYMPATHY.

Great sorrow is silent. The soul is overwhelmed. It sinks under the hand of God into helplessness. In the presence of His power, and under the sense of His righteousness, there is a terrible dread of other and still greater sorrow. When His hand is upon us, we know that it is in justice; but conscious of sinfulness, we know not the limit of the pain He may inflict, and we are afraid. "I was dumb with silence; I held my peace even from good; I opened not my mouth, because thou didst it." At such a time the language of ordinary life is meaningless, and seems by its feebleness to mock the heart whose sorrow seeks to burst forth like a torrent. There are groanings that cannot be uttered, emotions which are wordless until the terrible pressure gives new meanings to familiar words, and forces a channel in language which can be understood in its great depth and overflowing fulness only by those of like experience. We sit alone. The presence even of friends is an intrusion; their words jar our hearts, and their well-meant sympathy is only an opening of fresh wounds. After the first great tumult is over, after the shock of the blow has passed a little, after time has taught us the language of sorrow, or when we feel the touch of the hand of one whose sorrow has been greater, the lips speak; but until then the grief is too sacred to be shared with any one, and is hidden away in the secret chambers of the soul.

Therefore true sympathy is also silent. It respects this sacredness of sorrow and does not ask to share that which is not offered. With an instinctive knowledge of the unutterableness of too great emotion, it waits for the speaking of the crushed heart. As when one is found by the road side, wounded and bleeding and sinking, the hands are busy in needed service; every want is ministered unto; the flowing blood is stanuched and the gaping wounds closed, but the story of the casualty is not asked for until the suffering one revives. So sympathy for the wounded, bleeding heart is silent. It serves, but waits until the fitting time for words. Job's friends were wise in their first overtures of comfort. They "sat down with him upon the ground seven days and seven nights, and none spake a word unto him; for they saw that his grief was very great." See, also, how little Jesus spake to the sorrowful. When His heart was moved He rendered service such as was needed, but said little. When He came to the sisters, He went to the grave with them weeping. Their sorrow was His own, and His tears were a stronger expression of sympathy than any words could have been. "See how He loved Him," they said who saw Him.

Not knowing the exact measure of the sorrow of others, our words even of kindness may grate upon their hearts by their inappropriateness. Our well-meant attempts to comfort may only irritate. The commonplace expressions of the mysteries of Providence, the greatness of the affliction, and the wise purpose of good to be wrought in us thereby, may at first fail to awaken any response and be useless, because the sufferer sees as yet only the sorrow and not the sovereign grace.

It is better, therefore, to be silent until we know what is fitting to be said. And when we do speak, let it be, not in explanation of the mysteries of God's ways, but in encouragement to simple faith in God and in Christ. "Believe, and thou shalt see the glory of God," was the message of Christ to the sisters. "Let not your hearts be troubled," He said to the sorrowing disciples, "ye believe in God, believe also in Me." But until we know that the heart is ready to hear our words, let our tears and our tender and silent services express our sympathy with sorrow.

Blessed are they whom God so sustains in the very shock of sorrow, that their lips are at once opened to praise Him.—United Presbyterian.

TWO WAYS FOR COMMENCEMENT ORATORS.

BY SYDNEY BYRNE.

THE USUAL WAY.

Young gentlemen of the graduating class, it affords me profound pleasure to address you on this proud and happy occasion. It is a day fraught with great possibilities to each one of you. After years of laborious and faithful study you have at length attained the summit of your ambition.

You have mastered the sciences, you are well versed in classic literature, and now you stand, with the eagerness of youth, looking forward for new worlds to conquer.

And well you may. The future lies before you, and you have but to choose your own path to renown.

It has been well said, "There is always room at the top;" and in this glorious country of ours the finger of ambition is ever beckoning to the highest places, and the voice of progress always cries "Excelsior!" I see before me our future Presidents, lawyers and statesmen, for to the educated young men of our time all things are possible. * * *

And so on, for an hour, while the parents and friends listen, full of pride, and the unshaven, boyish faces grow radiant with hope, and their souls feel equal to all things.

THE OTHER WAY: UNUSUAL, BUT PREFERABLE.

Young men of the graduating class, it has been my duty and my pleasure for many years to address similar classes of eager, expectant graduates. I would bring to you to-night from my experience, and the knowledge that comes with whitening hair, a few plain, practical ideas, that, if possible, I may help you to realize some of these bright anticipations.

I look upon you with pleasure, not unmixed with anxious fear, when I remember how small a proportion of the scores of young men whom I have seen with confident step leaving the doors of the academy have realized in any degree their expectations, and how many have proved complete failures. I propose to show you why so many of the brightest graduates of the college and academy prove so helpless in the world, and have so little the element of true success. I would not discourage you, or dampen in any measure your beautiful young enthusiasm; but earnestly and faithfully try to save you from mistakes, most of which come from false views of the capability of education and culture to grapple with the problem of life.

You have been bright students here, and have at last attained all the academy offers you, and, to-night, friends are proud of you, the audience cheer your deserving efforts, the professors are satisfied, bouquets are thrown you, and you are the envy of all the junior classes. You may have been often told, and doubtless believe, that you go forth fully armed and equipped; that the world is waiting for you; that you have but to reach forth your hand and the prizes are all within your grasp. Listen to the truth:

The country is full of such as you, possible great men and Presidents, graduates of this year, last year, and many preceding years. Next to the problem of finding labor for the unemployed is the problem of finding places "at the top" for young men who fancy they can fill them. There is no room for you unless you can put your shoulder to the wheel and help in the work of the world. Many things you have learned here will never be of practical use to you, except as they help you to enlarged ideas and add to your own happiness; and there will come straits in your life when you will stand appalled at your own ignorance, as revealed to you by those whom you would gladly despise. You leave these walls to-night, "bright, particular stars," with everything combining to give you false views of your own importance. You enter the contest of life, where you are expected to engage as man with man, in the very primary department, infants, so to speak, in all practical experience. Unless you realize this, and are contented to learn worldly wisdom as well as scholastic, the result will be you will become a heaviness of heart to your mother, and give your father the hard, disappointing problem to solve, of what to do with his educated, helpless boy. If you enter business you will find the details dull. If your father can "set you up" with a competence, perhaps some unscrupulous man, who never heard of the Iliad, and knows only enough of mathematics to subtract from every one's pile and add to his own, will cheat you out of it. If you continue your studies, resolved to enter the scientific or literary field, honors will not come at once, and you will be shocked to find how often men with half your advantage will outstrip you, because, while you have been helped to your knowledge through books, they have learned it through necessity and by experience.

Is education, then, of no avail? Much, every way, if to broad ideas and enlarged vision you add practical common sense. What the world needs is, not so much ready-made great men as good, honest citizens; with self-control and wisdom sufficient to be models to their own boys; with brain power enough to accumulate the world's wealth and guide its business and commerce; with heart power enough to control its beneficence and charities, and steady purpose enough to be felt for good in their own community.

Remember, too, that cultivation is as much needed in business as in the overcrowded professions. There will be less occasion for riots when the manufacturing interests, the coal business, the railroads and the dry goods business are controlled by men of education and enlightenment, and not left to the laborer and the boatman who works his way up by sheer native force.

Do not aim for statesmanship at once. Keep the political atmosphere in your own neighborhood as clear as your personal influence can do it; throw your weight on the side of the good and elevating; make your education a purifying influence to those around you; and if you are wanted in higher places, your time will come. But you will not jump to it from these doors, though by patient industry and perseverance you may lessen the distance.

I would not dispuise from you the fact that the call to most men, probably to two-thirds of this class, is to the common walks of life; and he has fulfilled his mission who leaves a bright and shining path of integrity, even should that path be narrow and fail to cover half a continent.

Let your education increase your respect for your parents. You undoubtedly are able to puzzle your mother with many questions that are fresh to you; and your father may have forgotten, if he ever knew, problems in geometry and the translation of Virgil; but be assured that the experience in patience and love and disappointment which they have undoubtedly had in educating you, and bringing you to this present position before me, entitles them to a respect which will not be your due for many years to come.

Revere your God. All science has been but feeble, half fulfilled attempts to interpret his works, to take the earth and "subdue" it, as was commanded in the beginning.

Thus, if you go forth from here, taking the education here acquired as a solid foundation from which to start, and, with humility and not a groundless ambition, add to it from every source, we shall have at least one graduating class who will really make up the "bone and sinew" of the land, and not be an encumbering weight of adipose tissue.—Christian Union.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

The English Catholic Union has resolved to petition the Pope for the canonization of several English "martyrs," Sir Thomas More being of the number.

The King of Belgium has written a letter to Bishop Crowther, a full-blooded African, congratulating him on the success attending his labors as a missionary in Africa.

The famine in Jerusalem is so great that the chief rabbis and the presidents of the two principal Congregations have issued an appeal for supplies of wheat, barley and other food.

Archbishop Hannon performed the ceremony of blessing a new chime of silver bells for St. Mary's Cathedral, Halifax, N. S., July 20th, and Bishop Haley of Portland preached the sermon.

A Polish peasant woman at Mankowe has established a new sect, and chosen twelve apostles to preach abstinence from wine, meat and marriage. No objection is made to the use of tea.

The Protestant Alliance have issued a circular asking the law against lotteries may be enforced against Roman Catholic enterprises of this character with the same severity as against those conducted by private persons.

A Christian woman has opened a medical mission in Jaffa, and religious services in Arabic are held three times a week in connection with it. No other agency has ever taken such a hold upon the people of that place.

At a recent synod in the canton of Berne the Roman Catholic delegates outnumbered the Old Catholics sixty-five to thirty-five, and elected their own candidates for office-bearers and the Synodical Council for the next four years.

The Church Missionary Society has commissioned the Rev. C. F. Schleuker to publish at its own cost a dictionary of the Temne language, one of the languages spoken in the neighborhood of Sierra Leone. The learned author published in 1864 a grammar of the same language.

Monsigner Count Andre da la Villa, a distinguished prelate of the Roman Catholic Church, a fine scholar and a poet of considerable merit, has abjured Romanism and joined the Italian Episcopal Methodist Church, of which Mr. Lanna, himself a convert of distinction, is pastor.

Mr. Gladstone states that when he was a student at Oxford he twice, "at the risk of rustication," attended the Baptist Chapel in the city in company with his friend, Hope Scott—once to hear Rowland Hill, and on the other occasion to hear Dr. Chalmers.

Sir Bartle Frere is authority for the statement that the inhabitants of a remote village in Deccan have abjured idolatry and caste, removed their idols from the temples and professed a Christianity which they learned for themselves from earnest reading of a single Gospel and a few tracts left among them by a merchant, who made no attempt to instruct them.

Bishop Gregg announces that henceforth his "Reformed Church of England" will be known as "The Reformed Episcopal Church in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, otherwise called the Reformed Church of England, being free from all foreign interference, under the jurisdiction of the Right Rev. Bishop T. H. Gregg, D. D., and the Right Rev. Bishop N. E. Toke, M. A."

Services for the repose of the soul of the late Louis Napoleon were held at Lyons, France, on the 12th of July. A mob outside the church cried, "Vive la Republique!" and "Vivent les Zonlons!" A fight followed, lasting one hour. The Prefect of the Rhone has dismissed one of his subordinates for attending the services—or, to use his own language, "for having given himself up to a manifestation hostile to the government, acts of this nature being intolerable to the administration."

On Sunday last (27th ult.) the new Presbyterian church built at the head of Simcoe street, Toronto, for the congregation of the Old Bay street Presbyterian church, was formally opened for divine worship. It is a handsome and commodious building, and at the opening services large congregations were present. On Monday a public soiree in celebration of the opening was held, which was numerously attended. The erection of this church is highly creditable to the zeal and generosity of the congregation and its pastor, and is another proof of the growing influence of Presbyterianism in the city.

In the Highlands of Scotland there are several parishes in which the Established Church does not prosper. With a population of 1,005 in an Inverneshire parish, the number of communicants is eight; another parish with a population of 1,068 furnishes three; another whose population is 10,403 supplies only 236; still another parish has six communicants; another four and another five. In the Parish of Lochcarron the income of the minister is $300 a year for each member, and of members there are only two, making his income accordingly $600.

Since 1875 the Arabs have been expecting the downfall of the Turkish empire; and in December of that year the Sheik of Derejah, who calls himself the Arabian Messiah, issued an appeal, in which he arraigned the Turks for their faithlessness to the fundamental idea of Islam—the emancipation of the world from unbelief—and declared that salvation must come to Islam from Arabia. The result of this proclamation was a political organization to free Arabia from foreign rule. A recent letter from Aleppo says this movement is now spreading rapidly, and, at the beginning of this year, 60,000 persons were enrolled as members. Even in Mecca the majority of the inhabitants belong to this society; and in three weeks' time the whole body can be assembled, armed and disciplined for action.

A petition was presented on Saturday to the First Division of the Court of Session, at the instance of Mr. David Boyle Hope, Sheriff Substitute of Dumfriesshire, to have his wife ordained to give him the custody of his eldest child, a girl of about thirteen years of age. He says that Mrs. Hope some time ago became a Roman Catholic, and has, notwithstanding her written and verbal promises to him not to interfere with the religious up-bringing of his children, left his house, and put the eldest girl into a Roman Catholic school on the Continent, the name and situation of which she refuses to disclose. Mrs. Hope on the same day brought an action in the Outer House, before Lord Young, asking for judicial separation from her husband, and for aliment.

The English Church Union has published a statement from which it appears that out of a total of over 2,000 churches from which returns have been furnished, distributed over Great Britain and Ireland, the Channel Islands, and the Continent of Europe, candles in 541 cases stand unlighted upon the altar, and in 487 other instances are lighted during the celebration of the Holy Eucharist; "vestments," "colored vestments," and "linen vestments" are returned as being worn respectively in 24 cases, in 141, and 168; the Eastward position is assumed at celebration in 1,364 churches; lastly, not to exhaust the interesting indications of advance in one particular direction as afforded by multiplicity of services and celebration, it may be mentioned that a total of 1,298 churches are returned as either "free and open," "free" (by which is meant that the seats in them are unappropriated), or "open" (which signifies that they are open at all hours throughout the day for private devotions.)

TWENTY-THREE YEARS IN A CHAIR.

A lesson of patience may be learned by a visit to a quiet residence in Lewiston, Maine, where a Christian gentleman may be found who has passed the last twenty-three years of his life a helpless invalid in his chair. Injured in a schoolboy's game at the age of twelve spinal disease set in, and soon he lost all use of his arms and limbs, and even of his head. His eyes and tongue are the only members he has not lost control of, and his well worn Bible on the shelf of the chair he has occupied day and night for twenty-three years tells how he spends his time. One who visited him recently writes:

"A visit to this gentleman is a lesson for a lifetime. The man who imagines that all creation is at sword's point with himself will feel happier after a call on Mr. Rankins. 'No one but God and myself know what I suffer,' said he, 'but I guess I am about as happy as they make 'em. I don't believe that time passes more rapidly with a schoolboy than with me. I have a great many visitors every day, and my friends include a good part of the population of Lewiston. Sunday visitors to the cemetery frequently call upon me. Sometimes they sing with me and they used to hold prayer meetings in my room. When my acquaintances get low-spirited or in trouble and need advice, they come to me. I have leisure to think and plan for them, and they seek my counsel. Some day I shall be as well off as the rest of you. My lot is to sit in this chair, and I would not get out unless it was God's will. Some friends once called on me and asked my consent to hold a special prayer meeting to pray for my recovery. I told them I was willing they should pray that I might get well if it was God's pleasure."

WANTED—A GRIEVANCE.

From the days when the wolf disputed with the lamb, and before them, there have not been lacking persons who wanted a grievance. And like as with the wolf, a grievance wanted is a grievance soon found. Looking at the Church it is not difficult to find, here and there, the grievance seekers—and note—they are never found among the workers. When one can never see anything to please him in the pastor or the members, in the pulpit or the pews, you may write over against him: "Wanted—A Grievance." But in a larger sphere grievance-seeking is adopted from other causes or for other purposes. A notable example is the case of Rev. Mr. Alcott, late of Wooster Presbytery, of the Northern Church.

Mr. Alcott applies to the Presbytery to interpret the Westminster standards on the subject of Christ's atonement. The interpretation not being in accord with Mr. Alcott's views, he requests that his name might be erased from the roll of Wooster Presbytery, and that a certificate of dismissal might be granted to enable him to unite with some other body of Christians. The Presbytery not considering his views so heretical as to justify them in declining, granted the request. Mr. Alcott, just here, we think, stood forth a disappointed man. Did Wooster Presbytery discover the true inwardness of Mr. Alcott's request and check him by a counter move? or was it a clear oversight of the gentleman's aspirations? Mr. Alcott, we take it, wanted a grievance. No doubt he had read much recently of Rev. David Macrae and Prof. Robertson Smith, whose fame had reached two hemispheres, and he would like the same. What an impulse forward would have been given by the Presbytery declining the request and preferring charges. But Mr. Alcott having received due, and overdue, laudation for the honorable course he pursued, instead of quietly retiring to some other church feels called upon to ventilate his views and declare them the same as those announced by Albert Barnes. We have no special interest in the quarrel, but it is amusing to see how the Northern papers are rending Mr. Alcott. The Herald and Presbyter, by citations from Barnes' works, justifies the following language:

"There is no one of the blunders of Mr. Alcott more damaging to his reputation for ability that his claim to hold the views of Albert Barnes. If he has the ability to understand Mr. Barnes, surely he ought to know his views before he publicly claims to agree with them. If he had read Mr. Barnes' books he writes himself incapable of understanding one of the clearest writers of any age."

From present appearances our hero will be tossed like a feather upon the wave of controversy for a very little while, and then disappear from view. He lost all when he failed to obtain the grievance.

THE END OF THE WAR.

The Zulu war is supposed to be near its end. This announcement has been made so often that a misgiving as to its truthfulness will haunt every mind until the treaty of peace is fully concluded and its terms executed. These misgivings are strengthened by the vote of Parliament but a day or two since of £3,000,000 for expenses.

Nevertheless, the latest reports are that several powerful chiefs (a brother of Cetewayo among them) have surrendered, Cetewayo himself is a fugitive, the army is dispersed and the nation broken up. All of which is mainly true, no doubt, though subject to some qualification or abatement as to its terms. Famine in the approaching season is feared, as war has been the business of all Zululand, and no seed has been sown. Now troubles are feared from Transvaal, but these will soon be quieted.

The Zulu war has been at no time popular with the British nation, and now that it nears its end the question is asked what has been gained. Dr. Moffat, the veteran missionary, is credited with saying that by this war the cause of Christian missions has been set back fifty years. To one on the spot no doubt it so seems, yet, though immediate results may be disastrous, the final outcome is beyond human vision.

By wars, God, in His omniscience and overruling power, frequently advances His cause. This does not sanctify the means, but it teaches us that God will use such means as He may please to effect His righteous will, causing even the wrath of man to praise Him.

The political results, so far as can be foreseen, are totally inadequate to the blood and treasure expended. The Scottish American Journal thus views the situation:

"There remains now to be accomplished the formidable task of conciliation and reconstruction. That may tax in the highest degree the statesmanship of the British Government. The Government will now have a grand opportunity for the exhibition of a far-seeing policy in dealing with subjected uncivilized tribes which has never yet failed to serve Britain's purpose. British administrators have always been successful in conciliating and turning to good account the dark races which they have conquered. As Lord Lawrence converted the Sikhs and Ghoorkas from formidable enemies into invaluable friends, so will the Afghan hill tribe be brought over; and so, no doubt, will the Zulus—and splendid fighting material they will make, if anything else. It is probable that Cetewayo will be confirmed in his sovereignty. But such a confirmation will be made contingent on several important conditions. Among these conditions will doubtless be a cession of territory, the residence of a British Representative, a relaxation of many rigorous laws, and a conformity to some of the usages of civilized nations. It is then possible that in the end some important objects will be attained. There may still be conflicts between the two races for ascendancy. At present the white man is in a minority in South Africa. In the entire Colony of Natal there are but 22,000 Europeans, against 300,000 natives; and in the Cape Colony the Europeans, including the Dutch Boers, are but 300,000 against 1,250,000. To the north of these Colonies are numberless tribes of fierce and warlike natives, who get their impressions of white men from contact with Portuguese slave-traders. With such conditions as these existing there must be constant strife and friction. It will take time and good management to overcome these hostile elements. The work of subjugation and civilization will steadily advance; and deplorable as many of the disasters of this Zulu campaign have appeared they will eventually prepare the way for an extension of British territory, and for both the social and moral improvement of the myriads of human beings who throng the African coast."

SOUTHERN CIVILIZATION ACCORDING TO SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY.

It is probable that Scribner is more generally patronized in the South than any other magazine. It certainly draws considerable revenue from Southern people. It is rather mortifying to such persons to read such opinions as the following and reflect that they are carefully and deliberately composed and published by the editor of this magazine:

"Murder is committed, and the murderer shakes his bloody hands at the law everywhere and walks the streets with entire freedom and impunity. Human life is accounted of no sacredness whatever, and law and the executors of law are held in perfect contempt. The judge upon his bench is not safe. Even the lawyer who tries a case that involves serious personal relations takes his life in his hands when he does so. The most trivial causes seem sufficient to awaken the brutal instincts of men and to induce the extreme of violence. Fighting weapons seem to be in every man's pocket, as if he lived in a state of war, and he does not hesitate to use them on the smallest provocation. We read of banditti in Italy who make it unsafe for a traveler who has any money to get outside the lines of ordinary travel, and we wonder at the imbecility of a government that can give him no protection, and at the low state of civilization that renders such abuses and outrages possible. We have no longer any reason to look abroad for anomalies of this sort. These Southern murders give evidence of a lawlessness and a degraded civilization much more notable than anything that can be found among the Italian wilds and mountains. They are abominable beyond the power of an ordinary pen to characterize. There is nothing whatever to be said in apology for them. The American, when he reads of them, can only hang his head in horror and shame, and groan over the fact that such fiendish deeds can be perpetrated under his national flag without punishment, and without even the notice of those who pretend to administer the law."

This composition has the unquestionable merit of force and strength. Its statements are broad and clear; they give a very decided expression of opinion as to Southern people. They might cause a reflecting mind to inquire whether he could reconcile it with his self-respect to contribute $4 00 per annum to J. G. Holland to have such statements circulated far and near. Perhaps if every Southern subscriber intimated such a doubt to Mr. H. he might ponder the paths of his feet.

PROTRACTED MEETINGS.

The following from the Biblical Recorder so nearly expresses what we think that we reprodnce it:

We insist that all should carefully distinguish betweeu a protracted meeting and a revival. They are widely different and may exist separately, and frequently we have one without the other. And yet many confnse the two things in their thonghts and sometimes use the terms indiscriminately. It is sometimes asked, "Are you going to have a revival this year?" The questioner simply wishes to know if there is to be a protracted meeting. But like many others who do not put the confusion in words, he thinks that if there is a protracted meeting there will also be a revival. But this is not always the case. If revivals were of human origin, the two would probably go together. But only the protracted meeting is of human origin. God must give the revival. Revivals gotten up by men are useless, and worse than useless. They do vast injury to the cause. Men may appoint and hold protracted meetings, but the true revival comes from God. And for good and wise reasons He does not always give the revival every time we hold the protracted meeting. As said a good brother the other day, if God should give us a revival every time we have a protracted meeting, we should soon forget our dependence upon Him for the blessing and our hearts would be lifted up with pride.

These may seem to some to be very obvious truths, not needing formal statement. But long observation has convinced us that the people are too apt to lose sight of them. They need constantly to be reminded that God must give the blessing, or all our protracted meetings will fail.

Equally true and still more apt to be overlooked is the converse of the former statement. There may be a revival of religion without a protracted meeting. Some of the most gracious seasons of refreshing ever experienced by God's people were of this kind. There was no special effort made. But God blessed the stated ministrations of His word to the salvation of souls, the building up of His people, and the glory of His name. And just here is the great danger connected with protracted meetings. The people are so apt to forget that they ought to be looking for a blessing upon all the preaching of the word. They should be expecting the conversion of sinners under the regular weekly or monthly preaching. The preachers themselves are sometimes in danger of forgetting to look and pray for a blessing upon their regular efforts. It is upon the special services that they expect the blessing. Thus both preacher and people are led to undervalue the stated preaching of the gospel. This obviously is wrong. When God's word is faithfully preached God's promise is that it shall not be without effect. We ought then to be praying God to bless all our labors in the conversion of sinners and the building up of His cause.

The main difference between the protracted meeting season and any other season is in the amount of preaching. A man may hear a sermon and be somewhat impressed by its truth, but if he spends a week or month in busy devotion to the things of the world, those impressions are likely to be dissipated before he hears another sermon. But if the impressions of the first sermon can be followed up by another, and a third, the happiest consequences may follow. This we have in the protracted meeting.

Thus while we urge that you should not omit the protracted meeting, remember to impress it upon your own hearts and the hearts of others, that God gives the revival and that He can give it when He pleases, even without the protracted meeting.

A PREACHER FAILS.

Rev. W. H. H. Murray, known as "Adirondack Murray," from his fondness for the Adirondack region as a summer resort, has failed. He was at one time very wealthy, counting his wealth by hundreds of thousands. He is a great horse-fancier, and undertook to run a model farm. Lately he bought a patent for the making of backboard wagons of a peculiar kind, and established a company for their manufacture with a capital of $100,000. His stock in the enterprise was $40,000, and he was made vice-president. He was also publisher of the Golden Rule magazine.

The property has been slipping away for sometime, and Mr. Murray has been of course depressed greatly. His sensationalism does not seem to have invaded the pulpit, though it must have seriously impaired his usefulness there and everywhere. Mrs. Murray meets the occasion, and has taken out a degree in a Boston medical college in which she studied three years. She proposes to devote herself to the practice of medicine.

ASSEMBLY MINUTES.

The Minutes of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, 1879, in pamphlet form, at hand, and now ready for general delivery. Messrs. Jackson & Bell have executed their work in the usual style of neatness and accuracy. Address Jackson & Bell, Wilmington, N. C.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

A very kind friend cheers us every now and then in this wise:

"One by one I get my people to say, 'Send me the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN.' I intend to have our paper in every Presbyterian family to which I preach, if possible."

M. De Lesseps reminds one of Edison in the startling character of his propositions. He now proposes to construct a railway, 16,000 miles long, to cross the Desert of Sahara and connect Algiers with Timbuctoo. The claim is advanced that the project, to cost $80,000,000, will be remunerative to stockholders. What next?

The Texas Presbyterian says that the Sunday laws are now in effect in that State and it remains to be seen whether those whose duty it is to see to their enforcement will do so. It adds very pointedly:

"Its not the want of laws that afflicts the people, but the need of their faithful enforcement."

We heartily agree with the Interior in the following:

"We notice that the Scotch Presbyterians of all types invariably speak of the confession and catechisms as the 'subordinate standards.' The prefix appears wherever they are spoken of in the Church courts. The habit is worthy of commendation and imitation. The expression honors the divine standard, which, in the language of the confession, is 'the supreme judge, by which all controversies in religion are to be determined.'"

"We gather from exchanges that recently lightning struck a church steeple during divine service, and that the shock was felt more or less severely by five members of the choir."

Choirs are attractive—at least, in general, some of the members are. We learned this in early youth; but we never before heard of the drawing influence being applied to lightning.

N. B.—We do not belong to a choir, and never did.

Among the noblo charities of the larger cities of this country and Europe the flower missions deserve an honorable place. Only those pent up in crowded houses, in the narrow streets of populous cities, and debarred by poverty from even occasional roving in the fields, can know how much pleasure can be conferred by the gift of flowers. An exchange says:

"The Rivington Street Flower Mission has already distributed this season more than fifty thousands nosegays and growing plants among the sick and poor in the tenement houses, and quantities of flowers are received daily from floral committees in different parts of the country. The good work will be continued until the winter frosts bring in to an end."

Bishop McLaren having said, "That we have in the Christian Church a priest, an altar, and a sacrifice, is God's eternal truth, and they who deny it deny the truth," the Presbyterian justly retorts:

"True; but all its truth depends on who is the priest, and where is the altar, and what is the sacrifice. Romo's priests could be quite as emphatic in uttering the same words."

Pere Hyacinthe has seen his day. The United Presbyterian has this to say of him:

"The proofs that Father Hyacinthe is another failure as a reformer of the errors and corruptions of Catholicism continue to increase. On his return to Paris some months since, he undertook to organize a Gallican Church, which even more closely resembled the Roman Church than that of the Old Catholics. For a while he was the theme of newspaper report and discussion, but now he is ignored and quite forgotten. The congregation he has organized, numbering 300, includes about all the disciples he can claim. By his recent attacks upon Protestantism, and his defence of the Church from which he has apostatized, he has alienated Protestants who had hitherto borne with him. He is esteemed an amiable and eloquent man, but sadly wanting in clearness of conviction, stern courage and dogged persistence. 'The Luther of the nineteenth century' has not yet appeared."

A lady sends us the following: "I noticed in the last Christian Observer a just comment on the remarks of some Northern paper about negroes communing with white people, as though it were an unheard of thing. I never heard of a church of any denomination (and probably you never did Mr. Editor) where it was not done. Our galleries were specially built for their accommodation—the colored membership was often quite large, and rarely ever was there a separate table for them; perhaps never unless several ministers were present, and another building and service was for their convenience. In Walker's Creek Church, Giles county, Va., there are now two colored members—women of unexceptionable character."

The following is a criticism made on the character of the late Brownlow North. It is probably just:

"Mr. North's mind was exactly of the kind to have originated a system of Westminster Theology, if it had not been already formulated in the Confession of Faith, and indeed he had drawn such a system from the Scriptures by independent and earnest study. Nothing is drier or more repellant when cold, nothing is mightier than this theology when heated, and North, when he began to preach it in Aberdeen and London and Edinburgh, was truly a burning and shining light because glowing with the ardor of his new-found convictions. The effect was an immense and wide-spread sensation, from which those best able to judge tell us that a very large amount of good resulted."

NEWS NOTES.

The carpeting, cushioning and painting the Presbyterian church of Greensboro has been completed. The work was done under supervision of the ladies.

STRANGE THIEVES.

The pastor at Graham, N. C., on going around to his new home found that it had been entered by thieves during the night. The thieves finding nothing to take away, very strangely left many necessary and valuable articles, such as lard, coffee, sugar, flour, soap, and many other nice and beautiful presents for the table. Such remembrances cheer and encourage a pastor, and enable him to do better work.

Rev. J. H. Thornwell writes:

NORWOOD, July 28.—Dear Brother: Our church was formally dedicated to the service of God on yesterday. Bro. Rumple of Salisbury preached the sermon and offered the dedication prayer. Although there were other services in the neighborhood our church was crowded, some having come a distance of twenty miles. The sermon was all that Bro. Rumple's most ardent admirers could have expected. Both in matter and delivery it was unexceptionable. Taking the first verse of the 84th Psalm as his text he demonstrated the attractiveness of the sanctuary by many and cogent arguments.

Rev. W. B. Arrowood writes from Poplar Hill, Giles county, Va.:

My field here is a large one, about twenty-eight miles from one extreme to the other, but our membership is small, being only about 120 in all. I preach regularly to six separate congregations—to two of them every Sabbath. Our members living in the bounds of these six congregations are organized into three churches, each session having the oversight of two congregations. We have not the material to organize separate churches at each preaching point. What we need here is the Spirit of the Living God to breathe upon the dry bones of the valley that they may live.

On July 25th twenty ministers, with representatives of twenty-nine Sabbath schools, met in the Baptist church in Winston, N. C., to organize a Sunday school convention for Forsyth county. Nine schools were not represented. The schools represented reported 1941 scholars and 254 teachers and officers. A Bible class was conducted as a part of the exercises, and free questioning was indulged. A constitution was adopted. The election of officers for the ensuing year then took place, resulting as follows:

President—Rev. C. H. Wiley.
First Vice President—J. T. Linebaek.
Second Vice President—Rev. H. A. Brown.
Secretary—E. A. Ebert.
Treasurer—Rev. F. H. Johnston.
Executive Committee—Rev. J. B. Lineback, J. C. Roberts, W. A. Shepperd, Newton Doub, T. J. Valentine.

The following delegates were elected to the State Sunday school convention:

T. J. Brown, Presbyterian Church; E. A. Ebert, Moravian; J. H. White, Methodist Protestant; S. R. Trawick, Methodist Episcopal; V. I. Beck, Lutheran; C. G. Strayhorn, Baptist, Lewis Bitting, Episcopal.

The place for holding the next county convention was decided, by a unanimous vote, in favor of the Moravian church at Salem, and the first Tuesday in August, 1880, was fixed upon as the time.

For the N. C. Presbyterian:

HOME MISSIONS.

Mr. Editor: The ladies of the First Presbyterian church in Raleigh have organized a society to advance the cause of Home Missions. They have sent out circulars soliciting the co-operation of the other churches of the Presbytery of Orange. A correspondent of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN says he has, by invitation, recently addressed this church on the subject. This is a move in the right direction. Evangelization is a great work, and all legitimate means to promote its advancement meet the hearty approval and call for the best wishes of all good people. This is the work of all time, and the most glorious work on earth. May God bless the efforts of the noble women who are moving in it. When we consider its great importance, are our churches properly exercised about it? On one or two laborers, rarely more, in each Presbytery the burden of evangelistic work is laid. The question I wish to raise and remark upon is: Should not our settled pastors and stated supplies spend more time in supplementing the labors of evangelists in Home Missionary Work? The work of visiting destitute regions and collecting and building up new churches is practically almost solely committed to the few evangelists employed by our presbyteries. How rarely do we hear of a settled pastor or stated supply going out to the byways and hedges and laboring for any considerable time? May we not find in this direction one reason why our church grows so slowly? Heavy artillery alone is little fitted for an active campaign. This combined with light artillery, infantry and cavalry make up the active and successful army. In forts heavy pounders do good work. That is their place. But while they do efficient work there, how little fitted for an active aggressive campaign. The minister who spends day after day in his study may Sunday after Sunday preach polished, profound and great sermons to the same congregation the year round. But how much does this transcend "holding our own?" Does it not look something like sitting down and looking complacently upon past conquests? Is it the attitude which conduces to aggressiveness? Do we not need more going and less standing still? Can some of us help believing that this habit of living among books as if in grooves of adamant is one reason why we are not more aggressive? Some of our ministers meet their congregations and preach the gospel to them three times a week, others twice, others once in four weeks. All around these congregations are people who rarely hear the gospel in its purity at all. Now ought not all these ministers spend more time in supplying this destitution around about them? Ought not those ministers who have statedly the most frequent access to their congregations spend the longest time in this work, and those ministers who have least frequent access to their congregations the shortest time? Ought not those of our ministers who have only one church spend months in each year in this kind of work? Is it not duty? If it were done who can fail to see that the evangelistic area of our church would be greatly strengthened? We need that our ministers in solid phalanx go out among the poor and destitute and endure hardness as good soldiers do? We need a revival of the apostolic spirit of self-denial. It is much easier to sit in the arm-chair, and recline in the study, and read the latest reviews and freshest books than to plod along in the hot sun of summer and the chilling winds of winter, over dusty or muddy roads, and lodge at night where it is most convenient, to work amidst scarcity of comforts. It may be more gratifying to pride to abound in labors in our churches so as to be able at the end of the year to count up a large number of sermons preached, lectures delivered and pastoral visits made. But would not a distribution of this labor among the destitute regions lying around do more to advance the kingdom of the Master? We think so. Let not our ministers stay in their congregations until their health gives away and then go out to minister to the destitute under stress of circumstances—go because they can't stay. Evangelistic work needs men of strength as well as other kinds of work—nay it needs them more. He who is disqualified to labor in his charge by reason of feebleness is poorly fitted to meet the uncertain comforts incident to evangelistic work. Heed these thoughts O my soul for let me write for him who needs it most!

Are the churches unwilling for their pastors and supplies to absent themselves for this work? May there be few such—nay none such! Can they be unwilling for their ministers who have been preaching for them three times a week, or not so often, for ten or eleven months in the year to spend the remainder of their time in preaching for those who scarcely hear the gospel at all? Ought they not send their ministers off on this mission? When the whole church shall be fired with missionary zeal this will be done. May the movement which suggested these reflections be extended to all our churches and quicken a greater homo missionary work!

EDUCATION.

COVINGTON, TENN., July 30, 1879.

To the Chairmen of the Presbyterial Committees of Education:

Please bear in mind that application for aid to students must be made annually. The fact that a student was on our list last year makes no difference. If he wishes aid this year application must be made by the Chairman of the Committee of Education in his Presbytery. Brethren will also please state whether the student is in college or seminary.

The undersigned has authority from the Committee to receive all students as beneficiaries for whom application is made in the regular way.

My post office address at present is Covington, Tenn., but letters addressed to me at Memphis will be forwarded. Quite a number of letters on the subject of education have been addressed to Rev. Dr. Waddel, the former Secretary. Brethren will bear in mind that there has been a change of Secretaries.

E. M. RICHARDSON,
Secretary of Education.

TWENTY MINUTES FOR SERMONS.

The recent announcement by a Chicago preacher, that henceforth he shall take but twenty minutes for sermons, has a sound like the notice given by express-train conductors at certain stopping places along the route, "twenty minutes for refreshments," and the motive which has to do with fixing the limit in both cases seems very much of a piece: namely, to give as short a time as possible to a necessary but rather irksome duty, which at best is an interference with one's plans, and must be done up with dispatch. In connection with the twenty minute sermons in this case, we are informed, the other services are not to be abridged. The organist will take his usual indulgence at his key-board; choir will sing to their utmost, and the long prayer will continue long. Expenses (in time) must be cut down, and a beginning is to be made with the sermon. Such a considerate attention to the preferences of the average church-goer is expected, no doubt, to stimulate church-going; and this ecclesiastical conductor who is henceforth going to compel his people to stop only "twenty minutes for sermons" evidently counts upon a large increase of passengers.

A good sermon may be preached in twenty minutes; but that does not justify the use of any such device as this to attract men to church. We do not know how the exact announcement may have sounded under what may have been peculiar circumstances; but, judged abstractly, the fisher of men who baits his hook with "twenty minute sermons" will next be advertising two minute prayers. Such expedients are undignified, unmanly, unbecoming. They tend to lower the name of religion, to cheapen the instrumentalities of the church, to put the Gospel before the world in the attitude of a beggar instead of the messenger it is. Let a minister preach twenty minute sermons if he wants to—and can; but not attempt to make capital out of the practice by advertising it.

It is very doubtful whether this preacher, whose name we do not even know, will succeed in making his sermons short by confining them within twenty minutes. Some sermons would be long even at twenty minutes, while others are short even at an hour. Some subjects demand longer treatment than others; some occasions allow it; and for a preacher to measure out his "meat" in due season "in portions of uniform size, is sometimes to overfeed his flock and sometimes to starve them." Old Dr. Emmons used to say: "No conversions after the half-hour;" and he rigidly regulated the length of his famous theological essays called sermons according to this maxim; but we venture the opinion that a good many conversions have attended the last part of sermons which have stretched a good deal beyond the half-hour. We know of a minister who, when he sits down to the composition of a sermon, takes so many sheets of paper—no matter what the subject and no matter what the occasion, and writes till he has filled them out. Then his sermon is done. Nothing could be more fatal to the best preaching than any such mechanical way of sermon-measuring. Not the yard-stick, nor the hour-glass, should be the preacher's guide, but common sense. When his sermon's length begins to exceed its breadth and its depth, then it is getting too long, and it is time for him to put a stop to it.—Christian Union.

ECLECTICISMS.

GOOD REASONING.

Exchange:

It was a very pretty reply made by a little girl to the statement she heard made that our Saviour was never seen to smile. "Didn't he say 'Suffer little children to come unto me?' And they would not have come unless He had smiled."

THAT'S YOU.

Moody:

Suppose, said Mr. Moody, a million of dollars were deposited in the bank for some one's use, and he should draw out only a dollar a week—how mean and stingy you would call him. You smile, but that's you. There are millions in grace laid up for you, and yet you are living on so little.

THE TEST.

Exchange:

Said a good lady to the preacher as he came out of the pulpit, "you preached an able sermon to-night." "What is your standard of a good sermon?" "When a sermon makes you feel that you ought to do better, and that you can do better, I call it a good sermon." It would be hard to find a better definition than this.

SPIRITUAL GLADNESS.

United Presbyterian:

He has never yet enjoyed the true blessedness of his religion who has not used it in doing good. Spiritual gladness comes with those offices which are prompted by an assimilation of the soul to Him who spent His life in works of benevolence, and who crowned it all by dying for man's redemption.

THEY RESPECT THE STANDARD.

Southern Christian Advocate:

One may sneer at religion, and yet have a deep respect for a religious man. The truth is, it is the perversion and caricature of religion that the unthinking and ungodly sneer at, and not at religion itself. Finding fault with its professors and representatives is, in fact, an acknowledgment of its elevated character and lofty claims. To detect the unworthiness of the Christian is to recognize the worthiness of his standard of faith and practice.

OLD PATHS ARE THE BEST.

Christian Intelligencer:

Those churches and the ministers of our times and of our own land who have deliberately and habitually lowered the standard, and have introduced sensational and irreverent novelties into their methods of church work and into their pulpits, have set bad examples and done irreparable mischief.

THE WAY TO THANKFULNESS.

Christian Observer:

We are continually forgetting the benefits of God, and not reflecting on his goodness and loving kindness, and its manifestations and fruits. This is our disposition to forget the benefits of God. The contemplation and remembrance of them is the source of thankfulness, of praise to God, of cheerfulness. So the Psalmist combines praising the Lord and remembrance of his benefits. This is the road, the way, to thankfulness.

A TENDER HEART.

Western Recorder:

A truly spiritual and tender heart suffers more pain from its own infirmities and mistakes than it does by all the injuries that can be done it by others. Such a heart is so keenly alive to its own unworthiness and nothingness, that it can bear sweetly and cheerfully the representations or injuries of others; but it will weep and prostrate itself in secret over any unintentional wound it may have caused some one else. Of course, if such a one is made the instrument of awakening a guilty conscience, that is not wounding a person, properly speaking. That is the work of God. But a tender heart in the Bible sense, grieves over all unnecessary pain.

DON'T GET ANGRY.

Methodist:

Two rules are used for terminating newspaper subscriptions: one is to stop every paper when the time paid for expires; the other is to stop the paper upon notice by the subscriber. The first rule prevails in a few offices; the second is in general use. The latter accommodates those who wish to continue; the other would save one cent each and an infinitesimal amount of trouble to those who wish to stop. We follow the genuine rule and have given abundant notice. When you want to stop say so, paying up to date. But do not get angry because you do not like our way of doing business, for anger is always ungracious and sometimes wicked.

HARD WORK DOES IT.

S. S. Times:

Downright hard work is essential to success in anything that is worth doing in the world. No native ability relieves a man from the necessity of earnest and persistent application to whatever he undertakes, if he would be efficient in his endeavors. This is as true for men of brilliant genius as for those of moderate capabilities. Indeed, it is commonly recognized by them more readily than by inferior minds. "The fact is," says Ruskin, "that a man of genius is always more ready to work than other people, and he does, and is often so little conscious of the inherent divinity in himself, that he is very apt to ascribe all his capacity to his work, and to tell those who ask how he came to be what he is: 'If I am anything, which I very much doubt, I made myself so merely by labor.'" So if a man thinks he has genius in one direction or another he will best prove it by working hard and persistently at anything he undertakes in that direction. His genius will prompt him to labor, not relieve him from labor.

HEAVEN.

Northern Christian Advocate:

Wherefore, it is a mistake to be always thinking of heaven as something in the remote future. We may have it now, and may know that we have it now. If we ever have heaven at all, hereafter, it will be because it is established in our hearts here, in this vale of tears. Our only present guarantee of the future blessedness of those who die in the Lord, is the knowledge that we are now living in Him, and that we have Christ in us the hope of glory. Our heaven there will be more blessed than we are permitted to have here, because it will be in a better world, where all the conditions are more favorable to happiness, and not because the spiritual elements of it are different. What we see now dimly, we shall then see clearly. But if we have a well grounded hope of the heaven "beyond the flood," we already have in our souls what we will have there. If, therefore, we would calculate our chances for heaven hereafter, we must take an inventory of our present spiritual possessions and see if we have heaven in our souls now.

NO USE.

Christian at Work:

There is no use in putting up the motto, "God bless our home," if the father is a rough old bear, and the spirit of discourtesy and rudeness is taught by the parents to the children, and by the older to the younger. There is no use in putting up a motto, "The Lord will provide," while the father is shiftless, the mother is shiftless, the boys refuse to work, and the girls busy themselves over gewgaws and finery. There is no use in putting up the motto, "The greatest of these is Charity," while the tongue of the backbiter wags in that family, and silly gossip is dispensed at the tea table. There is no use in placing up conspicuously the motto, "The liberal man deviseth liberal things," while the money chinks in the pockets of "the head of the household," groaning to get out to see the light of day, and there are dollars and dimes for wines and tobacco and other luxuries, but positively not one cent for the Church. In how many homes are these mottoes standing—let us say hanging—sarcasms, which serve only to point a jest and adorn a satire? The beauty of quiet lives, of trustful, hopeful, free handed, free hearted, charitable lives, is one of surpassing loveliness, and those lives shed their own incomparable fragrance, and the world knows where to find them. And they shall remain fresh and fadeless when the colors of the pigment and the worsted and the floss have faded, and the very frames have rotted away in their joints.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

SOUTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Address Rev. Jerry Witherspoon for the remainder of the summer at Esculapia Springs, Lewis county, Ky.

Saltillo church, in Presbytery of the Western District, is supplied by Mr. J. A. Creighton, of the middle class, Princeton.

Rev. T. M. McConnell, of Westminster church, Nashville, Tenn., is recreating among the people of his old charge at McMinnville.

Rev D. F. Smith has resigned the charge of New Providence church, Holston Presbytery, and his labors there will cease after August 10th. He will take charge of the Masonic High School, Newport, Tenn. Correspondents please note.—Christian Observer.

Rev. J. H. Morrison, recently of Owingville, Ky., has charge of Portland Avenue church, Louisville, Ky. Since May 1st, therehave been twenty-four additions, of which two by letter and three by profession have been very recent. We get the points from the Christian Observer.

A friend in Newberry county writes us: "Eight communicants were added to Smyrna church, in Newberry county, S. C., on profession of faith, during the communion meeting from the 19th to the 23d July. Seven of the eight were quite young—six were 'children of the covenant,' and one was an olderly lady. The Rev. C. B. Stewart assisted, and preached with earnestness."—Southern Presbyterian.

The friends of Rev. D. W. Fisher, formerly pastor of the Thalia Street Presbyterian church, of New Orleans, will be pleased to see that he has been elected to the Presidency of Hanover College, in place of Dr. Heckman, resigned. We have no doubt that, both as a scholar and competent presiding officer, Dr. Fisher will do credit to the position.—South Western Presbyterian.

Rev. C. H. Dobb, of Prairie View, Texas, writes to the Christian Observer: We have had our communion Sabbath, and on Sabbath evening I found such a deep interest I protracted the services. On Thursday Mr. King came down and preached three powerful sermons; the meeting continued morning and night for nine days, and resulted in eighteen additions and twenty-five hopeful conversions; three others will probably unite with us. I had expected assistance during the entire meeting, but failed except in the service rendered by Mr. King. The membership of the little church was doubled. This exemplifies what camp-meetings may do in new countries. Two years ago there was not a Presbyterian within three miles of Prairie View; now there are thirty-six, with a good prospect of further growth. I leave tomorrow for the Belton camp-meeting.

NORTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Henry C. Foulk died at his residence at Hagerstown, Md., on the 15th ult. He was a member of the Presbytery of St. Clairsville.

A church was organized July 10th at Hoboken, eight miles from Alleghany, Pa., by the Church Extension Committee of Allegheny Presbytery.

Jefferson Park Presbyterian church of Chicago has called Prof. F. L. Patton to the pastorate with a salary of $3,000. He has been stated supply heretofore.

Rev. W. C. Young of Chicago has become pastor of the Central Presbyterian church, Louisville, Ky. This is the portion of the First Presbyterian church of Louisville that adhered to Rev. Dr. S. R. Wilson.

Bethany Presbyterian church, Philadelphia, which is so much indebted to Mr. John Wannamaker for its prosperity, has called Rev. J. B. Dunn to the pastorate. Mr. Dunn has been pastor of the First Presbyterian church, Boston, and the work there has prospered under his ministrations.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Dr. John S. Easton, a well known and greatly beloved minister of the United Presbyterian Church, died on the 25th ult.

LUTHERAN.

Forty years ago there were only a few scattered Lutherans west of Ohio; now there are 1,102 ministers, 3,001 churches, 367,180 communicants.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. T. W. Jones of Ticonderoga, N. Y., through the surrender of claims and by cash collections, has raised recently for the church $6,500, which will save the church building.

The Rev. Robert Kirk, for three years active pastor of the Congregational church at Springfield, Dakota, after allowing the Episcopalians to step in at the eleventh hour and build a chapel with the money that had been subscribed for a Congregational church, has himself joined the Episcopalians.

The Congregational church at Torringford, Conn., during the past year has received a legacy of $500 from one of its most esteemed members, recently deceased, J. Catlin Barber, Esq., a gift of another $500 from Elias Wilcox, Esq., a long-tried friend; the present of a tower clock and the balance needed for a new and heavier bell from Hon. Robbins Battell of Norfolk and New York; a new carpet from the ladies of the congregation, and an accession of seventeen to the membership.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

Last summer a Methodist house of worship, which came into possession of a churchman by sheriff's sale, was given to Christ Protestant Episcopal church, Danville, Pa. It was beautifully fitted up, and consecrated in November last.

The Rt. Rev. Dr. Huntington, Bishop of Central New York, has just completed ten years of Episcopal authority. In that time the churches of his diocese have contributed $110,826 96 through missionary boxes, $300,213 58 for other diocesan objects, and $103,852 21 for general church purposes. The Bishop has confirmed 9,685 persons, and laid the corner-stones of 29 churches and chapels.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

There are 3,400 members in the three Reformed Presbyteries of the East, 2,300 in the three Presbyteries of the West—5,700 in all.

METHODIST.

The Methodist Episcopal church at Port Huron, Mich., was damaged to the amount of ten thousand dollars by a recent storm.

The New England Methodist Conference has requested the New York book agents to suppress a little work which they recently have published called, "What Shall I Read?"

Bishop Peck has pledged his whole estate for Syracuse University, and has his life insured for an amount sufficient to complete the endowment of a professorship in that institution.

BAPTIST.

The Baptists of Ann Arbor, Mich., have decided to build a new church at a cost of eighteen thousand dollars.

A council met at Milton, N. J., July 15th, and recognized the reorganization of a Baptist church that had an existence there some fifty years ago, but had long since lost it. Through Rev. Conrad Vreeland's labors the church has been reorganized.

DEATH OF MR. T. W. PLAYER.

Mr. Thomas Wright Player died in the morning of the 1st inst. at his home in Wilmington, N. C. He was sixty-five years of age. Mr. Player was born in New Hanover (now Pender) county, N. C., and there spent his early life; the past thirty years, or nearly so, were spent in this city. He was an officer in a company of cavalry during the war and sustained the reputation of a good soldier. At his death he was a member of the Board of Audit and Finance of the city of Wilmington. In early manhood he confessed Christ and united with Hopewell Presbyterian church. For more than twenty-five years last past, as a member of the First Presbyterian church of Wilmington, and since February, 1868, as one of its deacons, he was found faithful.

His distinguishing trait of character was conscientious adhesion to principle at any sacrifice to self; the notable trait of disposition, was that love that found its natural manifestation and its delight in relieving distress and in conferring pleasure. Firm as a rock, as for himself, when he could say "It is right," he was singularly tolerant of the opinions of those who differed from him. Doing good from the love of it, he did not await the calls of charity; he sought them. Never half in earnest in anything, when he became a Christian he was Christ's, and Christ was his. Religion was not a sentiment with him, it was a principle—not to be professed only, but to be lived.

Life's work well done, he reaps the rich reward.

Professor Stephen Frontis has taken charge of the local department of the Iredell Gazette. The paper is now in charge of two gentlemen fully competent to provide for the wants of its readers, and we trust it will be well patronized.

Messrs Frontis and Leazar, assisted by teachers of experience and ability, will reopen their school at Mooresville at the 18th inst. The school is now in its fourth year. They prepare boys for college and girls for the higher classes in any of the schools for young ladies.

We learn from Mebaneville that the Bingham School opened on the 30th stronger than ever before in the 85 years of its history. There were 85 cadets for duty the first day, and there are now over 100 names on the roll. It gives us pleasure as North Carolinians to note the fact that this school is prospering. It claims to be ahead of any similar enterprise south of the Potomac. 1879 will be the best year in the history of the school.

DEATH OF COL. B. F. LITTLE.—Col. B. F. Little died at his home, in Richmond county, on Saturday, July 26th.

He possessed in large measure those traits of character and disposition which endear one to those privileged with intimacy, and command the respect of those not so favored. His modesty was exceeded only by his worth, and he declined those positions of political prominence to which his talents entitled him, and to which, through his popularity he might have been elevated. An humble Christian gentleman, open-handed to every call of charity, he will be greatly missed by the Church.

SECULAR NEWS.

A decree has been issued at Rome, imposing a quarantine on vessels from the United States because of the prevalence of yellow fever in this country.

The cholera prevails in the South of the Japanese Empire, and a strict quarantine has been ordered for Yokohoma. The American Minister has ordered Americans to comply with the regulations. The British Minister asserts the right to break the quarantine, and the German Minister supports him. All other diplomatic representatives are indifferent, except the Russian Minister, who sides with the United States Minister.

The death rate at Memphis shows a decrease for last week over the week previous. Physicians are sanguine that the maximum death rate has been reached, and a decrease in the number of deaths may be expected. The deaths from yellow fever by the last weekly report were 26—the week previous 34.

LATEST.—Fifteen new cases reported August 4th. Rev. —— Boyle, the Roman Catholic priest, died from a relapse.

From all sections comes the glad news that corn and cotton crops are not damaged by the drought to the extent that was feared.

Mr. J. G. Cox, living near Morven in Anson county, has recently discovered some fine specimens of anthracite coal on his farm. So says the Monroe Enquirer.

Silk culture receives some attention in North Carolina. The North Carolina Farmer says: E. Fasnach, Esq., of Raleigh, reports that notwithstanding the bad and cold weather during the past spring, silk culture has proved a success. He has on hand about 200 pounds of cocoon, ready for the silk market, and over 2,000,000 of eggs. And the Goldsboro Messenger says: Dr. B. F. Arrington, of Goldsboro, is going into the cultivation of the silk worm on a large scale, and this fall will plant an orchard of fifty or seventy-five acres in mulberry trees, upon which he will rear the worms.

A Wise Deacon.

"Deacon Wilder, I want you to tell me how you kept yourself and family so well the past season, when all the rest of us have been sick so much, and have had the doctors running to us so long."

"Bro. Taylor, the answer is very easy. I used Hop Bitters in time and kept my family well and saved large doctor bills. Three dollars' worth of it kept us all well and able to work all the time, and I will warrant it has cost you and most of the neighbors one to two hundred dollars apiece to keep sick the same time. I guess you'll take my medicine hereafter." See other column.

A VIRGINIA LADY, WITH SEVERAL YEARS experience in teaching, desires a situation in some pleasant family or school, for the next scholastic year. References exchanged. Address,

TEACHER, County Line Cross Roads,
Charlotte Co., Virginia.

Charlotte Institute.

THE next session begins September 10th, 1879, and ends June 8th, 1880.

No Institute ever made more rapid progress in securing the confidence and esteem of its patrons than this one during the past session. Before the end of the scholastic year the number of its pupils, attracted by the well-earned reputation of the school, increased to 117, exclusive of the adult ladies who availed themselves of the superior advantages here given in the departments of Music, Art, and Modern Languages. In no respect is this Institute inferior to any other first-class boarding-school in the Southern or Middle States. Such testimonials as will satisfy an one as to the high standard and thoroughness of the instruction here are published in the catalogue. These testimonials are peculiarly trustworthy, inasmuch as they are given by gentlemen engaged in teaching in well known schools and colleges of the highest grade, and who are therefore qualified to express an opinion in regard to educational institutions.

The total expense for the half session or term will be $125. This amount includes board, with washing, fuel, lights, furnished room and servants' attendance, tuition in all the English branches, Latin, with either French or German, Calisthenics, text-books and stationery for school purposes. Pupils are not permitted to incur additional expense without permission of their parents. Parents are thus assured that their bills will not be greater than they expected.

Special arrangements and special terms for young ladies who wish to take only Music, Painting and Drawing, and Modern Languages, severally or collectively.

THE BUFFALO LITHIA WATERS,

For Malarial Poisoning, Especially Hepatic Diseases and Malarial Fevers.

Testimony of Distinguished Medical Men:

MALARIOUS FEVERS.

Extract from Letter of Dr. Wm. T. Howard, of Baltimore, Professor of Diseases of Women and Children in the University of Maryland, of August 1st, 1873.

Dr. Howard compares these waters with those of the celebrated Greenbrier White Sulphur, West Virginia, and adds the following:

The Greenbriar White Sulphur Waters will be recognized by all informed upon such subjects as one of the most noted Mineral Fountains of the World.

"Indeed, in a certain class of cases, it is much superior to the latter. I allude to the abiding debility attendant upon the tardy convalescence from grave acute diseases: and more especially to the cachexia and sequels incident to MALARIOUS FEVERS IN ALL THEIR GRADES AND VARIETIES."

* * * * * * In short, were I called upon to state from what mineral waters I have seen the greatest and most unmistakable amount of good accrue in the largest number of cases in a general way, I would unhesitatingly say the BUFFALO SPRINGS, in Mecklenburg county, Virginia."

Extract from Letter of the late Dr. Thos. P. Atkinson, of Danville, Va., Ex-President State Medical Society, dated August 15th, 1874.

"The Buffalo Lithia Waters have unquestionably displayed great power in the peculiar diseases of the warm, miasmatic regions of the South, which may be grouped together under the general head of Malarial Cachexia, covering Hepatic Engorgements, Enlargements of the Spleen, Jaundice, &c."

"It is not pretended that these Waters possess any anti-periodic properties, such as belong to Quinine—At the same time, however, it is unquestionably true, that in the intermittent and remittent fevers in a chronic form, they have in numerous instances, given relief in cases which had obstinately resisted all the anti-periodic drugs of the shops. From my experience with them, I feel fully warranted in saying that, with rare exceptions, whenever disease is found originating under malarial influence, a potent remedy may be found in this water."

Extract from a Letter of Dr. John C. Coleman, of Halifax county, Va., (prior to the War a surgeon of the U. S. Navy, now retired) dated near Scottsburg, Va., January 1st, 1879.

"Perhaps no claim made for the Buffalo Lithia Waters is more thoroughly established than that they are a powerful antidote to malarial poison in all its forms and varieties. In that large class of disorders, included in term Malarial Cachexia, embracing Engorgement of the Liver and Spleen, Jaundice, Indigestion, Dropsies and Neuralgias, of which the warm malarious districts of the South are so prolific, the action of these waters as a general rule is most decided and happy, and oftentimes astonishing. In Chronic Intermittent and Remittent Fevers, they are especially efficacious. I presume there is no season at these Springs in which some cases of this character do not find relief from these Waters, which have before baffled the healing art."

Extract from Letter of Dr. Alfred Plumber, of Manson, N. C., dated March 16, 1874.

"I have known the Buffalo Springs of Mecklenburg county, Va., for twenty-five years, and have sent many patients to them. In Chronic Intermittent and Remittent Fever, and in all diseases originating in malarial poison, I have found their action almost that of a charm. I have sent young ladies to these Springs so enfeebled from this influence as to be scarcely able to walk across a floor, and in a few weeks they would become so invigorated as to be able to dance half of every night."

These springs open for guests the 1st day of June. The water in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, $5.00 per case at the springs. Springs pamphlets sent to any address.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Speak Softly.

Speak softly, gently ever!
There is no wiser part;
For harsh words pierce like steel
The yearning, loving heart.
As gems reflect in brightness
Every flitting beam,
Let words reflect in kindness
Love's sunny, love-lit gleam.

Speak softly, gently ever;
There is no better plan—
For angry words can never Effect what kind ones can.
For, oh! a soft word spoken
May move the stubborn soul,
That still would prove defiant
Should words of thunder roll.

Speak softly, gently ever!
Words breathing naught save love!
And soon our blighted Eden
Will bloom as realms above!
For faith and fond affection
In true-love knot entwined,
With firmer cords than tempered steel
Each happy heart can bind.

Disobedience Punished.

Robert Carter and Walter Kingdon were friends as well as school-fellows, and their friendship for each other often led them into difficulties. Walter, a good tempered boy with an open, truthful disposition, was the eldest son of John Kingdon, one of the coastguard men stationed at Staddon on the Devonshire coast. He had one brother, Lewis, a small boy of ten, who was his constant companion, following him about like his shadow.

Robert Carter's character will be seen from the following narrative: He had not lived long at Staddon, but had come with his father and mother some three months before the events we we have to record. As the fathers of Robert and Walter followed the same calling, it was natural for the two boys to be much together; but poor little Lewis found a vast difference since his brother had taken up with his new friend. The two boys were always whispering together, and would cease their conversation when he came near, making him very uncomfortable.

Mrs. Kingdon did not notice their behavior, and John, being a good deal from home, knew very little of Robert, who was always very plausible and quiet in the presence of his elders. One evening a visitor came to the Kingdon's little white cottage on the cliff. This was an Irishman, named Brian Molloy, who had known John when on a coastguard station on the west coast of Ireland, not far from the cliffs of Moher, which in some places are seven hundred feet high.

The two old friends sat on the bench beside the cottage door for hours that evening, looking out to sea, and talking of the excursions they had made together in the old days; and at length the conversation turned upon bird-nesting, which had been Brian's occupation in his youth before the act of Parliament for the protection of small birds had been passed. Walter and Lewis listened open mouthed to Molloy's tales of hair-breadth escapes. How he used to be let down over the cliff by a rope, and would creep about from ledge to ledge of the perpendicular rocks, taking the young ones from the nests, gulls, puffins and curlews; then at a given signal the men above would haul in the rope, and he would rise to the top of the cliff again.

"And what did you do with the birds," questioned Walter, eagerly; "did you eat them?"

"Sure no, my jewel," replied the Irishman, "we just boiled them down for the sake of the oil. Faith, it was foine pleasure to be down there on the rocks with the say below and the blue sky above ye, and tame it was when one got onto firm ground again. I'd do it again if the Government would let me; for it's dull work tendin' horses, which is what I've done for livin' iver since."

After this the conversation changed to other subjects, and Molloy told his friend how he had come to Plymouth to see his old mother, who lived there with a married daughter; and how he had found out quite by accident that his old friend was in the neighborhood. The boys, no longer interested, ran off to play and talk over the wonderful tales they had heard.

Carter and the two Kingdons went to school at Turnchapel, a small village about a mile and a quarter from their own little Cove. On the Saturday follow the Irishman's visit, it being a whole holiday, Bob came running into the Kingdons' cottage to fetch Walter for a ramble on the cliffs.

"Can I go mother?" asked Walter.

"Yes, Wattie; but you must take Lewis too, for I want to clean up to-day; so you shall take your dinner with you, and you may bring Bob back to tea at five if you like. Take care of your brother, and don't go to the part where the cliff is breaking away, mind; your father says it is very unsafe there."

"All right, mother," he replied, and the three boys started off together. For sometime the amused themselves on the soft turf, but after they had eaten their dinner they played at marbles and leapfrog till they were tired of both, and now sat under a big rock and talked of all they meant to do when they should be grown up. At length Walter said:

"I do like that Brian Molloy, father's Irish friend; he is so brave. Only fancy, Bob, being let over the cliffs by a rope as he was."

"Well," said Robert, "I don't see much in that; you see he was used to it all his life."

"But he must have begun some time," said little Lewis; "he wasn't always a man, you know."

"You shut up, youngster," was Bob's curt reply, "and don't try to teach those older than yourself."

Lewis said no more; he was getting used to Bob's rough speeches, and his brother did not take his part as he had done a while ago. By and by Carter spoke again:

"I say, Wattie."

"Well," said Walter.

"Let's go and look for a gull's nest."

"All right. Come on, Lewis. I hope we shall find one; but it's hard to get at them—they build so far down."

The boys now walked along the verge of the cliff, peering far down, but for sometime nothing but clumps of samphire and bunches of sea-pink were to be seen. At length, however, a shout from Bob, who was in advance, brought the others to his side.

"There—there—don't you see," he cried excitedly; "down there, on that ledge of rock among the tall grass—can't you see two young birds? Look! they're opening their beaks. Oh! if we could only get them before the old bird comes back."

"Well, we can't," said Walter, quickly; "there isn't a hole to put your foot in, and it's too far to reach over. No one but Brian Molloy with his rope could get that nest."

"You're afraid," said Bob with a sneer. He was by no means courageous himself, but he always talked as if he were.

"No, I'm not afraid, Bob, but I can't get that nest without a rope, if you can; why don't you get it yourself?"

But that was not what Carter wanted. He had made up his mind to have the nest, and meant to make Walter a cat's-paw. He unfolded his plan. Walter was to lie down on his chest and lean over the edge; Bob was to hold him fast by the legs, and Lewis to clutch hold of Bob.

"Oh, Bob!" said Lewis, quickly, "I'm sure father and mother would not like us to do it. Suppose Wattie should fall over! You know mother said we were not to go to the loose part of the cliff."

"You hold your tongue, little stupid," said Bob, "and don't preach. I'm not wanting to go to the loose part, am I? It's a good half-mile from here; you do as you're bid, and you won't be blamed."

Poor little Lewis felt very sad as his brother took off his jacket, flung himself on his face, and crawled to the edge of the cliff; but he held on to Bob with all his might, determined to do his best to support his brother. But Walter's arms were not long enough to reach the nest, though he could see the young birds just below his hand. He stretched over still further, and then a cry burst from Robert's lips, for he found that the grass was giving way under him. Walter was too far overbalanced to save himself, and, to the horor of Lewis, both boys went over the edge, and fell crashing down, uttering piercing cries for help. Lewis only just escaped by throwing himself full length on the ground, where he lay and trembled; but he soon crawled to the edge and looked over. Both nest and boys had disappeared; there was not a sign of the accident except the ledge covered with red earth where the young birds had been, and a bare spot on the top where the turf had given way under Carter's weight. With trembling limbs Lewis ran home to tell the dreadful news, and soon the fathers of the missing boys were on the spot with ropes, followed by the womenkind shuddering and crying. It seemed all too dreadful to be credited.

Then followed a time of anxious suspense. John Kingdon was lowered by a rope down the face of the cliff, and brought up first one boy, then the other—both insensible, scratched and bruised. A doctor had been sen for, and soon came, when Walter and Robert were taken home on stretchers. Walter's injuries were not serious, as he had not fallen very far. His father found him on a grassy ledge of rock; but the doctor pronounced that Carter would be a cripple for life. Poor boy! his punishment was indeed hard; and often on his sick bed he wished he had never coveted the bird's nest, but had been content to leave the young sea gulls in their rocky home. Walter doesn't care to go bird's-nesting now, and Lewis never goes to the edge of the cliffs; the shock was so great that the poor boy has never gotten over it, though now almost fifteen.—British Juvenile.

The Drummer Boy.

It was on the morning of September 21, 1863. Few rising suns ever shone upon a more terrible scene than that presented this morning on the battle-field of Chickamauga. The forms of hundreds of brave men lay cold and silent in death, remaining as they had fallen in the heat of the conflict, while bravely fighting. The silence of death brooded over the field, and death indeed was there in all its terror—silence rendered doubly so by the closing echoes of the terrible carnage of the past two days. The wounded had been cared for as far as possible, and now was consigned to the survivors the solemn duty of laying to rest the last remains of their beloved comrades. There lay husbands, fathers, brothers, with no one to shed a parting tear except their sturdy companions in many a weary day of toil and bloodshed.

Suddenly there rang out upon the scene of stillness the sound of a drum, long and loud, rolled out the morning reveille, startling both men and officers, coming as it did, from the midst of where all was thougt to be silent in death. The surgeon was sent to investigate. Far out among the dead he found a little drummer boy. Pale as the silent bodies around him he lay resting wearily upon his drum. The surgeon saw at a glance that all would soon be over. Both legs had been broken by a shell, and from the mangled limbs the current of life was fast ebbing away. Strong man that he was, and used to death in all its various forms, he could not tell the boy that his sufferings would shortly end, and he turned away. Going back he requested an officer to go and break the news. The officer went to the boy, and placing his hand softly upon his shoulder said: "My boy, you are badly wounded, but you will be better soon." "I know it," answered the boy; "all night long I have lain, and God only knows my sufferings through the long weary hours; but I prayed that He would let me live to see the morning sun, that I might once more beat the reveille to summons the men to duty as I have so often done before, and He has answered my prayer."

"God is very merciful; kindly answered the officer.

He is always good," said the boy," "but I know what you mean by my being better soon. I am going to die, but I am not afraid of death."

"You are a brave boy," said the officer, "but why are you not afraid to die? The boy placed his little trembling hand in his bossom and drew forth a small pocket Bible. "My mother gave me this when I left home," he answered. "She told me to read it every day, and I have done so. I know that Jesus is waiting with open arms to receive me. That is why I am not afraid to die. I want you to carry it to her, and tell her that I have obeyed her, and that I die without fear, only sorry that I could not once more see her dear face and hear her kind, loving voice." Oh, the Bible! precious book divine! Would to God that all mankind from it would learn Thy holy will, and enjoy Thy blessed promises.

The Largest Farm.

The largest cultivated wheat farm on the globe is said to be the Grondin farm, not far from the town of Fargo, Dakota. It embraces some 40,000 acres, both government and railway land, and lies close to the Red river. Divided into four parts, it has dwellings, granaries, machine shops, elevators, stables for two hundred horses, and room for storing 1,000,000 bushels of grain. Besides the wheat farm, there is a stock farm of 20,000 acres. In seeding time 70 to 80 men are employed, and during harvest 250 to 300 men. Seeding begins about April 9th and continues through the month, and is done very systematically, the machines following one another around the field, some four rods apart. Cutting begins about August 8th, and ends the fore part of September, succeeded by the thrashing, with eight steam thrashers.—Banner.

The Sea-Spider or Decorating Crab

(Libinca canaliculata).—Of all the crab tribe, this is surely the most fantastic little fellow, and ought to be considered the "missing link" which unites the animal creation to the human, for he has certainly one of the first instincts of civilization, namely, that of attempting to cover himself with extraneous and ornamental garments. He is the dandy of the sea. Bits of sea-weed are his principal reliance, but small objects of almost any kind he will appropriate, even to pieces of stone or wood. One of mine showed considerable taste and an idea of style, preferring always the most gaudy colors which he could find in the tank. These animals will spend hours every day at their toilet, appropriating with their hand-like claws bits of seaweed, Sertularia, sponge, or Tubularia. One will perhaps place a bit on the tip of his nose, or suspend from it a long, ribbon-like strip of red or green algæ, or affix similar fragments to his legs, elbows, or knees, as we may call them. He does not appear to take these pieces at random, but has the air of selecting them with care, and then leisurly cutting them off from the large fronds with his own nippers, of which he has two pairs, one upon each of his two foremost arms. Having severed the desired portion, he takes it up in one of his hands (for his nippers serve for hands as well as shears), and, placing one end of it in his mouth, evidently deposits upon it a species of mucus or marine cement, which secures the object in the position in which his lordship sees fit to arrange it, and in which matter he is somewhat fastidious. This mucus must have great strength, for in his native element he will walk about thus arrayed, without any danger of his ornaments being washed away even by the rolling surf. In the tank, when his toilet is completed, he will advance to the front or most conspicuous spot he can find and as near to the spectator as he can conveniently get, with a self-satisfied air, as much as to say: "I'm in full dress now; how do you like my style?" I have also had some of these "decorators" who showed a sort of paternal affection for the young actiniæ, each seeming to take a particular pride in placing them, sometimes five or six at once, upon his back, among the bits of algæ already there, and then parading round as if bound to give his pets a free ride.

At certain periods, like all crustaceans, this spider-crab becomes too large for its shelly covering, and is obliged to move out, or rather its house is moved away from it. This is effected by a rupture of the tissue connecting the upper and lower carapace, near the hinder part. The body is first slipped out through this opening, then Mr. Crab slowly draws out his arms, one after the other, just as a man would withdraw his from his coat, and so proceeds until the ten arms are all freed. Its old habitation is left perhaps on a rock, or hanging to a sea-weed, and the most practised eye might be deceived and take it for a living crab.—Ocean Wonders.

A Prince Chastised.

Nearly twenty years ago, while Queen Victoria was staying at her summer residence in Balmoral, Scotland, her son Alfred, twelve years old, now Duke of Edinburgh, strayed from the castle and missed his way home. Meeting a stout boy, with a basket of cockles (a kind of shell-fish) on his head, he hailed him.

The lad paid no attention to him. The young prince shouted again, but the sturdy fish-boy merely looked and walked on. Possibly he resented the rather peremptory tone in which he was called.

The prince for his part, was used to being obeyed by peasant boys, and the rudeness or stupidity of this one made him angry, and he repeated his command in a still fiercer tone.

"Here, you fellow, show me the way to the castle, I say!"

"I dinna kin't," said the boy, still walking on.

"Tell me, or I'll knock your basket off your head!" screamed the prince.

"Na, ye winna," said the boy coolly.

At that the young prince ran after him in a rage, and with a spiteful blow sent the basket tumbling to the ground, scattering the cockles in the dirt.

Then there was a scuffle, and the fish-boy soon punished the prince so smartly that he was glad to break away and run.

It happened that one of the royal attendants, who had been sent in search of the missing prince, caught a glimpse of the fight and ran to the rescue.

Of course, the young peasant had committed a serious offence in daring to strike a member of the royal family. He was collared, and led to the castle, sobbing with fright, but stoutly pleading his cause. He protested that he did not know "wha the gentleman was," which was undoubtedly true. He was simply resenting the loss of the fish.

Before they reached the castle Alfred exhibited a generosity worthy of his high birth. A little reflection had shown him the right of the matter.

"I was the one to blame," he said. "Let the boy go."

The attendant, however, had no idea of letting the boy go. He should give account to the Queen, and she must say what was to be done with the fellow who had assaulted her son.

The little Scot fairly quaked with alarm when he found himself shut up in an ante-room of the castle awaiting his sentence. Alfred, however, had been the first to see the Queen, and he told her the whole truth about the encounter, taking the fault entirely to himself.

Soon one of the Queen's chaplain's quietly entered the ante-room, and kindly asked the fish-boy his name, and residence, and occupation, and talked to him in such a gentle, assuring way that his fears were quite soothed.

Then the chaplain made him tell the whole story of his difficulty with the young prince, and when this was done, he smiled and told him that the Queen had said he was to be taken into another room to eat a nice supper.

Half an hour afterwards the same clergymen came again, and informed the now delighted boy that Her Majesty regretted the damage done him, and had sent him five shillings to pay for his loss and delay.

The happy boy scampered home with his money, not forgetting to gather up his basket of cockles on the way. His mother, who was a widow and poor, was as much pleased as himself; but the joy and pride of both were vastly increased when next day a messenger came from the kind-hearted Queen to make further inquiries and offer friendly aid. The result was a fortune indeed to poor young Donald, for the royal bounty sent him to school, and finally apprenticed him to a profitable trade.—Youth's Companion.

SECULAR NEWS.

In Richmond, Va., on 30th inst., a memorial service, under Roman Catholic auspices, of course, took place in honor of the late Prince Imperial. There was great display.

The yellow fever continues its deadly march, though manifestly less panic prevails either in Memphis or elsewhere. Louisville, Ky., is quarantining this year. Cairo observes special precautions, and so does Chattanooga. From Granada there is said to be an exodus, and one can scarcely wonder at it in view of the terrible past.

Factory Facts.

Close confinement, careful attention to all factory work, gives the operatives pallid faces, poor appetite, languid, miserable feeling, poor blood, inactive liver, kidneys and urinary troubles, and all the physicians and medicine in the world cannot help them unless they get out doors or use Hop Bitters, made of the purest and best of remedies, and especially for such cases, having abundance of health, sunshine and rosy cheeks in them. None need suffer if the if they will use them freely. They cost but a trifle. See another column.

THE GENUINE
DR. C. McLANE'S
CELEBRATED
LIVER PILLS,
FOR THE CURE OF
Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint;
DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER!

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventative for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. They were used during last season in New Orleans very successfully. The common method of using them was to apply them over the stomach, changing them every week. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS and seem to destroy the poison. One reason why they are of special value is that they stimulate the digestion, and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison. They are a cheap and almost certain preventative. Ask your physician about them. Benson's Capcine Plasters are a sure preventative and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price 25 cents.

Rev. L. C. Vass, Newbern, N. C.:

REVEREND AND DEAR BROTHER: Considerable delay has occurred in complying with your request. This has been due to two incidents, very frequently occurring in the experience of travellers: The change of postoffice address some four or five times in two months of absence from home, and the separation from baggage. No need for this explanation would be due, but for the announcement of the editor of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, some weeks since, that this series of papers on "Commentaries on the Bible," might be expected very soon. If any apology is due for the liberty used, in addressing these papers to you, it is readily found in the fact that the preparation and publication of them is due to your request; and farther, that the attention of the readers of the PRESBYTERIAN will be, most probably, better called to the subject in view of the properly high regard in which you are held by them, especially by the younger ministers of your synod.

A few preliminary statements and explanations are in order.

The writer begs, in the outset, to disclaim all pretentions to dictate or authoritatively advise, respecting the work introduced or presented, (though already known) to the attention of readers. The ability to give advice in such matters is far below the measure, which opportunity might be presumed to justify. Farther, few need to be reminded, that no one of common prudence, undertaking to recommend commentaries, is to be held responsible for all the views presented in such works, whether critical, expository or homiletic. Commentaries hold no higher position than that of helps to the right study of the word of God.

Commentaries may be divided as to purpose and plan, into:

1. Critical interpretations of the Text, involving all that relates to the integrity of text, grammatical and logical interpretations—the meaning of words as deduced from etymology, usage, scope and context and the structure of sentences; furnishing the ground for sustaining or correcting our authorized version of the original language of the scriptures; and their right exposition as teaching what we are to believe concerning God, and what duty God requires of man.

2. Expository comments, whether based on critical, which are not at all or not fully presented, but giving the author's views of the meaning of God's word, as it appears in our version.

3. Homiletic or practical application of the truths set forth in Scripture as the rules of faith and practice. To this latter class are to be assigned all works which are in the form of lectures on portions of Scripture whether in order or by selections. In a wide sense many sermons, especially such as those of Davies, or some of Ryle's works, may be embraced in this class. In some commentaries we find specimens of all these kinds of exposition. Others are confined mostly to one kind. Then farther, we have commentaries on the whole Bible, or on the larger part of it—on the Old Testament entire or nearly such. On the New Testament entire; and some on parts of the Old and others on parts of the New.

COMMENTARIES ON THE WHOLE BIBLE—OR NEARLY ALL.

1. "The Assembly's Annotations."—This work was not issued, as many suppose, under the orders or authority or auspices of the venerable "Westminster Assembly of Divines." It was, however, the production of authors, some of whom were members of that body and all more or less disposed to sustain the current expositions of Scripture which underlay the theology of those eminent in that day, for their attachment to evangelical sentiments. But the work, though still in print, has been so far suspended by later, fuller and more carefully prepared while equally sound works, that the possession of it is not specially important, except as it presents an element in the history of Biblical study, and especially of the development of the doctrinal views formulated in the church synods of the century and a half succeeding the era of the Reformation.

2. Clark's Commentary. Dr. Adam Clark needs no introduction to the literary or theological world. He was doubtless a man of varied and extensive learning though information would be a better term. His judgment is not trustworthy, however. On matters generally accepted as decided, he has a peculiar proclivity to set forth something new, and often strange. It may be well said of him as has often been said of others, rather celebrated for novelty than soundness, "his new views were seldom true, and his true views as seldom new." He is well known as the most eminent expositor of the whole Bible, of decided Arminian affinities, if not convictions. For such as can afford the expense, it is well to own Clark's commentary, if for no other purpose than to see what has been said "on the other side."

3. John Calvin.—With the exception of the book of "Revelation" and a few books of the Old Testament, Calvin has left a most extended as well as learned exposition of the whole Bible. Had he never written his Institutes, his letters on numerous extended tracts, controversial and didactic—in short, had he left only this commentary, we might justly have been filled with admiration that such a work had been prepared by one who died at fifty-four years of age. His life was one of sufficient activity and his occupation in the "care of all the churches" one of sufficient labor and responsibility, to have released him from the duties of the student's chair without the necessity of an apology by him, or a criticism by others for indolence. The more composition and mechanical work of writing fills us with astonishment, and yet his work is not superficial—not pages of verbiage to express one or two ideas—nor one filled with quotations from authors never read, and the margins of the pages crowded with pedantic display of learning. He deals but little in minute criticism, but when he undertakes this style of comment we are satisfied by the result reached that his processes were sound. It must be remembered that in his day the critical apparatus for the Biblical scholar was comparatively meagre. Calvin has but little to say of authorities, but he understood the Bible in the original laugnages, and his sound judgment and powerful faculties of clear reasoning, led him to a soundness of criticism really equalled, perhaps never excelled, by those of modern days whose lives have been spent amidst libraries of lexicons, grammars, and elaborate systems of hermeneutics. His well-known principles of theology are by no means concealed in his commentaries, and those which have survived all the conflicts of opponents, the misrepresentations of the uncandid and misstatements alike of friends and foes, are set forth in his commentaries as the clear expositions of the Scriptnre, divested of the technicalities as well as the metaphysics of the day, which might excite prejudice or elicit opposition. Thus that constant reverence for Scripture which he taught in his celebrated saying, "When God hath shut His holy month let all men be silent," at once led him to avoid, alike rash speculation and positive dogma, and taught his readers to "receive with meekness" the pure word of God, clearly and solemnly set forth.

To those who may have read the quotations from an article in the Southern Presbyterian Review of April, 1876, given in an editorial of the PRESBYTERIAN of July 2nd, it is not necessary to add anything farther respecting Calvin as a commentator. It may, however, be stated that Dr. Tholuck honored himself and gave an excellent impulse to the right study of the Scriptnre, by editing an edition of Calvin on Psalms, and on the New Testament about forty-five years ago, and we have now, his entire commentaries accessible in an excellent translation into English under the auspices of T. & T. Clark, of Edinburgh. Those who are not prepared to purchase the whole, can procure such parts of the work as they desire. To the scholar familiar with the Latin the volume above noticed, edited by Dr. Tholuck will be acceptable, and may now perhaps be had at cheaper rates than the same parts of the work as translated into English. The Latin has been pronounced as almost as pure as that of the Augustan age. Those who prefer the English translation will do well to procure the commentaries on the New Testament and that on the Psalms, if they are unable to purchase others. Calvin's views of the principle of interpretation of the Messianic Psalms partake very much of the peculiarities of others of the period in which he lived, and doubtless greatly influenced those who have made those Psalms subjects of special study for nearly three centuries since. They belong to that kind of interpretation which recognize some sort of double sense in the language of the inspired penmen; that is, that while the writers predicted, primarily, the charactor, fortunes and destiny of David or of Solomon and the church of God, under the old dispensation, they so described them as to set forth the person, character, and destinies of Christ and His church under the New Testament dispensation. While there are doubtless many prophecies, both in the Psalms and other writings in the Old Testament, which are typical prophecies, setting forth by predictions what pertains to types of our Lord and His church, thus involving the great truths, ultimately unfolded in the antitypes, there are doubtless others, in which we have direct statements of the great and glorious things of the "latter days," description of our Lord's person, feelings in view of His sufferings and the "glory which should follow" in His resurrection, ascension and mediatorial kingdom. With this modification, however, Calvin will be found an eminently safe guide to the right apprehension of what was "written in the Law of Moses and in the prophets and in the Psalms "concerning" "Him who was to come." The student of the Scriptnre, by the careful examination of Calvin on the Psalms and the New Testament, even should he not find means of studying his works on the prophecies, will be able to lay a good foundation for a full knowledge of the great central truths of revelation, those which set forth Jesus Christ and His salvation.

Yours truly,
B. M. SMITH.

"CONVICTION OF CONSCIENCE."

There are three ways of deciding a question of duty: by signs, by "conviction of conscience," and by law and facts. If the question were, whether I ought to go or not go on a certain journey, and I should determine some day on starting down the street to go if I met a man first, or not to go if I met a woman first—this would be the method by signs. If I felt that I ought to go and should determine therefore to go—this would be the method by "conviction of conscience." But if I studied diligently to know all the facts that had a bearing on the question and to see what course was, under the circumstances, in harmony with the law of duty, this would be the method by law and facts.

Against the second of these as a method of deciding questions of duty, some objections may well be made. In the first place, a conviction is a result of looking at reasons, and a true conviction of conscience is the state of mind which results from looking at the moral relations involved in the question about which the conviction exists. If one decides a question of duty without studying these relations, his state of mind is no more a conscience, than the image which one may form in his mind of an object without looking at the object, is a perception of sight. None but those who study to know their duty act conscientiously; for to act conscientiously is to act in conscious harmony with conviction.

Those who do not study to know their duty may act from superstition, laziness or pride. Superstition is the putting of extra human power in figments. This "conviction" to which appeal is too often made is a figment; and in it is vested an oracular power of deciding questions of duty, a power not possessed by man.

The appeal to "conscience" instead of to law and facts is the easy way of the lazy man, who therehy escapes the hard work of investigation and study.

It is also the way of the proud man. Doubtless, the longer a man walks in the path of uprightness the easier it becomes for him to decide which is the right path; and the ideally perfect conscience at once and unerringly perceives and unhesitatingly chooses the right, however complicated the question. But this quickness comes from practice in judging of right and wrong—never from neglecting to judge. It is the part of pride to take that method by which one can as easily and quickly decide as a perfect conscience by the right method.

THE ENO CHURCH.

Editor of the N. C. Presbyterian:

DEAR SIR:—In your issue of the 7th of May, and under the head of "The Eno Church," we discover some slight mistakes in the printing, which we will be very thankful if corrected in your next. In reference to the Eno and Hawfield settlements, we said The residents lived at from eight to twelve miles apart, intermarried, and were neighbors. In the eldership, Ely Lindsey, not Birdsey. In the parable, importunate for unfortunate widow. Phillips in the singular, and three Paisleys. The object of the writer in naming these old divines (of which you only gave a part) is to show how many have passed away (apparently in so short a period), who have labored in the old church more or less, some as stated supplies, others that voluntarily gave their assistance on particular occasions; all whose names we love to remember, and though dead, yet speaketh.

LAYMAN.

DESPONDING PEOPLE.

"Why art thou cast down, O my soul?" How many have echoed this question of the Psalmist! Trials come to us which we cannot shake off in a moment, and which weigh us to the ground. Sometimes they come without a note of warning, and are therefore the harder to be borne. The young soon rally. They weep, but soon they smile again, for hope is strong within them, and the future is bright with promise. It is not so with those who are in advanced years. Their powers of body and mind are failing; their earthly work is nearly done; and already the shadows of night are falling upon them. No wonder, then, if they long for rest. No wonder if, in a desponding mood, they cry, as did discouraged Elijah in the wilderness: "It is enough; now, O Lord, take away my life."

There are losses which it is hard to bear. Death enters the home unbidden and takes away a dear companion and loved one from the family circle. There is a vacant place. No more will be seen that familiar face; no more will be heard the tones of that familiar voice. There are tears which start unbidden at the memory of a great loss, which can never be replaced. The thought which David uttered when he heard that his child was dead brings a ray of comfort: "I shall go to him but he will not return to me."

But there are trials worse than those which death can bring. It was not the child which died early, but the one which lived to manhood, which brought greatest sorrow to David. The king could banish a rebellious subject from his kingdom, but the king was a father, and he could not banish the son from his heart. A living sorrow cannot be forgotten. It cannot be buried under ground. It is with us by day and in the wakeful hours of night. We may not speak freely of it, but it dwells with us and throws a shadow upon our pathway.

There are losses in business which make one despondent. Hard earnings and scanty savings are swept away. The gains of years are sunk in a day, and then must come painful self-denial and sacrifice. The house must be sold; and, in age it may be, one must begin again the struggle for a support. Then comes failing health, and the cup of sorrow seems to be full to overflowing. The brightness is taken from life; the footsore and weary pilgrim longs to reach the end of his journey.

Child of despondency,—look upward! Though clouds and darkness are round and about you, take courage. "Hope thou in God," and all will yet be well. Keep a good conscience and do the best you can, and look to the future with unshaken confidence. God cares for His own, and will forever care for them. Fear not, then, but rejoice, for the clouds will break, the darkness will scatter, and the light—even the light from heaven—will flood with noonday brightness the path in which you walk.

God lives and reigns. He who watches the flight of the sparrow and growth of the lilly watches over you. He who led His ancient people through the Red Sea and through the wilderness into the land of promise will lead you into a better land than that. "Hope thou in God." Bear your trials with a Christian spirit, and peace will come to your troubled soul. Break forth into singing as you view with the eye of faith a brighter day and a brighter home than you have known on earth.
—Methodist.

I MAKE NO PROFESSION.

Yes you do—we beg pardon for saying so. You have made one just now. You have professed not to make any profession. And in the very words you contradict yourself.

There are some other articles of profession which you have made repeatedly. For instance, you profess a high regard for consistency. And because your regard for consistency is so very high, you have gone on in inconsistency. Professing to appreciate rectitude and truth and duty, you have lived without even attempting a course of life in which these excellencies shall control the whole heart. That is because true-heartedness within, and true dutifulness in conduct without, are so very important, therefore you have tried neither. In fact, dear high-tone, fault-finding, critical onsider, you are not only a professor, but one of the class of most inconsistent professors in the world.—Exchange.

ANTE-MORTEM.

BY MARGARET J. PRESTON.

How much would I care for it could I know
That when I am under the grass or snow,
The raveled garment of life's brief day,
Folded, and quietly laid away;
The spirit let loose from mortal bars,
And somewhere away among the stars,
How much do you think it would matter then
What praise was lavished upon me, when,
Whatever might be its stint or store,
It neither could help nor harm me more!

If, while I was toiling, they had but thought
To stretch a finger, I would have caught
Gladly such aid to buoy me through
Some bitter duty I had to do;
Though when it was done, they said, (may be,
To others—they never said to me—
The word of applause so craved, whose worth
Had been the supremest boon on earth
If granted me then,) "We are proud to know
That one of ourselves has triumphed so."

What use for the rope, if it be not flung
Till the swimmer's grasp to the rock has clung?
What help in a comrade's bugle-blast,
When the peril of Alpine heights is past?
What need that the spurring pean roll
When the runner is safe beyond the goal?
What worth in eulogy's blandest breath,
When whispered in ears that are hushed in death?
No! no! if you have but a word of cheer,
Speak it while I am alive to hear!

CLERGYMEN LIKE THE STAND-BYS.

The simple presence of such persons in the church is of itself to every minister a powerful help and encouragement. He is glad, of course, to see new faces coming in from time to time. The poor mother, who is a stand-by at home, who has a breakfast and a husband and half a dozen children to get ready in the morning, so that she herself can come out only now and then, whenever she does come is seen with pleasure. The young men of his flock, the flowers of the kingdom, whose eyes and religious natures open usually only in the latter part of the day, but who occasionally, under the inspiration of a new suit of Sunday clothes, blossom out in the forenoon, excite in him, till he learns better, a gleam of hope. The religious casual, the small and infrequent worshipper described by Horace, owning a pew, but occupying it so seldom that when he does use it it has to be found for him by the sexton, is not by any means unwelcome; and there is always an inspiration of some sort in the great crowd of strangers who appear on Sunday nights when it has been advertised that he is going to speak on the kingdom of Satan, or the doings of the devil, or the sowing of wild oats, or some kindred theme. But after all it is the stand-bys, the men—generally old ones—and the women living often farthest from the church, who are absolutely sure of being in their places punctually every Sunday, Thanksgiving and even Fast Day, whatever the season or the weather or the subject may be—these are the ones that he looks upon with special delight and finds to be the fountains of his great earthly inspiration.—Sunday Afternoon.

LET GIRLS BE GIRLS.

One of the crying evils of the times is the tendency and disposition of girls to get through girlhood hurriedly and get into womanhood, or rather into youngladyhood without waiting to enjoy the beautiful season of girlhood. Speaking on this point, Bishop Morris says: "Wait patiently, my dear children, through the whole period of your girlhood. Go not after womanhood; let it come to you. Keep out of public view. Cultivate retirement and modesty. The cares and responsibilities of life will come soon enough. When they come you will meet them, I trust, as true women should. But oh! be not so unwise as to throw away your girlhood. Rob not yourselves of this beautiful season, which, wisely spent, will brighten all your future life."

INFIRMITIES OF TEMPER.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

I think more downright unhappiness and misery are caused by ill-temper in the home than by all the embezzlements, infidelities and crimes put together into which poor human nature falls. One individual, man, woman or child, is possessed of an arbitrary, overbearing or furious temper. You never know at what unfortunate moment this temper will explode. A chance word, an unlucky allusion, or a mistimed jest, will set it off, for the fuse is always laid and it needs but one touch of the match. Five, or six, or ten people shall be made temporarily wretched because one person, unconsciously perhaps, yet supremely egotistic and selfish, has never learned to control his disposition and bridle his tongue. It may be the head of the house, who is apt to be cross at breakfast time, and he goes away to business, leaving a weight of depression behind him which he is wholly unable to estimate or measure. It may be the mother who gives the reins to fretfulness or who looks like a martyr when everybody is trying to please her. Her husband carries the thought of her face to his counting-room, and the children miss their lessons and receive discredit marks because they did not get well-started for the day. Even a child, who is wilful, capricious, and stormy in mood, can overshadow a family and lessen the sum of its daily delight.

A great many ill-tempered people are very good in some other regards. They are truthful, generous, and kind. They will go all lengths to do you a service. They will divide their last dollar with you, and sit up with you when you are ill and suffering. Yet they will not scruple to trample on your ordinary comfort, to wound your feelings constantly, and to mortify you by outbreaks of passion when they ought most to be patient and courteous.

What is to be done about it? For one thing society is to blame. We must cease to look upon an infirm temper as a venial offence. We must let the person who habitually indulges it understand that he cannot be at once a bear and a saint. We must not talk or think of a bad, by which we mean an irascible, vindictive or malicious temper, as a misfortune to be pitied merely. It is rather a trait to be condemned and a sin to be ashamed of. The ill-tempered person should be met by reproof and by good-humored but constant resistance. Too often he carries all before him. For the sake of peace everybody keeps quiet. It is an old lion, and who shall stir him up? The abject submission of friends and kindred to the ill-temper of some one they both love and fear intensifies and augments the evil.

The ill-tempered adult was once a child. The fault was once manageable. On parents and preceptors, then, a heavy responsibility lies, since theirs is the duty of right training.

QUESTIONABLE AMUSEMENTS.

Many professed Christians are always saying, why am I not permitted this or that enjoyment? They seem desirous of going as near Satan's ground as possible. Well, if their hearts are there their bodies might as well go with them. It is a poor service such render the Church. A poor soul—an interesting young lady, a member of the Presbyterian Church, complained that she was so tired one morning that she did not know what to do. Upon being asked what had wearied her so, she replied that she had danced all night and had such a good time. She was infatuated with the amusement; and as her feet were blistered with the dance, she had neither heart nor strength to go to the church or the prayer-meeting. Poor girl, she never had interest enough to lead her to tire herself in work for the Lord. The Christian goes to the Theatre night after night; sits in the warm room, stifled by impure air until eleven o'clock, listening to mimicry and mockery until real life and true religion are distasteful. What bitter complaints such make if the minister's sermon should exceed thirty minutes on a beautiful Sabbath morning!

But why try to carry water on both shoulders? Why attempt to carry the name on the church roll and the heart in the world? When actions say, "Lovers of pleasure, more than lovers of God," why not avoid the burden and inconsistency of church membership?

That there is much virtuous enjoyment in the world of a secular sort, none but the blindest would deny: Christianity secludes us from none of it. Those who keep their eyes half way open cannot fail to see that there are many things which pass for amusements which are evil and only evil in their tendencies. From all these our better convictions of right and wrong, as well as religion, would seclude us. Great leniency is sometimes a great curse. A proper restraint is wholesome and always a great blessing.

It was a wise man who rejected the coachman who boasted of his skill in driving within a foot—yea, an inch of the precipice with safety. It was wise in him to employ the man who said he did not know how near he could drive to the edge, for he had always kept as far away as possible. It is wise for the strong Christian to deny himself those indulgences which may cause a weak brother to stumble. It is always safe to stand aloof from questionable practices. It is better every way when at the sea-side or watering places, or summer resorts, to stand by the church, the prayer-meetings, or Christian ordinances, than to frequent the ball-room, the theatre, or to squander hours at the gaming table. You cannot mix the two in practice and enjoy both.

Beware of those doubtful amusements in which the world is so anxious to have Christians indulge. It is only to drown a conviction which their votaries feel which the consistent conduct of God's children condemns, and which is of an evil tendency, if not actually wrong under all circumstances in itself. By the sorrows of those who have suffered conviction and feel drawn into the whirlpool beyond recovery; by the sufferings of those who have lost character and position and health; by the agonies of those who now occupy a culprit's place, led there by the evils of doubtful things, we beseech you to "abstain from the very appearance of evil."

SENSIBLE TALK.

Emily Huntington Miller has been giving some sensible talks, which deserve the attention of every sensible girl in the land. She says:

"What better is she for education if she persists in silliness, and loudness, and obtrusive manners. Her researches among the treasures of science, and familiarity with the thoughts of genius, are of no value if they cannot furnish her with subjects for conversation more mighty than the gossip of society, the scandal of the day, and the probable intentions of young men who never had an intention in their lives, and are not capable of one until their brains acquire more solidity. Her artistic accomplishments are absolutely worthless unless they teach her how to beautify and adorn her home, how to distinguish the false from the true, how to be in her own person an embodiment of that grace and purity and chaste beauty, which the world worships in the marble and canvas of the old masters; unless they teach her a radical abhorrence of all the hideous distortions of fashions; of outward show, with inward untidiness; of tawdry ornaments, obtrusive finery, and unclean trailing tatters. Of what avail is it that she knows every law of her own body, and can trace for you with scientific accuracy, the working of every organ, and the linked steps of each wonderful process of life, if she lives in daily violation of them all; laying a murderous hand upon respiration and circulation; lunching at midnight upon fruit, cake, and pickles, and dreaming unutterable things in a room with all the windows hermetically sealed?"

LITTLE OFFICES OF LOVE.

In our Lord's own life it is manifest that He did, day by day, a multitude of things for the mere sake of soothing trouble, of calming irritation, of smoothing asperities, of producing amiable feelings. While He instructed men, while He inspired them with noble heroisms and ambitions. His life was also filled up with a thousand small shades of goodness, whose very nature it was to make men contented and happy, and His example is quoted for our imitation, "For even Christ pleased not Himself."—Faith and Works.

FALSEHOOD.

Of all the cowardly, unmanly acts in the whole range of sin a lie is the most contemptible. To a healthy mind a deliberate lie is impossible; it is absolutely incompatible with an honest self-respect. No matter whether the lie is discovered or not, the utterer is conscious that he is a liar when he looks at himself in the mirror. The man who lies, and has ceased either to feel shame or sorrow for falsehood, is the most degraded being imaginable, far beneath the maniac and the idiot.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

From the London Weekly Review and other sources:

The Marquis of Bute has categorically denied all statements as to his retroversion in matters of faith. He still adheres to Romanism.

Professor Brucke, who has been elected rector of the University of Vienna, is the first Protestant who has held that office since the foundation of the University.

The Rev. George F. Herrick, of Turkey, reports that the circulation of Bibles and religious literature in that country now numbers 140,000 volumes a year. The only mission, he says, which can reach Turkey is a woman's mission.

An Irish Episcopal paper complains of the "difficulty of conducting a Church paper, especially an Irish one. If the editor is impartial, he is stigmatised as a 'Ritualist' by one party, and a Inkewarm Churchman by the other."

Speaking at the Canterbury Diocesan Conference, which was held last week at Lambeth, the Archbishop of Canterbury took occasion to state, as the result of his experience, as well in the diocese of London as in that of Canterbury, that difficulties between clergymen and their parishioners were much more frequent in newly-formed districts than in old parishes. This, he thought, arose from the fact that incumbents of new districts did not hesitate to introduce changes into the churches, which they seemed to regard as in some degree their own property.

The statements of the committee appointed by the General Synod of the Irish Episcopal Church to consider the "present inadequate supply of properly qualified candidates for the work of the ministry in the Church of Ireland," are very significant. The committee could hear of only 108 persons in Ireland who were being educated for the ministry, and some of these were scarcely more than boys, just left school, or entering the university. And if this number is spread over, say, five years, which is a fair calculation, it would give an average of twenty-one candidates each year, while fifty or sixty are required. Besides, several of these will enter the ministry in England, as is evident from the fact that at the recent ordinations, twenty-one Dublin University men were ordained in England, while only seventeen were ordained for the whole of the Irish Church.

Great complaints are being made about the condition of the Episcopal church at Lidsing, a hamlet within a few miles of Maidstone. The roof and walls are terribly dilapidated, the pews partially destroyed, the pulpit is nowhere to be seen, the font is smashed to atoms, and the bell has disappeared. No service has been held for five years, and the inhabitants have to go to another parish. Nevertheless, the living of Gillingham, to which this hamlet is attached as a parochial chapelry, is worth over £500 a year.

The Archbishop of Dublin, in the name of the Irish Episcopate, has informed the Holy See that a meeting has been held with the object of coming to an understanding on the Irish Education Bill; that it was unanimously decided to be unacceptable, and that an appeal in that sense has been made to the Irish members, urging them to obtain modifications. The Pope has written in reply to Archbishop M'Cabe, highly commending the conduct of himself and his colleagues in thus defending the interests confided to them.

A scheme of retrenchment has been adopted by the committee of the Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Society. There is to be a reduction of the grants made to districts everywhere. Strictly missionary districts are to be subject to a reduction of five per cent., and those districts which are of a more pastoral character to a reduction of ten per cent. This course has become necessary owing to the enlargement of the mission field and to the falling off—to the extent of many thousand pounds—in the annual income of the society.

Mr. Klutz, agent of the Church of Scotland Mission at Constantinople and Salonica, was a fortnight ago arrested at Pristina, and his books, tracts, parts of Scripture, &c., confiscated. He was submitted to considerable indignity, and was only released at the prompt interference of the British Consul at Salonica, who was snavely told by the Governor-General that it had been a mistake on the part of the Pacha of Pristina. Mr. Klutz's crime, however, those who know better believe, was that he was the agent in distributing £4,000, in relieving poor Bulgarians whose homes had been burned, whose clothes and chattels were stolen, and whose cattle had been killed by the troops.

The large body of Dissenters from the Russian Orthodox Church who are known as the Old Believers, hitherto not recognized, and practising religious rites under official ban, are to have entire liberty of worship and to be allowed to build churches, become members of city guilds, and engage in industrial and commercial pursuits, hitherto forbidden. These reforms will not be conceded to other ancient sects, as the Skoptys, who practice self-mutilation, and the Rhyetys, who adopt doctrines and practices revolting to social order and public morality. By these reforms 12,000,000 Russian subjects will be relieved from their disabilities.

It is well known that Wick is one of the great centres of the herring fishing enterprise in Scotland. As many as 1,200 boats have been employed at this port during one season, although from want of success in recent years that number has been reduced by one-half. Each boat is manned by five or six hands, forming a total of several thousands of additional population in the fishing season. Last week many hundred of these hardy toilers of the sea landed at Scrabster Pier, Thurso, from Stornoway, on route for the Wick and east coast fishing. An interesting scene was presented on Sabbath in a field at the back of Royal Hotel, Thurso. Several hundreds were landed on that morning, and it appears that veneration for the Sabbath prevented these men from proceeding further on their journey, and they made the roadsides or any better place of shelter their home until Monday dawned. A short religious service was held by the men amongst themselves, reading from the Gaelic Scriptures, and prayer and praise from the Gaelic psalms. Seated on the grass, with heads uncovered, and a reverential expression on every face, the proceedings were very impressive.

It appears that the Canton of Friburg has long possessed, without the rest of the world knowing it, its own native Louise Latan. The Liberte tells us that on Friday, the 27th June, "too soon for the weal of humanity, Margaritha Bays, the Stigmatised," died at La Pierraz, in the Commune of Siviriez. The wounds of the Saviour were miraculously stamped upon her body; but she and her kinsfolk were too pious and unambitious, says the above-cited journal, to make proclamation of the extraordinary grace which she had received from on high. The extraordinary supernatural event, however, could not be altogether hidden, and certain "authorized persons" were informed of the fact, and permitted to see the wounds. She was sixty-four years old at the time of her death, and some of her devout neighbors think that the ecclesiastical authorities ought to command an examination, according to the canonical rules of procedure, in order that the preliminary steps may be taken for her eventual canonization. The Roman bishops in Switzerland, however, have more pressing affairs upon their hands, and will scarcely trouble themselves about a saint whose career has no bearing upon politics.

The small stage at the Langham Hall, was on Monday evening the scene of a somewhat curious theatrical representation, namely, that of John Bunyan's now almost classical work, "The Pilgrim's Progress." The performance of a theatrical version of this book is not, however, entirely a novelty, for Mr. and Mrs. George Macdonald and their family, who gave this entertainment, have within the last two years rendered it at various places, both publicly and privately. The portion of the book chosen as the most eligible for acting purposes is the second part, which, as every one knows, contains the journeyings of Christiana, the wife of Christian, with her children and her neighbor Mercy. It being of course impossible to use the entire story as printed, selections have been made, and in such a judicious manner that the whole plot can be followed and traced by the audience. Thus the scene opens in Christiana's home, from whence the pilgrims are followed to the Wicket-gate, to the House Beautiful, the Valley of Humiliation, and finally to the Land of Beulah. Such a representation naturally requires a considerable amount of discrimination in the manner in which it is put upon the stage and acted, so as to avoid offending any of the sensibilities or the taste of the audience, and this point had been most successfully carried out. The costumes were tasteful and well chosen, while the manner of the actors was subdued and free from the least taint of affectation. The nature of the entertainment of course precluded any very pronounced style of applause; but it was evident from the earnest attention of the audience throughout the whole piece that they fully appreciated and enjoyed all they witnessed.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 13, 1879.

[ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT WILMINGTON, N. C., AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.]

THE MACRAE CASE.

We have heretofore given at length the history of the case of Rev. David MacRae, of Greenock, charged with heresy before United Presbyterian Church of Scotland. The conclusion of the whole matter has been reached, and we bring up the details.

At an in hunc effectum meeting of the Synod of the United Presbyterian Chnrch, held in Edinburgh, Rev. Dr. George Jeffrey, Moderator, the Synodical committee appointed to deal with Rev. David Macrae reported. Protests and appeals made by Mr. Macrae were also received and disposed of. The hall was crowded with members and visitors, as the case has excited great interest.

The first action of the Synod was to sustain the committee in declining to transmit a memorial from Greenock congregation, addressed to the Synod and forwarded throngh the Presbytery of Greenock. The first protest and appeal—that of Mr. Macrae against his preliminary suspension—was taken np. Mr. Macrae addressed the Synod at length on the merits of the question, contending that "the bad had not the same possibility of life in them as the good, that evil had no everlasting existence, and that the nniverse of God wonld eventnally be purified from sin." Two members of Synod replied. Mr. Macrae was again heard and then, no questions being asked, it was moved to dismiss the protest and appeal. An amendment was lost, and the original motion was almost unanimously carried. A second protest and appeal was presented—against the action of the committee in refnsing to serve Mr. Macrae with a libel when asked for it. The committee defended their refnsal on the gronnd that it was not, in the committee's opinion, a case in which they, with restricted powers, conld properly issne the libel; and further. Mr. Macrae had pointed to improper purposes to which he wonld apply the libel if obtained. A proposition to grant the libel was advocated in a long speech. For granting the libel there were 47 votes, and for sustaining the committee in refnsing, 277 votes. The remaining matter for discnssion was the appellant's protest against the decision of the Synodical committee, which pronounced Mr. Macrae's final suspension. Mr. Macrae was fnlly heard, thongh his remarks were not altogether conrteons to the Synod, and he was replied to by Rev. Dr. Hutton, on the part of the committee, and by Principal Cairns. Rev. Dr. Andrew Thompson moved the deliverance of the Honse in the following terms: "The Synod dismiss the protest and appeal, affirm the findings of the committee, and on the gronnd of the findings declare Mr. Macrae no longer a minister of this Church." After some further discnssion a substitute was offered reciting that "inasmuch as the divergence between Mr. Macrae and the Chnrch on doctrinal points does not require suspension sine die, and may be dealt with by censnre and prohibition, the final decision of the committee be not sustained." The latter motion was rejected by a large majority, and the former was then adopted by a vote of 288 to 29. The Moderator annonnced the resnlt to Mr. Macrae, and the latter gentleman addressed the Synod, claiming to be acting conscientiously. He contended that his trial had not been fair, bnt he expressed his sense of the conscientious convictions under which the majority of the Synod had declared against him, and his acknowledgement of the kind feeling which had been manifested towards him personally.

So ends this case. The proceedings from first to last have been entirely creditable to the great Chnrch, which was forced to this unpleasant dnty. The Moderator exhibited admirable jndgment and skill, and members in general acted in that orderly and nnimpassioned manner becoming a religions conrt. Evidently no feeling of personal hostility to Mr. Macrae affected any of those who sat in jndgment; on the contrary, liberty almost extreme was granted him, as to the frequent reiteration of his views and characterization of the court.

It is well to note how well in this case the Chnrch maintained its dignity. It was Mr. Macrae and not the Chnrch on trial, and that fact was never lost sight of or obscured.

NOT SO.

The duelling spirit seems to be rife all over the Sonth. The other day amid the horrors impending over Memphis, two of her citizens deliberately made each other a target. In Alabama two men highly connected lately had a political qnarrel, went out into a field, and in the presence of five hnndred spectators tried to shoot one another. And now Jndge Robert Onld, formerly Confederate Commissioner for the exchange of prisoners, and an elder in one of the Presbyterian chnrches of Richmond, Va., was on the point of fighting a dnel with another high-toned son of chivalry. Occnrrences snch as these, connected with other outrages, are doing an injury to the Sonth of which the people of that region have a very inadequate conception. Neither capital nor a desirable population will flow into a region where public sentiment tolerates snch things. The Southern people owe it to themselves to bring about a speedy reformation.

The above publication is in many respects unjustifiable. First, The statements are not accurate and the conclusion is altogether illogical. Secondly, the assertion of the article is most unkind, and unjnst. The Pittsbnrg Banner, from which the above is taken, is not to be noted as prone to do injustice to the South, bnt in this case it has been betrayed into so doing.

It is not true that the dnelling spirit is rife, or seems to be so, all over the South. We do not call to mind a case of dnelling by North Carolinians in over twenty years. Using a trite proverb, "One swallow doesn't make a summer," and if the three cases mentioned were accurately described they would not justify the conclnsion reached. Three particnlars to warrant a general conclnsion applicable to over ten millions of people, occupying nearly one-fourth of a continent! How absurd! As well might we cite the Pocasset murder, and one or two others, to prove that the whole North had gone mad. It is only by assuming the correctness of our second proposition that the appearance of the article can be accounted for at all.

Of the two cases first mentioned in the above indictment we know nothing, and the slur at the chivalry may go for what it is worth; the truth we are after. In the case of Jndge Onld, of Richmond, Va., it is not true that he was "on the point of fighting a duel."

The whole correspondence and proceedings before the court of investigation were published in the Richmond papers. Not expecting to refer to them editorially, we scanned them hastily, bnt drew from them these facts: That Jndge Onld was asked to retract certain expressions, said to have been made by him in pleading at law, and considered applicable to one Dr. George and his family. Judge Onld stated that the terms nsed did not apply to the parties claiming to be aggrieved, and that a disclaimer to that effect was made at the time they were nttered; fnrther—if we recollect aright—that they did not apply to any one in the sense assnmed by Dr. George. Jndge Onld also stated that had he been guilty of the condnct named he wonld certainly make proper acknowledgments; and this last statement he re-affirmed before the court when the whole was under investigation. We repeat then that Jndge Onld was not "on the point of fighting a duel." His condnct throughont was that of a self-possessed, Christian gentleman, having no intention of doing wrong. So far from the circumstances connected with this matter indicating a reign of lawlessness, the promptness with which two most influential men were arraigned, to prevent a possible breach of the peace, strikingly proves the snpremacy of the law. Some of the secnlar papers ontstrip time to bring in the news ahead, but with religious papers, if a choice mnst be made, what is .trne shonld be preferred to what is new.

It is not occnrrences snch as these that, mainly, are doing an injnry to the South; the injury comes from papers of wide influence, especially from religious newspapers, pnblishing articles in tone and spirit liko to the above.

NEWBERN COLORED CHURCH.

We are glad to chronicle the fact that our notice of this young church, a few weeks ago, is producing fruit. Our colored brethren put our article into circular form, signed by their session, and the pastor and a few brethren of the First chnrch, and are sending it to the churches. A few very kind responses have been already received to the amonnt of abont $100. They ask all to send them ONE DOLLAR, if they cannot send more. We hope neither pastors and churches nor individnals receiving this hnmble and meritorions appeal will lay it aside and do nothing. Let all, for Christ's sake, take more interest in our colored popnlation, and help them in all religious work. Let this Newbern chnrch be fostered, that it may be a light kindled by our chnrch amid this people, who do need intelligent spiritual training. Let not the chnrch in North Carolina be behind in this sympathy. All contribntions may be sent to Rev. L. C. Vass, Newbern, N. C., or if sent to ns, we will forward to him.

A GENEROUS PROVISION.

Our readers will see by referring to the advertising colnmns, that an opportnnity is being afforded to at least three candidates for the ministry, for receiving a very cheap education at that excellent institntion the Bingham School, located at Mebaneville in this State. We call attention to this fact, not alone because of its praiseworthiness, bnt also for the reason that the scheme npon which this offer of tnition is made is one that deserves the confidence of all our Presbyteries. It is sanctioned by a nnmber of our leading ministers, the name of one of whom appears in the advertisement itself: and Dr. Wilson's name is the more appropriately thns nsed because the larger portion of the money already snbscribed for accomplishing the object in view has been collected or promised in this city. The scheme contemplates gratnitons tnition in the case of every ministerial candidate who shall not be able, or whose friends shall not be in a condition, or whose Presbytery shall not feel authorized, to undertake his education in its earlier stages, independently of charitable aid from benevolent men who are willing to engage in snpplementing all deficiencies. Enongh money has been secnred to onable Major Bingham to extend the offer contained in his advertisement, the Major being himself a large contributor to the scheme. Let this scheme meet with more and more favor, until not three bnt thirty yonng men shall have come nnder its beneficent shadow!

THE ORPHAN ASYLUM.

The July statement of the Orphan Asylum at Oxford, N. C., shows very light receipts in cash, though the receipts in kind seem to have been quite fair. We are not doing enongh for this noble charity. The following remarks accompany the statement:

"During the month there has been a revival of religion in the Methodist church; the orphans attended the meetings and three of the larger girls joined that church. Interesting services were also held at the asylnm by ministers of the different denominations, and many of the children seemed deeply concerned.

"Work on the hospital is progressing rapidly, and we hope soon to have it completed.

"There are one-hnndred and thirty-fonr children here, and not a case of sickness.

"Three of the teachers now connected with the institntion, came here as children, and completed their edncation at Greensboro, Mnrfreesboro and St. Mary's.

"We wish to extend the orphan work by educating as many as possible for teachers.

"Several bright boys here now ought to receive collegiate educations; they might, with proper advantages, be an honor to the State and a credit to any generous persons who wonld defray their expenses at school."

THE CENTRAL CHURCH, ST. LOUIS.

The Central Presbyterian church of St. Louis (Dr. Brank's), is still nnder the heavy pressnre of that debt by which it was, not long since, wellnigh crushed. The trustees very lately sold the church to the Unitarians—this of their own motion, and based on their view of the necessities of the case. To render the sale legally valid, the vote of two-thirds of the congregation was required. On Monday night, 4th inst., the congregation after free discnssion refused to ratify. The idea of selling the chnrch to the deniers of Christ's oneness with the Father was too abhorrent.

The St. Louis Presbyterian, from which we gather the above, says:

"Jndge Dryden, earnestly opposing the whole measure as an nnnecessary sacrifice, was indignantly hostile to the proposition to sell to the Unitarians. He said that, even were it trne that the debt is too heavy for the congregation, they were not shnt np to the proposed sale as the only alternative. Said he: 'We can nnite, if need be, with our Pine street brethren. Nay, I wonld go farther: rather than consent to have this chnrch, which has been dedicated to the worship of the trinne God, sold to the Unitarians, I wonld vote to transfer the congregation to the Northern Assembly.' So say we. We most heartily endorse Jndge Dryden's speech. The matter is once more settled."

JEROME NAPOLEON.

The Bonapartist party, the hopes of which seemed a few weeks since to have been buried beyond recall, has suddenly revived. Not improbably a few months hence the Bonapartist will display a power to which it has been a stranger since the luckless hour of Sedan.

No weather vane changes more qnickly to the shifting of the breeze than do political opinions nnder the pressnre of self-interest. When the son of Lonis Napoleon lived, and Imperial honors appeared forever beyond the reach of Jerome, now the leader of the Bonapartists, his hostility to the Papal power in France was uncompromisingly bitter. His views were anti-religious, Socialistic, and their manifestation was ostentatious; to throw contempt upon Romish observances was his pride. Now all is changed. Realizing that the Imperial crown can be grasped, if ever, only throngh the aid of the Papal heirarchy, he has snddenly become repentant of his former errors, disavowed those acts in which he gloried, and stands ont a champion of the Ultramontanes. At the late mass for the Prince Imperial his homage was obseqnions.

Jerome Napoleon possesses many advantages, natnral and acqnired, to fit him for the leadership to which he has been elevated. Not wanting, it is now claimed, in personal courage, he has mental power, large information, and thorough education. His likeness to the Great Emperor, which is said to be startling, may serve his purpose on occasion, more effectnally than more worthy qualities. He is allied by marriage to royal families, his wife being the sister of the King of Italy and of the Qnoen of Portugal. The disaffection which he at first encountered from the Imperialists is disappearing, and Mr. Rhoner's organ now avows its adhesion to his fortnnes.

That the sitnation has materially changed, and Republicanism in France has to meet it facto face, is quite apparent.

VACATION.

Some of our contemporaries have taken their vacations, or will take them. One of our care-burdened toilers writes ns in a way calculated to excite longings in the same direction, but all snch aspirations for freedom break down for the reason he assigns. Let ns stand in our lot (seeing we can't do otherwise) and make the best of it. Here is what he says:

Dear Mr. McLaurin: I am obliged to you for the word of sympathy for the country pastor, who is never offered a vacation. I feel for yon too, and if I were a rich man I wonld send yon something that would bear yonr expenses dnring a breathing spell. Having time to get breath yon wonld return to the tripod with yonr yonth renewed, and the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN wonld be newer and better than ever and really we wonld be the gainers after all. Here I am sweltering in the Angust heat, the thermometer np among the nineties. Well it is somewhat refreshing to read after those favored brethren who are now in the hill conntry. We will have anyway the pleasure of imagining things. It don't take many green backs to build an air castle! This hot day how nice to sit nnder the spreading branches of a large tree by the side of a sparkling mountain stream and angle for its speckled trout, or to drink the pure, cold water that gnshes from the mountain side, and then to dinner with the fresh sweet milk from the spring honse, and the "fresh, cow's butter," as a neighbor of mine says, after eating oil, tallow, and ochre! Let's go! What say yon? Where shall we go first? To Asheville and then to Black, or Bald, or Cæsar's Head?

Enongh of this. The sermon for next Sabbath is hardly yet on the stocks, and come it mnst, like yonr weekly editorials, vacation or no vacation.

[EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

CHAUTAUQUA ASSEMBLY.

CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y., Ang. 9, 1879.

The Chautanqna Sabbath School Assembly is now an "institntion," being five years old. It is an organized power, and its influence is being felt more and more widely each year. In reaching this place we passed from Baltimore via Harrisbnrg, Pa., to Pittsbnrg, throngh some of the most beantifnl scenery in the conntry, along the fertile banks of the Snsqnehanna and bright, blne Jnniata, and over the rugged Alleghenies. At night the iron fnrnaces, and rolling mills, and coke bnrnings blazed on either hand fiercely in the darkness, and their treasures were seen "cord-ed" np in smoke-crowned Pittsbnrg. This is an interesting Western city, throbbing with its great activities in this iron and petroleum centre. Sometimes the snn breaks through the dense clouds that crown the crowded city. Thence we traveled through the oil regions of Pennsylvania. It recalls the wild speculations of the past. "Petroleum Centre" had, twelve years ago, some 15,000 inhabitants, and was said to be the largest mail-distributing office in the State outside of Pittsbnrg. Now the cars scarcely stop there and the place polls only a few votes. Oil City is dead, its wells being unproductive. Still the oil business is very extensive at other points, and refineries abonnd near Pittsbnrg, the business being largely monopolised by one great firm. Bnt we will not panse on general matters.

Lake Chantauqua is in South Western New York; distant from Lake Erie seven miles, and above its level 700 feet, and above the ocean level 1,400 feet. It is said to be the highest water on the globe, navigable by steamer. As we approached Mayville we looked upon this beantifnl sheet, twenty-two miles long by three miles wide. It is circled by well-wooded hills; its waters are beautifully clear, and abound in a variety of fish. A veritable legend traces its name to a memorable remark, made by a tried husband to his irrepressible sponse, viz: "Psha! talk away!" While Lake Erie sends its waters to the Gnlf of St. Lawrence, this lake on the opposite slope of the great divide ponrs its wealth throngh the Ohio into the Mississippi and Gnlf of Mexico. Rude remains of the ancient Monnd-Bnilders and the famous Six Nations are found aronnd its shores, and many local traditions of the early white settlers still live.

The Chautanqua "idea" is to make Sunday school teachers better teachers; to lift into higher light those who have lacked edncational advantages; and to train all in the best method of work for sonls, in the school. While it reaches out for light in science and philosophy, in geography and languages, the Bible is the governing text book, and all study is to enable teachers and scholars to understand and nse and apply its great trnths efficiently under God.

Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D., Sunday School Secretary of the M. E. Chnrch, is the father of this Chautauqna scheme of combining pleasnre and instruction in the studies of the two weeks spent here in July and Augnst, and those to be prosecnted at home. Lewis Miller, a well-known and liberal man of wealth, heartily coincided with Dr. Vincent in selecting this beautiful and easily accessible point for annual gatherings. In 1874 eighty acres, comprising Fair Point, now Chautauqna, three miles from Mayville, were pnrchased, and in June the meetings were inaugurated. On its diversified area of hills and vales, amid its beautiful and lofty groves, are now a thonsand tents and romantic Swiss chalets, and neat cottages, a large hotel, a New England kitchen and a nnnber of eating houses, a neat chapel, telegraph and post office, and supply and book stores. The waves of the lake are now beating musically nnder the window of my cottage home, and the thermometer is to-day 60 degrees and below. Winding walks, rustic bridge spanning ravine, flowing fonntains (one gushing ont of the knot of a tree in a bold stream), statues gleaming amid foliage; hnndred of bright Chinese lanterns and the brilliant electric lights at night, combine to promote the comfort of five thonsand delighted people already here. In Palestine Park we can walk over Lebanon and the mountains and plains of Canaan, and along the Dead Sea and Jordan's "peaceful" banks, and trace ont the wars of Israel and travels of Christ. The extensive model of Jernsalem, VanLennep's Mnseum of Eastern Cnriosities, a model of the Tabernacle and its furniture (one-half the actual size), a section of the Pyramid (one-thirtieth of its size), and exhibitions of persons in Eastern costumes, help wonderfully in Bible study. The teaching is popular bnt not superficial; limited, bnt comprehensive and stimulating. Bnt I must reserve other interesting facts for another letter.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

A Baptist exchange, after giving some admirable advice as to what should be done at the protracted meetings of that denomination, says:

"And when yon are baptizing the candidates, don't forget to tell them of the importance of taking the Recorder."

That will never do. It looks to ns like taking the candidates at a disadvantage, for just at that time and nnder the circumstances of an immersion, a person might be willing to snbscribe to almost anything.

But the idea that religions papers ought to be remembered when accessions are made to churches is a good one. We snggest that our friends act npon it. To be sure it will often happen that persons coming into full communion with ns are from families that take the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN and read it—that's a good word for ourselves—but manifestly the paper ought to increase its list with the growth of the Church.

It is stated npon the authority of a German paper that the Rothschilds, among other securities for a loan of two thonsand millions francs to the Sultan, hold a mortgage npon the entire land of Palestine.

If trne the Land of Israel may soon be in the hands of the Jews, and the Restoration may be sooner than we think.

The Central Presbyterian comes out in qnarto form and looking in its brand new dress, as bright and blooming as a yonng bride. Its editors are determined to make the Central in every way worthy of extensive patronage. We are glad to learn that their subscription list is increasing.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

Rev. L. C. Vass wishes every Presbyterian minister had as nice a people as his. They have granted him a month's vacation, and he is now off on his tour.

A friend writes that Rev. Robert Nall, D. D., of Ala., has been preaching since the first of July at Swift Creek church, Iredell connty, with great acceptance to large congregations. He adds: Perhaps there are few ministers in our Church whose labors have been more blessed than Dr. Nall's in the last half century.

A communication on the subject of the dedication of the church at Centre, (Norwood) Stanly county, has been received, and R. H. C. has our thanks for his kindness. As we published the news last week, the article wonld be, in some measnre, a reiteration, and we therefore glean for pnblication what has not already appeared.

The organization of a church at Centre was effected abont twelve months ago, mainly throngh the exertions of Rev. J. H. Thornwell. Four members constitnted the church at first, and by their assidnous efforts, with the assistance of a few friends, a fine house of worship has been erected. Four hundred persons can be seated very comfortably.

Meetings following the dedication have been continned, and at last accounts were still in progress. On the night of Augnst 3rd one young man was baptized and united with the church.

The people of Norwood expected a good time, bnt their most sangnine expectations were exceeded. The nnmber of persons in attendance was very large, being from six adjoining counties. The hospitality of the citizens was boundless. All indeed, we jndge from our correspondent's article, was enjoyment. The dedication sermon and indeed all of the exercises are represented as most excellent in style and order. The following jnst tribute is paid to Rev. J. H. Thornwell:

Brother Thornwell has by his Christian zeal and untiring devotion to the great work of the Lord, and the interest he has manifested in the salvation of this people, won that attachment to him which is of no ordinary character. Long may he live and serve them as pastor and may he have many sonls for his hire.

A Bell telephone with the Blake transmitter, has been placed in the First Presbyterian church, at Wilmington, and is connected with the residence of Col. John D. Taylor, several squares distant. This was done throngh the kindness of the Bell Company that an invalid lady might hear the Sabbath services. On Sabbath last the instrnment was nsed for the first time, and the effect was wonderful. The instrument is placed in an inconspicnous place at the pulpit, and is thus some fifty or sixty feet from the choir gallery, yet every note of the singers and every shade of tone of the organ was heard, and the voices of the singers distingnished. Dr. Wilson's prayers, and the entire sermon, were heard with exactness. Thus science comes in, to bless and comfort God's afflicted ones. The lady had not heard a sermon before in many weary months, prolonged to years. The Blake transmitter, by which such wonderful resnlts are reached, is used, we understand, by none other than the Bell Telephone Company.

COLORED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (NORTHERN) OF DAVIDSON COLLEGE.

MR. EDITOR:—The membership numbers forty. They own a lot and comfortable building. Their pastor, Rev. David S. Baker, teaches a free school in the congregation five months in the year, partly at the expense of the State, and is making his people intelligent. The children also receive instruction in a Snnday school taught by young ladies of the village and students from the college. There is preaching by the paster once a month on Sabbath morning, and every Sabbath night, and a prayer-meeting every Wednesday night. This last has been set on foot within the past year, and now has an average attendance of eighteen. The attendance on the preaching has increased and good attention is given. Three have been added to the church, one by certificate. The contributions have reached an average of one dollar a member, which is considered a fair amount for the means of the contributors. The spiritnal condition of the church is encouraging. The pastor was educated at Lincoln University, Pa., and commands the respect of this community. He is a quiet Presbyterian worker; and, by his preaching and teaching, and by the example of himself and wife—who appears to keep a home that may well serve as a model to those among whom she lives—is a specimen of the most powerful human agency for good that could be put among the colored people. If he works here twenty years as he has for one, he will most eloquently illustrate what can and should be done for his race by Tnscaloosa Institute. F. P. R.

ELDER'S AND DEACON'S CONVENTION.

The Sixth Annual Convention of the Elders and Deacons of Mecklenbnrg Presbytery was held at Olney church, in Gaston county, on the 5th and 6th of this month. The following churches were represented, via: Steel Creek, Charlotte First and Second churches, Mallard Creek, Sharon, Union, Long Creek, New Hope and Olney. The retiring president, Elder R. McNeely, being absent, Elder J. N. Hanna was chosen to act as president pro tem. After reading the Scriptnre, singing and prayer, the convention was permanently organized by the nnanimons election of S. A. Torrence, president, H. B. Hnffstetler, vice-president, and James Wilson and J. Q. Holland, clerks.

The convention then proceeded to the discussion of the subjects that had been selected by a committee.

The first subject was: "The young men of the Church; the importance of rendering them active laborers in its service." Snbject introduced by Gen. J. A. Yonng. The Yonng Men's Christian Association was highly recommended as an efficient way of rendering yonng men active laborers. Those who recommended it stated that they had witnessed in their respective churches the benefits of this Association in this direction.

Second subject: "The study of the Bible, and the best method of promoting it in the Church and Sabbath schools." Snbject introdnced by T. B. Price and J. R. Hntchison.

Third snbject: "The relation of the Church and the dnties of its officers to the Sabbath school, and the dnty of pastors and sessions to provide teachers qnalified for their dnties." Snbject was introdnced by J. P. Alexander.

Fonrth snbject: "Prayer—secret, social and public, and the faith of the Christian in its efficacy." Introdnced by J. N. Hanna and J. R. Kinkade.

Fifth snbject: "Methods of raising fnnds for Church enterprises, and the dnty of Christians in relation thereto." Snbject introduced by W. Mc. Caldwell.

Sixth subject: "Representation in the conrts of the Chnrch." Introdnced by H. K. Reid. After a few very important words upon this subject, Mr. Reid submitted to the convention a resolution to this effect, viz: That the convention recommend to all the churches of Mecklenburg Presbytery the plan of selecting delegates to the higher conrts of the Chnrch to represent them for a period of not more than three nor less than two years, and that this resolution be considered and acted upon by each session, and they report to the next meeting of this convention.

The seventh snbject discnssed was: "The Bible." Gen. J. A. Young introdnced this snbject and delivered an instructive and interesting address.

There was one subject on the list of subjects omitted on accnnt of the absence of the elders who were to introduce this subject.

The Convention selected Mallard Creek church as the place for their next meeting. I am sorry to state that only two ministers were present on this interesting occasion. I heard more from this good body of Elders and Deacons on pure and nndefiled religion, and the ways of increasing religions interest in the churches, than we generally hear in an entire meeting of Presbytery. There is a general desire in Presbytery to hear from our elders; to hear their views upon different matters pertaining to the churches. Now there are two ways by which we can hear them speak more in public npon these things. One way is, that ministers themselves (who like to hear themselves talk) give the elders an opportnnity, and the second way to hear them speak, is to attend the Convention of Elders and Deacons. I was also impressed with the fact that the Convention acts, in all things they undertake, with an eye to the favor and prosperity of their presbytery and the glory of God. Snch a convention will cause the officers of the church to become acquainted with one another and more interested in each other and in the churches of which they are the representatives. Then let us all as ministers and congregations assist and encourage this Association of Elders and Deacons.

THE WRONG WAY.

Until a comparatively late period we have congratulated onrselves on what seemed to be a sort of physical and moral impossibility that such a perversion of woman's influence shonld ever prevail in our own section. Our general conversation and even our climate seemed to be against it. The superior refinement which we claimed seemed to consist very largely in an instinctive and nnconquerable repugnance on the part of all our women to all masculine propensities and performances, and which was strengthened and protected by the firm convictions and faithful guardianship of our men. Male women, female lectnrers, public speakers, preachers, and all "women's rights" advocates, were the abomination of our people.

Bnt we seriously fear that a change for the worse has begun. There are, indeed, thonsands who cling to the old sentiment. Bnt we see indications that in many quarters it is giving way. What gives us the greatest nneasiness is that this new or at least imported spirit is seen very largely in the popular methods of female edncation. There is a strong disposition to thrnst our girls before the public eye and ear. The great end of edncation, in a large proportion of cases, is display—the end which foolish and vain parents seek, which accommodating teachers studiously gratify, and which children learn to prize at a very early age, and which grows upon them as they advance in their course. To secure this, not only are our girls paraded before a crowd in concert and in "solo" performances, bnt they are taught and stimulated to declaim, or as the fashionable term has it, "they give a recitation," exhibiting precisely as boys do, who are expected to be the lawyers, statesmen and preachers of the fntnre. Calisthenics is an admirable exercise to develop the mnscles, promote health, and cultivate grace of movement; bnt we cannot see the propriety of exhibiting a class of girls in short dresses and on a high stage before a gazing audience. There is no donbt this helps to cnltivate that confidence which is thought to be so desirable, in order that they may, as it is called, "do justice to themselves."

This whole system is evidently prodncing boldness of manners, and is rapidly doing away with that shame-facedness and sobriety which a holy apostle recommended as woman's most beantifnl adornment. The preminm on modesty is going down in the social market. It is now called prudishness, and those who are afflicted with it are pitied as nnfit for the world. Nothing in the history of woman is more to be deprecated. It may seem that our fears are extravagant. Bnt we are governed by the maxim, "Obsta principiis." The rate of this downward progress is likely to be accelerated, and hence we utter a word of warning.—Southern Presbyterian.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPATE.

There is considerable current discnssion among the Methodists as to the basis on which their Episcopate stands. There seem to be three theories on the subject. One theory is essentially Presbyterian, and holds that the "ministry is one in kind, purpose, and divine ordination." Each minister is the peer of every other, and the bishops simply represent a clergy whose inherent functions they exercise by delegation. Another theory assumes that Mr. Wesley received Episcopal consecration from the hands of Bishop Erasmus, and, by virtne of this ordination, in turn consecrated Dr. Coke as Bishop of the Methodists in America; the office of bishop being transmitted by regular consecration from that day to this. A third theory has recently received a very full exposition from Dr. Raymond, of the Garret Biblical Institute, Chicago. He maintains that "Mr. Wesley ordained Mr. Coke for the same reason that Paul ordained Timothy—for the reason that, in his judgment, he was providentially called thereto." He adds that the validity of Dr. Coke's ordination is not derived from Mr. Wesley's authority as a presbyter in the Church of England, bnt from his authority as founder of the Methodist Church," and the Methodist Church is not "a Congregational Church or a Presbyterian Church, but a true and valid Episcopal Church." Dr. Raymond's theory is met by very strenuous opposition, and there is evidently wide difference of opinion on the snbject inside the Methodist Church.—Christian Union.

A GOOD MAN GONE.

LAURINBURG, N. C., August 8.

Brother McLaurin: It is with sadness that I announce to you the death of Maj. John McNeill, ruling elder in Laurel Hill church. He fell asleep in Jesus about 9 o'clock Saturday night, Augnst 2nd. He had been unwell dnring the week, bnt was able to be up a good portion of the time—in fact he sat at the dinner table with his family on the day of his death. He died at the advanced age of 78 years (less a few days.) For nearly 30 years he was an efficient and faithful elder in Laurel Hill church. His sudden separation has cast a deep gloom over our church and community. Bnt we have cause for rejoicing that our loss is his eternal gain.

He was an Israelite indeed in whom there was no gnile. Everyone looked upon him as a model Christian. Everyone had the most entire confidence in him as a man of integrity and honesty, and especially as a man of deep-toned piety.

I feel wholly incompetent to write anything that would do full justice to the memory of this noble man of God. I will not at present attempt an extended notice, and suffice for the present to say that he witnessed a good testimony for Jesus. In his case the grave had no victory, and death was robbed of his sting. In the last struggles of this earthly life the victor's smile crowned his face. There was no violence in the dissolution between soul and body. His departing spirit wrote one word like a halo across his countenance, and death crystalized it there. That word was "Peace."

SIMONTON FEMALE COLLEGE.

Mr. Editor: In these days when so much is said of "the higher education," I wish to bespeak a little attention to the claims of Simonton Female College, situated in the Piedmont section of our State.

It does not claim to be perfect in all its arrangements and appointments, nor do its teachers expect that it ever will be so, for they hope to make new improvements in each snccceding year.

The teachers of Simonton College make it their first aim to give their pupils thorough instruction in "the three R's," and in all English branches taught in first-class schools, those especially which can be of most practical benefit to women in the every-day life of after years. They believe, however, that women should, so far as possible, be ornamental as well as useful, and instructions are therefore given in music, drawing, painting—in oil and in water-colors—on silk, velvet, china, wood, &c., &c. An accomplished German lady, Mrs. Kliffmuller, assisted by her daughter, has charge of these departments. They have had the advantages of the best instruction in Germany and France, and I would state, for the benefit of the citizens in this free and enlightened Republic, that they took private lessons not long since, from the teacher who was giving lessons at the same time to the Crown Prince and Princess of Russia.

As regards the Principal, Mrs. Grant, and her sister Miss Mitchell, they need no introduction. They are too well known through this and other States as accomplished scholars. I do not believe, Mr. Editor, that there are any teachers in our land who do more thorongh work for their pupils. It is an old saying, that "you can lead a horse to water but you cannot make him drink." So they make it their aim to lead their pupils to the fountain of knowledge, and use all reasonable efforts, by mild but firm discipline, to enable them to receive the full benefit of the advantages offered. "Graduation" is not set before the pupil as the chief aim and end of school life, beyond which no further efforts will be needed for mental improvement. I believe the old saying to be good and true, that "home is the best place," bnt if there is an exception, I would make it in favor of Mrs. Grant's school. After four years observation I am prepared to say it is everything the home and the school ought to be.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

We are ashamed to say that Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine, edited by Dr. C. F. Deems, is the best magazine of its kind in the world: ashamed, because we have said that, or its equivalent, so often. Yet, to say less would not be just, and it would be hard indeed to say more. Let it stand as said, and keep it standing. The September number is on the table.

Ladies' Floral Cabinet is popular with the ladies and published by Henry T. Williams, New York. Price 12 cents, single number.

Ruth Erskine's Crosses is the name of an elegantly bonnd book of 428 pp. By Pansy. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co. Price, $1 50. We have not had time to read the book, bnt have no donbt that it is snch a book as will highly please its readers.

Ruth Erskine is a professed Christian. Her mother dying before she was old enough to appreciate her loss, she has been brought np tenderly by her father, a wealthy judge, and at the time the story opens, has arrived at womanhood, esteemed and beloved by those who know her. Snddenly a blow falls which, for a time, completely prostrates her, and puts to a severe test the principles she has so long professed. Her father confides to her the fact that years before, while she was a child, he had contracted a second marriage, which had been kept secret, and that now a sense of dnty compels him to openly acknowledge it, and take home his wife and daughter. Ruth learns too, that her stepmother, who is in a distant part of the country, is uneducated and unpolished, though she finds later that the qualities of her heart amply recompense for the lack of outward culture. The revelation is a terrible one to Ruth. Anger, sorrow, wounded pride, and a dread of the jars, mortifications and possible household troubles in the future, make her rebellious, and she resists the entreaties of her father to accept the condition of things in a proper spirit. The story shows how by degrees this spirit was overcome, and that what had seemed the greatest trial of life proved at last the greatest blessing.

SOUTHERN.

Rev. J. C. Caruthers, of Grenada, Miss., has been tendered a vacation till September 1st, by his congregation. His address will be Starkville, Miss.

Rev. J. J. Robinson, of Eufaula, Ala., has been spending some time in Atlanta, preaching in Presbyterian and Methodist churches.

Rev. N. Keff Smith, since taking charge of the Third Presbyterian church in Atlanta, Ga., has been greatly blessed in his labors. Eight members have been received on profession and fourteen by certificate.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Licentiate B. F. Thompson, of the Presbytery of Nashville, has taken charge of the churches of Madison and Hendersonville, in that Presbytery.

We learn that Mr. James King, of Jackson, La., bequeathed six thousand dollars to the Southwestern University. A few years since the late Mr. McKowen, of honored memory, the life-long friend of Mr. King, also left a handsome bequest to the University. Thus far, all the legacies the University has received have come from Louisiana.—Southwestern Presbyterian.

The congregation of Government Street church, Mobile, Ala., unanimously declined to accept the resignation of their pastor, Rev. Dr. Burgett, and he was requested to withdraw it. By a unanimous vote, they expressed regret that there had existed any cause for his tendering the resignation, furthermore assured him of their devotion, and pledged their hearty support. A vacation on account of his health was granted till November.

The South Franklin Street Presbyterian church, of Mobile, Ala., have adopted the following protest, which was read from the pulpit: "We, the members of South Franklin Street Presbyterian church, of Mobile, witnessing the great and increasing Sabbath desecration in our city, by godless people, in keeping open stores, giving excursions, playing of games, shooting practice, walking matches, and other like things, do greatly deplore this violation of God's law as well as our statute law, and do earnestly pray God to bring it to an end. In these our prayers and our endeavors to come unto the help of the Lord in the stopping of this evil, we ask to be joined by the Christian people of the city, as well as by all law-abiding citizens.

W. H. Richardson, Pastor."

The Rev. J. H. Higgins writes to the Texas Presbyterian: "On the first Sunday in June, I received into the Texarkana church six members, one by certificate, five on profession of faith, and baptized three of the five, and three children. On the fourth Sunday of June, I received and baptized a lady who was baptized in infancy in the Catholic Church; I also baptized her two children with another child. Our church in Texarkana is a live, growing church, has a splendid Sunday School, best in the city, numbering with teachers and scholars about one hundred. I preach for them once a month. They are very anxious to have it oftener—at least twice a month."

At the stated celebration of the Lord's Supper last Sunday, it was announced that the Session had admitted five persons, three by letter, and two by examination.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

The organization of the Berean Presbyterian colored church in this city, was an occasion which assembled a large number of Christians of all denominations. In the discourse, Dr. Palmer showed how the whole system of Presbyterian belief flows from the sentiment which exalts God and humbles the pride of man. Every one of our doctrines may be submitted to this test.—Southwestern Presbyterian.

GENERAL.

Rev. B. R. Hall, pastor of the Fifth Street Methodist church, of Wilmington, N. C., enjoys the affection of his congregation. On Thursday night last they paid him a visit and bestowed their goods on him abundantly.

A telegram was yesterday received from that distinguished divine Rev. Dr. T. E. Skinner, now at Gainesville, Ga., stating that he had received the call to the First Baptist church of this city. There seems to be no doubt of his acceptance of the call.—Raleigh Observer.

A Georgia Methodist has given $2,500 to build a church in Shanghai, China.

The Southern Churchman says: "The late Bishop Wilmer, of the Diocese of Louisiana, announced that during the twelve years of his episcopate, he received into our communion 400 Romanists. Two of our younger parishes in New York city, not over four years old and of respectable numbers, are formed entirely of the same converts. Three years ago St. Joseph's church, at Rome, N. Y., was formed of fifty families who came in a body from Romanism, and asked admission to our Church, and they now remain 'absolutely faithful.'"

A legacy of $3,000 from the estate of the late Abel Stearns, of Highgate, Va., has been received by the Methodist church of that city. It is to be used for support of preaching.

LUTHERAN.

The Swedish Lutherans of Grand Rapids, Mich., have just dedicated a new church at a cost of $2,748.

EPISCOPAL.

At the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity in Philadelphia, Rev. John G. Bryant was recently ordained. He expects to become a missionary in Liberia as soon as he has completed a brief course of medical studies. He is a native of North Carolina, but having been emancipated from slavery at an early age, went to Liberia.

The Rev. S. S. Harris, recently elected Bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Michigan, fired the first gun at the Star of the West, at Charleston, S. C., when that vessel was sent to the relief of Fort Sumpter. We find this in an exchange.

BAPTIST.

R. B. Hall for twenty-seven years a Methodist minister, has joined the Baptists and been ordained to their ministry. He is seventy-four years of age.

Nearly half of the denominational strength of the Free Will Baptists is in the New England States. They are put down in their register for 1879, at 75,686 members.

An exchange says: The church in Marysville, Ohio, Rev. William A. James, pastor, has realized thus far about $3,500 as the profits on a cook-book, which a few of its ladies have prepared and published. This money has been used to furnish an attractive brick church, and several hundred dollars are left for a parsonage fund.

The Chicago Plymouth Congregational church in the erection of its noble house of worship, incurred a heavy debt. A few days ago every dollar of that debt had been paid. This was brought about in a private way.

Bethel Academy, under the control of Rev. L. K. Glasgow, has commenced its operations with about sixty pupils. This school, as conducted, is a credit to the principal and a blessing to the neighborhood of its location, as the instructions given are thorough.—Southern Home.

In Harnett county, 25th July, Miss FLORA BUIE, for many years a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church.

"Many are the afflictions of the righteous; but the Lord delivereth him out of them all."

July 14th, Mrs. CATHERINE McLEAN, wife of Gen. A. D. McLean, of Harnett county.

A most estimable woman in all the relations of life: few leave behind them a record so blameless. To a naturally amiable and gentle temper, there was added the beautiful humility and piety of a true Christian. She wore habitually the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, altogether unassuming, but true to her convictions, clear, decided and outspoken at the call of duty.

She leaves her stricken husband and children to the covenanted care of the God she loved and served, and to the community in which she lived and the Church of which she was a member. She has given the rich legacy of a well spent life, the savor and example of a noble wife, mother, neighbor and Christian.

"Write, blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." * * * "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words."

N. McK.

Entered into rest, at the residence of her son, M. C. McNair, in Robeson county, on June 24th, 1879, after an illness of four days, JENNETT LITTLE McNAIR, aged 88 years.

In this aged saint was centered all the Christian graces which go to make up a perfect female character. She was gentle, amiable, industrious and deeply pious; ever thoughtful of others and anxious to contribute to their pleasure and comfort.

The Bible was her constant companion; she read it through several times, with Scott's Commentaries and Practical Observations.

Abiding, as it were, under the shadow of the rock, "resting in the Lord and waiting patiently for Him," she was spared far beyond the period allotted to our race, and "fell as a shock of corn fully ripe," and leaving with us the blessed assurance that our loss is her eternal gain.

She lived in this community 75 years, and "none knew her but to love her." She came as the wife of one of the oldest ministers of Centre Church, the Rev. Malcolm McNair. Her place in the Church militant is now exchanged for the employments and praises of the Church triumphant. With her the turmoils of a well spent life are forever past, and her happy spirit, borne upon the wings of faith, has ascended to unite with the General Assembly and Church of the first born. With us her memory will long be precious.

One Who Knew and Loved Her.

At his home, in Richmond county, on the 27th ult., Col. B. F. LITTLE, in the 49th year of his age.

He was taken sick on Sunday, the 20th. On Friday following, he received notice from his physicians that his case was critical. He received this information with a pleasant smile, without the least agitation or alarm, saying he had not before so regarded his case, not being aware of the giving way of his vital energies. On receiving this information, however, he calmly proceeded to set his house in order.

His family and friends having been called in to receive his last farewell, there ensued a scene not soon to be forgotten by those whose privilege it was to be present. Those who had read it could not fail to be forcibly reminded of Bickersteth's poetic ideal of a death-bed farewell, in his "Yesterday, To-day and Forever"—for his reached as high a perfection in actuality as Bickersteth conceived in ideal. His remarks were partly general, concerning the manner in which it becomes us to live in the world; and partly special, to each individual. As he descended from the general to individuals, with remarks beautifully appropriate and felicitously adapted to each individual case, from his most intimate associates down to his sorrowing servants and subordinates, one and another, on receiving what he said, was overwhelmed with emotion. He remained calm and self-possessed, his voice unfaltering and his diction, as it were, inspired. These remarks lasted over an hour, at the close of which he said, "Now I am exhausted—let me sleep."

After his sleep he seemed to revive a little, but soon sank back; and thus he continued, occasionally reviving, then sinking back, until the death stupor began to pass over him, under which he lay for three hours as one asleep, until he ceased to breathe, about 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Thus passed from earth a spirit so pure, so noble, so humble, so full of the virtues of this life, and of the graces of the immortal life, that those who followed him to the grave felt, amid their sorrow, a sense of exaltation and hope which can be imparted only by the purest Christian influence. He was much devoted to the Church of his choice—Presbyterian—in which he had lived a consistent and active member for the last 20 years of his life, contributing liberally of his ample means to the various benevolent causes of the Church, as well as to the poor of the surrounding country.

He was a man whom God had greatly blessed in every way, and who in humble thankfulness delighted in being the channel of blessings to others. Truly may it be said of him,

"Unskilful he to fawn, or seek for power,
By doctrines fashioned to the varying hour;
For other aims his heart had learned to prize,
More bent to raise the wretched than to rise."

But a life like his no single act can characterize. In every relation in life, in every sphere of usefulness, he manifested the same noble traits—admirable alike for the kindness of his heart, the gentleness of his nature, the meekness of his spirit, the largeness of his views, the soundness of his judgment, the lofty integrity of his character, the untiring zeal of his devotion to duty and the systematic and severe simplicity of his life. He has thus left his children a legacy far more precious than gems or stores of gold: to the world, an example which exalts the dignity of human nature, and to all sorrowing friends a memory as ennobling as it is precious.

While, therefore, we bow in humble submission to the will of God, we cannot but feel deeply bereaved by the loss of such a friend, in the prime of his life and in the midst of his usefulness—in the midst of his usefulness in his family, in his community, in the Church and in the State. But while his loss to us in all these spheres is great, yet we do not sorrow as those who have no hope. He died, as we would all wish to die, in great peace and composure of mind, in calm and vigorous exercise of that faith which overcomes the world and deprives death of its sting.

"Calm on the bosom of thy God,
Fair spirit rest thee now.
Even while with us thy footsteps trod,
His seal was on thy brow.
Dust to its narrow house beneath,
Soul to its place on high!
They that have seen thy look in death
No more may fear to die."

A Wise Deacon.

"Deacon Wilder, I want you to tell me how you kept yourself and family so well the past season, when all the rest of us have been sick so much, and have had the doctors running to us so long."

"Bro. Taylor, the answer is very easy. I used Hop Bitters in time and kept my family well and saved large doctor bills. Three dollars' worth of it kept us all well and able to work all the time, and I will warrant it has cost you and most of the neighbors one to two hundred dollars apiece to keep sick the same time. I guess you'll take my medicine hereafter." See other column.

Messrs. Polk, Miller & Co.:

My wife had Dyspepsia very bad. She has taken one bottle "Vest Pocket Cure," and I am frank to say it has almost entirely cured her. I would not be without it. Send me two more bottles.

Yours fraternally, J. M. TAYLOR, P. M.,

A VIRGINIA LADY, WITH SEVERAL YEARS experience in teaching, desires a situation in some pleasant family or school, for the next scholastic year. References exchanged. Address, TEACHER, County Line Cross Roads, Charlotte Co., Virginia.

Charlotte Institute.

The next session begins September 10th, 1879, and ends June 8th, 1880.

No Institute ever made more rapid progress in securing the confidence and esteem of its patrons than this one during the past session. Before the end of the scholastic year the number of its pupils, attracted by the well-earned reputation of the school, increased to 117, exclusive of the adult ladies who availed themselves of the superior advantages here given in the departments of Music, Art, and Modern Languages.

In no respect is this Institute inferior to any other first class boarding-school in the Southern or Middle States. Such testimonials as will satisfy an one as to the high standard and thoroughness of the instruction here are published in the catalogue. These testimonials are peculiarly trustworthy, inasmuch as they are given by gentlemen engaged in teaching in well known schools and colleges of the highest grade, and who are therefore qualified to express an opinion in regard to educational institutions.

The total expense for the half session or term will be $125. This amount includes board, with washing, fuel, lights, furnished room and servants' attendance, tuition in all the English branches, Latin, with either French or German, Calisthenics, text-books and stationery for school purposes. Pupils are not permitted to incur additional expense without permission of their parents. Parents are thus assured that their bills will not be greater than they expected.

Special arrangements and special terms for young ladies who wish to take only Music, Painting and Drawing, and Modern Languages, severally or collectively.

For further information address the Principal, Rev. WM. R. ATKINSON, Charlotte, N. C.

It does not interfere with cleaning the tubes.
It will not choke up, and requires no cleaning.
It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable, as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape.)
It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.
It is simple and durable and can be relied upon.

FOR THE FAMILY.

Two Days.

BY MRS. E. T. CORBETT.

No fairer day was ever seen—
The sky of cloudless blue—
The tall old trees like tents of green,
With sunlight sifting through.
But warmth and brightness brought no ease,
No soothing for my pain,
And singing birds and droning bees
Took up one sad refrain—
The echo of my longing heart,
They bore it back to me:
"The friend so long and truly loved
Is far away from thee!"

A winter morning, dark and gray—
The leaden sky hangs low,
The wailing wind rose with the day;
Upheaps the drifting snow.
I watch through half-blurred window pane
The sullen, driving storm,
But spite of tempest's howl and strain
My heart is light and warm.
These wild discordant voices blend
In one sweet melody:
"The friend so long and truly loved
Is coming back to me!"

Early Flowers.

"As the rain cometh down and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth and maketh it bring forth and bud."

The clear blue of the sky was dappled here and there with puffy white clouds. Jenny sat on the doorstep watching them. They seemed to her to be the snow-drifts of the past winter drifting away from their home to be packed away for another season, just as her mother packed up her furs and flannels.

"That is the little puff that lay so long on the gate post, and that is the bank that lay so long by the fence in the garden, and this one is the drift on the roadside," said Jenny, pointing with her finger to the western sky.

"I wonder where they go to, and if they get dumped down as Tom dumps the gravel on the walks, or if they come down in a snow storm. When they get all piled up what a big place full of snow they must make! How nice it would be to jump in it and shake it up as Mary Ann shakes up the feather bed! I wish I knew where the clouds were emptied. I guess I'll follow them and see."

Jenny rose up from the doorstep, and as fast as her little feet could carry, followed the lead of the beautiful banks of cloud that were driven along by the gentle breeze across the clear blue sky.

On and on she went until she reached the woods. Here the trees met overhead and partly shut out the clouds and partly obstructed her way in the attempt to follow. A new interest here presented. Hundreds of little wild flowers were springing up. Here in their mossy beds were groups of hepaticas, here wild violets, there snowy white blood-root.

Jenny thought no more of the clouds. She ran from flower to flower until both hands were full. Then she sat down on the ground to arrange them, quite forgetful that the sun was sinking in the western sky and the curtains of the twilight were being drawn around her.

There was one at home who had not forgotten her. Dear papa saw his little girl skipping along the farm lane, and when he heard that she was nowhere to be found he whistled to old Carlo the dog, and went in search of her. Carlo easily tracked her steps and just as she stood up with both hands full of flowers, wondering where she should go next, Carlo came bounding towards her, followed by papa.

"Where has my little girl been all the afternoon?" he inquired, taking her up in his arms and kissing the rosy cheek that now rested on his shoulders.

"I went to find the snow-drifts, papa. I saw them sailing on, on, on, and I thought if I could only run fast enough I might catch up in time to see them pitched down and packed away."

Papa laughed.

"But I lost sight of them in the woods, and I found so many beautiful flowers that at last I forgot all about them."

Now all this was told in a very childlike way, for Jenny was very little and could not talk quite straight yet.

"Does my little girl know she has caught last winter's snow-drifts?" asked papa. "God gave the snow and it went down into the ground and has come up again in these beautiful flowers."

"But the snow was very cold, papa, and I do not see the snow in these flowers, and—" Jenny was hesitating as she looked first at the flowers in her lap and then up towards the sky, from which all the snow-white clouds had disappeared, and—and—I think I like the flowers best."

"God is good to us, my darling; He orders all things for the best. Out of the cold and the storm He brings beauty and peace."

Jenny was too young to understand, but she heard her father say, "The snow from heaven returneth not thither, but watereth the earth and maketh it bring forth and bud"—and then her head sank down on his breast and he carried his sleeping little girl home.

No, Jenny could not understand about it then, but years afterwards, when her father was dead and many sorrows had come upon her, then she thought of the flowers that grew in the woods after the wintry storms, and the words came back to her, "God is good to us, my darling; He orders all things for the best," and she was comforted. Peace sprung up in her heart like the wild flowers that grew up after the snows had melted.

She opened her Bible and read the remainder of the verses which so many years before her father had repeated over her as a sleeping child: "So shall my word be that goeth out of my mouth: it shall not return to me void."

With wisdom born of experience she understood it now, and she could say, "It is true," for out of the word of the Lord she had found comfort.

The Tale of a Tub.

We believe it was Sydney Smith who said that in time of danger, absence of body is better than presence of mind, and most people will be inclined to agree with the genial divine. The following anecdote of his boyhood will show, however, that the future wit evinced the possession of the latter quality at an early age.

At the time of which we write, his father occupied, with his family, the habitable part of an old ruined castle near Woodford, in Essex. At a short distance from the castle was a sheet of water, large enough, in English eyes, to be dignified with the title of lake. Young Sydney, although unable to swim, was passionately fond of boating, but his aquatic aspirations were sadly restricted by the fact that he had no boat, and his father being decidedly opposed to his venturing upon the water at all, was not likely to provide one for him.

In this dilemma Sydney's inventive genius soon found a way of overcoming the difficulty. Taking his little sister into his confidence, he surreptitiously possessed himself of a large tub from the castle laundry, and persuading her to accompany him, launched it upon the lake. Provided with a small piece of board as a paddle, the adventurous young navigator managed to paddle his unwieldy craft to the very middle of the lake.

He was greatly elated by his success, and waved his paddle triumphantly aloft with the air of a conqueror. Alas! it slipped from his hand, fell into the water and floated off beyond his reach, leaving him without any means of propulsion, at the mercy of the winds and waves. There was nothing left but to cultivate patience, and wait for succor; so, like a new Diogenes, he remained seated in his tub, trying to calm the fears of his sister, who was now badly frightened and crying bitterly.

It was not long before the perilous position of the two children was noticed from the house, and soon the father and mother, with all the household at their heels, ran down to the bank in great alarm. Indeed, the situation was one of real peril. The crank, top-heavy craft in which they were embarked seemed ready to capsize every instant, and the agonized father could think of no means of rescuing his darlings that did not involve so much loss of time as to invite a catastrophe.

A favorite dog had followed the folks to the shore, and as if understanding that something was amiss, several times plunged into the water, and after swimming out a little way returned, apparently conscious of his inability to help.

Young Sydney, however, who had remained cool and collected, despite the lamentations of his mother and the others, suddenly exclaimed: "Get a rope, father, get a rope and tie it to Jack's collar; perhaps I can call him to me!"

His father, filled with admiration for the courage and self-possession of the boy, quickly procured a rope, and, tying one end to Jack's collar, pointed to the tub, while Sydney at the same time called and whistled to the dog. The intelligent animal at once sprang into the water and swam out towards the tub, while Mr. Smith paid out the rope from the shore, and Sydney encouraged the dog with shouts of "Here Jack! Here Jack! Good dog! Good fellow!" and the like. It was a long swim, and the anxious watchers hardly hoped that the dog could accomplish it; but he stuck to his task bravely, and at length reached the tub, and was seized by the collar by his delighted young master. Untying the rope from the dog's neck, Sydney fastened it to the tub, and was speedily drawn to the shore, where the children were instantly clasped in the arms of their overjoyed parents.

Brute Reason.

A friend sends us the following as a case hardly short of reason:

Under the caption "Antics of Animals," I was lately reading in the Lynchburg News a collection of short articles, many of which showed brute instinct—as men call it—in an agreeable light, and some of which seem to be close of kin to man's "boasted reason." What I am about to relate is of the same character.

A gentleman living in Southwestern Virginia owns a female pointer, which, last fall, was the mother of seven pups. The creek upon which the gentleman's dwelling is located was, in September last, visited by an unprecedented freshet, by which the house was surrounded, and the premises completely flooded. The water reached an empty corn crib, in which the helpless canine family were housed, and covered the floor to the depth of a foot or more. The mother, to save them, carried them to a barn, more than one hundred yards off, having to swim with them nearly the whole distance, and deposited them beyond the reach of the water. They were found next day—only two alive, and they subsequently died; the others had probably been drowned on the passage. Taking them one at a time, the poor creature had been compelled to swim nearly a mile.

The freshet having carried off large quantities of fencing, had left ungathered crops exposed, and all the hogs were turned into the barn yard. That poor brute stood guard over her dead family for a week, and would not suffer man or beast to approach them. B.

Nicknames of British Regiments.

The brave but luckless Twenty-fourth are known as Howard's Greens, from their grass-green facings, and the name of an officer who led them for twenty years in the last century. It is a popular fallacy to imagine that the Twenty-eighth borrow their designation of the Old Braggs from the exhibition of a spirit of boasting or braggadocio. Bragg was their Colonel from 1734 to 1751, whence the soubriquet. They are also known as the Slashers, but wherefore is uncertain. Some authorities believe that they got their title from their dash at the passage of the River Brunx, in the American war of Independence; others say it arose from a party of the officers having disguised themselves as Indians, and having cut off the ears of a magistrate who had refused quarters to the women of the regiment during the trying winter. The Thirty-first are denominated the Young Buffs, having been mistaken for the Third at the battle of Dettington. The whimsical cognomen of the Havercake Lads is conferred on the Twenty-third, from a habit of the Sergeant Snaps of the corps to entice recruits by displaying an oat-cake spitted on their swords. The Thirty-fifth used to be termed the Orange Lilies; the Thirty-sixth the Saucy Greens; the Thirty-eighth the Pump and Tortoise, on account of their sobriety and the slowness of their movements when stationed once at Malta, and the Thirty-ninth Sankey's Horse, from the circumstances of their having been once mounted on mules on a forced march when commanded by Colonel Sankey; they are also called the Green Linnets, from their pea-green facings. A punning version of its number, XL., namely, the Excellers; is fixed on the Fortieth. The renowned Forty-second retains its designation of the Black Watch, the independent Scotch companies from which it was formed having been called so on account of their dark tartans. The phrase Light Bobs marks out the Forty-third, albeit it is claimed by all light infantry soldiers. The Forty-fourth swell with natural vanity over the Old Stubborns, gained in the Peninsula. The classical epithet of the Lacedemonians was an alias of the Forty-sixth, a pedantic officer having harangued his bravo boys on the beauties of Spartan discipline while shot and shell were flying around. It would be hard to discover the Forty-seventh under the cognomen of the Cauliflowers; and assuredly no friend of the gallant Fiftieth would ever dream of referring to it either as the Blind or the Dirty Half Hundred. Similar to the Excellers in the mode of origin of their sobriquet are the Kolis, as the Fifty-first are called from the initials of the title, King's Own Light Infantry. "Die hard, my men, die hard," cried the heroic Inglis to the Fifty-seventh at Albnera, and ever since the plucky West Middlesex is the Die Hards.—All the Year Round.

Preserving Cleopatra's Needle.

The London Metropolitan Board of Works recently took in hand the subject of preserving Cleopatra's Needle, which had caused so much trouble to float to its destination. After consultation with experts, it was decided to grant to one Henry Browning the job of cleaning and coating the monolith with a solution of his own invention. The effect, says the Times, has exceeded the most sanguine expectations. In operating upon the granite, Mr. Browning first gave it a thorough cleansing, removing all the sooty and greasy matters from the surface, and indurated it with his invisible preservative solution. The effect has been to give freshness to the granite as if only just chiseled from the rock, retaining the original color, disclosing the several veins, the white spar shining in the sun's rays like crystals, and exhibiting the polished portions as they formerly existed. More than this, the "intaglis," or the hieroglyphic engravings, come out far more pointedly than before, and the injuries the stone has received are now plainly distinguishable from the hieroglyphics. The solution soaks well into the pores of the granite, and the best authorities consider that it will have the effect of thoroughly preserving the monolith for centuries yet to come.—Christian Union.

Plowing by Electricity.

Plowing by steam has many difficulties attending it, and two French engineers not unknown to fame have invented a machine for plowing by electricity. The Scientific American says that they have devised an arrangement to utilize the motive power in a fixed position, so as to do the work of several adjacent farms through the medium of electricity. They have adopted the Gramme dynamo-electric machine for the generation of electricity, and similar machines as the electro-dynamic agent for reconversion of the electricity, conveyed to any required distance by cables, into motive power.

An engine in a sugar factory, situated 1,300 feet from the field, gave motion to the dynamo-electric machines which supplied the electricity, about eight horse-power being employed. When in light ground two furrows have been made, but in heavy ground only one, the power transmitted to the plow being but that of three or four horses. The designers will, however, soon have machinery ready which will enable them to use a four furrow plow.

The gramme machines at the works were driven 1,600 revolutions per minute, while those on the windlasses made 800 per minute. The pulleys, made 133 revolutions per minute, and the hauling drums 14 and 27 under the slow and fast speeds respectively, the corresponding speeds of the plow being 164 and 266 feet per minute. The furrows were 10 8 inches wide and 7·87 inches deep. Making two furrows, about 24 square yards were plowed per minute. It was found that about 50 per cent. of the work of the fixed engine was realized on the field, and that the efficiency of the electro-dynamic apparatus is from 30 to 60 per cent. according to the distance of transmission.

Bank of England Notes.

The financial editor of the Philadelphia Ledger states, on the authority of official report, that the notes of the Bank of England are made from pure white linen cuttings, never from rags that have been worn. They have been manufactured for nearly two hundred years by the same family, the Portals, Protestant refugees. So carefully is the paper prepared that even the number of dips into the pulp made by each workman is registered on a dial by machinery, and the sheets are carefully counted and booked to each person through whose hands they pass. The printing is done by a most curious process in Mr. Coe's department within the bank building. There is an elaborate arrangement for securing that no note shall be exactly like any other in existence. Consequently there never was a duplicate of a Bank of England note except by forgery. According to the City Press the stock of paid notes of seven years is about 94,000,000 in number and they fill 18,000 boxes, which, if placed side by side, would reach three miles. The notes placed in a pile would be eight miles high; or if joined end to end would form a ribbon 15,000 miles long; their superficial extent is more than that of Hyde Park; their original value was over $15,000,000,000, and their weight over one hundred and twelve tons.—Scientific American.

"Who Will Carry Me Over."

A few years ago, in a New England village, a little boy lay upon his death-bed. Starting suddenly up, he exclaimed: "Oh! mother, I see such a beautiful country, and so many little children, who are beckoning me to them; but there are high mountains between us, too high for me to climb. Who will carry me over?" After thus expressing himself, he leaned back on his pillow, and for awhile seemed to be in deep thought, when, once more arousing and stretching out his little hands, he cried, as loud as his feeble voice would permit:

"Mother, mother, the strong man's come to carry me over the mountain!" He was peacefully asleep. The strong man had indeed, come to carry the little one over.

Lemon Verbena.

The well-known fragrant, sweet-scented, or lemon verbena (Lippia citriodora) is regarded among the Spanish people as a fine stomachic and cordial. It is either used in the form of a cold decoction, sweetened, or five or six leaves are put into a tea-cup, and hot tea poured upon them. The author of a recent work, "Among the Spanish People," says that the flavor of the tea thus prepared "is simply delicious, and no one who has drunk his Pekoe with it will ever again drink it without a sprig of lemon verbena." And he further makes a statement, more important than all the rest, if true, that is, that if this decoction be used one need "never suffer from flatulence, never be made nervous or old-maidish, never have cholera, diarrhea, or loss of appetite."

A Brave Wife.

Lord Beaconsfield, when Mr. Disraeli, was once driving down to the House of Commons with his wife. Deeply immersed in cogitation, he alighted from his brougham and closed the door on one of his wife's fingers. Although suffering great pain, she uttered no cry until he was in the lobby, out of earshot. Then she summoned the footman to open the door, released her imprisoned finger, and fainted. She is reported to have said to Mr. Disraeli, when telling him next morning of the mishap, "I would not have cried out for the world. In thinking of my sufferings, you would have been so agitated that very probably the most salient points of the important speech you were about to deliver would have been omitted."

We are pleased to announce that Mr. Donald McRae, of this city, has been appointed by Governor Jarvis' Commissioner of the Exhibition" from the State of North Carolina for the World's Fair, to be held in the city of New York in 1883. This appointment was made on the recommendation of the Presidents of the Chamber of Commerce, Produce Exchange and Board of Trade, who had been requested by the Governor to make a suitable recommendation for the position. We are glad to know that Mr. McRae has consented to accept, as he will represent North Carolina as she should be represented, and will reflect credit upon the State in holding this representative position.—Star.

Some parties in San Francisco, who have been working up the matter for some time past, have discovered the wreck of the steamer Brother Jonathan, which foundered off Point St. George, near Crescent City, in July, 1865. She lies in an upright position in about twenty-two fathoms of water, and about fifty fathoms from the submerged rock on which she is supposed to have struck. There were about one million dollars in Treasury notes and bullion in her safe, and the finders are fitting out an expedition for the recovery of the treasure, which belonged to the government, but whose claim is held to have lapsed on the expiration of ten years after loss.

Factory Facts.

Close confinement, careful attention to all factory work, gives the operatives palid faces, poor appetite, languid, miserable feeling, poor blood, inactive liver, kidneys and urinary troubles, and all the physicians and medicine in the world cannot help them unless they get out doors or use Hop Bitters, made of the purest and best of remedies, and especially for such cases, having abundance of health, sunshine and rosy cheeks in them. None need suffer if the if they will use them freely. They cost but a trifle. See another column.

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER!

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventative for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. They were used during last season in New Orleans very successfully. The common method of using them was to apply them over the stomach, changing them every week. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS and seem to destroy the poison. One reason why they are of special value is that they stimulate the digestion, and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison. They are a cheap and almost certain preventative. Ask your physician about them. Benson's Capsine Plasters are a sure preventative and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price 25 cents.

COMMENTARIES ON THE BIBLE.

NO. II.

Rev. L. C. Vass, Newbern, N. C.:

4. Continuing the description of commentaries on the whole Bible, the next calling for attention is the voluminous work of Lange, the American edition in English dress, with various additions and corrections, under the editorial supervision of Dr. Philip Scharf, aided by some of the most eminent biblical scholars of the United States.

The conception of such a work, proposing a combination of critical, exegetical, doctrinal and practical comment and exposition, is worthy of high commendation. It must, however, be at once apparent, that the enterprise involves manifest disadvantages. It could hardly be practicable, by the most careful supervision and the utmost freedom granted by authors to the editor, to receive a proper measure of homegeniety. Then the effort to reproduce the doctrinal and homiletic views of the German Pietists has resulted in the addition to the work of an immense amount of rather commonplace, and sometimes, jejune remarks. However much we may sympathise with the pious sentiments, expressed in these compositions, not only do they fail to impress the American reader with any really valuable thought, but the style is entirely out of harmony with the literary taste of our day. This latter fact might not serve to lessen the sentiments expressed, were such invested with any specially intrinsic merit. The notes of various readings furnish to all critical readers of the Bible in the original langnages very excellent material for forming sound judgment. The Exegeses, even with emendations and cantions, by the American editor and his aids, are by no means always safe. We are often rather startled by remarks in this part of the commentaries, which, though not impeaching the received theory of inspiration, seem more in sympathy with "advanced thought" than with our theological teachings.

Still the work has in itself a safe-guard, in that by its very voluminous size and high price it is placed beyond the reach of the great mass of those who might be misled by the tone and scope of Exegeses, which have been just criticised. And while some such persons may yet procure any volume or volumes of the entire work, there is another consideration in the incomplete development of views which might prove deleterious, affording ground of hope that very few readers of ordinary intelligence and scholarship will receive much injury. It is to be hoped that the learned and industrious editor will find time and sufficient assistance to condense the twenty-four volumes into about four, in an abridged and expurgated edition.

5. The Speaker's Commentary, prepared under the suggestion of the Speaker of the House of Commons of Great Britain, and edited by Dr. Coke, is a work somewhat of the plan of Lange's; but not liable to the objections on account of needless hulk, nor to the criticisms on account of dangerous tendencies. The praiseworthy effort to be concise, along with the equally commendable purpose to present a work fully abreast with the results of historical and scientific investigation and the labors of modern Biblical critics, has exposed the writers in many cases to the charge of a defective discussion and injurious brevity. While the errours of unfriendly criticism have been prevented, there has been an absence of sufficiently explicit and full preventation of the refutation desired and purposed. Still there is a prevalent spirit of candor, fairness and piety, with sound and conservative exposition, set forth in a fresh and pleasing style, which renders the work a really valuable contribution to the study of Scripture.

6. D'Oyley and Mant, in two quarto volumes, published by the "Society for Propagating Christian Knowledge," is a commentary of the same general plan and purpose with the preceding. The work, however, has not obtained very wide or general circulation. The writers, as those of the "Speaker's" commentary, were mostly if not all, of the Church of England. It must not be supposed that they have been necessarily sectarian—at all events anything of this sort to an offensive degree occurs so rarely, if ever, as to escape attention by the occasional reader.

7. A Commentary, the result of the joint labors of Patrick, South, Whitby, Arnold and Lanman, designed rather for popular than professional use, is easily accessible, for ministers, but to those owning Scott's and Henry's commentaries, especially Scott's, this work would not have any special advantage. It belongs to the class of evangelical commentaries, but readers must be watchful against the interpretations of some of these authors, known to have been men of at least moderate Armenian views.

8. Matthew Poole's learned work entitled Synopsis Criticorum, has long held a deservedly high place in the estimation of Biblical scholars. It has been long ont of print, but copies are still to be had, and often on moderate terms. The great value of this bulky work, in five large folio volumes, in not very large print, is now chiefly to be found in the full view presented of the state of Biblical scholarship in Poole's day. But its critical material has been either superseded by that of better character or by its absorption in later works.

9. Matthew Poole's Commentary on the Bible in English, known as "Annotations," is not one abridgment, nor a translation of the "Synopsis" bnt designed to be a compendious presentation of the most advanced class of expositions for popular nse in that day. Only the Old Testament as far as Isaiah, chapter lviii, was Poole's work. The rest was that of various other authors.

10-11. This letter may be closed by a brief notice of the commentaries of Dr. Thomas Scott and of Matthew Henry. Both are too well known to need words of commendation; and had not a certain class of writers rather depreciated their valne, nothing would be required beyond the mention of the works.

Dr. Scott's "Notes" and "Observations" are well worth the attention of onr young ministers, and those editions of the work, which contain his critical "notes" on the text of the New Testament in the Greek, are exceedingly valuable. Dr. Scott was a moderate Calvinist, but sound, and a mere moderate Episcopalian, anticipating the expression of the true origin and nature of Diocesan Episcopacy (see notes on Acts 20: xvii, and parallel passages) by Dean Stanly and Dr. Ellicot, which have recently arrested such notice.

Matthew Henry gives in clear and forcible terms, and often with much quaintness, the more excellent exposition, without troubling us with the critical grounds, on which it is based. Neither Scott nor Henry supersede more modern works on particular portions of Scripture, especially the Messianic Psalms and unfulfilled prophecy. The memorable failure of historical facts to justify the interpretations of many writers of their day and standing, while tending to weaken our confidence in their general ability may well serve to illustrate the need of special caution, in handling such portions of Scriptnre.

12. The Commentary of DeGill falls in as to ability and utility, with most of those now named. Except to those interested in his peculiar views as a Baptist, the addition of his work to either Poole, or Scott, or Henry, would not be desirable.

Yours truly,
B. M. SMITH.

"THE LIGHT: IS IT WANING?"

MR. EDITOR:—This is a little book which I have read with great pleasure, and I hope with some profit, and which I wish to recommend to my brethren in the ministry, whether preaching or ruling elders.

Abont the year 1850, I made a little speech in Orange Presbytery on the efficiency, or rather inefficiency, of the ministry, and in it recommended a book just come ont which I had read with absorbing interest, "An Earnest Ministry," by John Angell James. For many years afterwards those of the brethren who bought and read it never met me without thanking me as heartily for recommending the book as if I had made it a present to them. The effects on their own lives and on their preaching was so marked as to be easily observed, while the whole style of their preaching—its efficiency and success—was known and felt by many. I have often thought since that that little speech was about the best preaching I ever did, for its effects were widespread and lasting. And I thank God to this day that He put it into my heart to make it, and at the proper time.

Now, brethren, I honestly believe that this little book—"Is the Light Waning?"—will do as much good in these times as James's "Earnest Ministry" did at the time the brethren of Orange Presbytery bought it and read it so eagerly. When I finished reading the book the other day, I said to my son: "If I had a hundred dollars, I would buy this book and make it a present to every member of the Synod." And so I would, for I am sure I could not spend the money better. But its value cannot be estimated by money. It has a valne that no money can buy. Only let the truths of this book (its author is the lamented A. Flinn Dickson, our own countryman, whom many knew only to love and admire), let the truths of this book, I say, be deeply imbedded in the hearts and minds of our brethren—let them but imbibe the self-consecrating spirit which it inculcates, and let this spirit bear them away with itself in the great work of the ministry, and our churches would soon put on a new face—would soon wear another respect. Instead of the sighs, and the despondencies, and the wailings over a languishing church, there would be rejoicing and congratulations over the church revived. Then would be accomplished the utterance of the prophet almost literally: "The Lord will comfort Zion—he will comfort all her waste places—he will make her wilderness as Eden, and her desert as the garden of the Lord; joy and gladness shall be found therein—thanksgiving and the voice of melody."

Buy the book, dear brethren, and read it slowly, if you can; but that you can't do, if there is any life in you. But read it carefully, read it prayerfully, ponder it thoroughly; or as the Episcopal prayer-book says in one of its collects, "read, mark, learn and inwardly digest" its contents, and if "your profiting does not appear unto all," then I am no prophet. Do so, brethren, and you will never regret it, but on the other hand, like the brethren of Orange Presbytery some thirty years ago, you will, as long as you live, thank your old friend and brother.

THE FUNCTION OF PRAYER.

Because prayer is efficacious, it does not follow that there is no limit to its efficacy. It is a means of grace divinely appointed indeed; but it has been appointed for a specific purpose. When we ascertain this purpose, we know the function of prayer. To make use of it for any other, would be as inappropriate as to use the eye for hearing or the ear for seeing. Every Christian, then, needs to know what is the exact function of prayer.

We indicate the function of prayer when we say that prayer is designed, not to supersede, but to complete, human labor. Its efficacy begins where the power of the petitioner ends, and it does not begin before. It was appointed, not to take the place of human activity but to effect that which no human activity can accomplish. An example will make this truth clear. When we offer the petition, "Give us this day our daily bread," we do not overcome the necessity of laboring for that bread to the extent of our ability. Bnt we know that, labor as faithfully as we will, contingencies over which we have not the least control may easily occur between our labor and the enjoyment of the fruits of it, which, if they occur, will make the latter impossible. Because these lie beyond the field in which our power is efficacious, we invoke the power of God. Or we may be powerless to labor, and therefore we may call on God for an extraordinary display of his power. This, then, is the function of prayer. It does not supersede human activity; but, by God's appointment, complements it with the power of God himself. And this is the view of prayer which Paul presents in one of the most eloqnent passages to be found in the New Testament. In this passage (Ephesians vi: 11-18), he portrays the Christian as clothed in the armor and bearing the weapons of a soldier of the Empire. He describes the number and the prowess of the foes he must meet, and he exhorts those to whom he is writing to see to it that they are both armed and panoplied. Bnt it is not until he supposes them to be ready thns to put forth their own strength that he bids them nse this effective aid, in the words "praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit."

We refer to this subject because there are not wanting signs that many Christians suffer with intellectnal confusion at just this point. And this confusion is promoted by the strong and immanent desire of sinful man to adopt any expedient that will obviate the necessity of Christian work. We would not, of conrse, write one word intended or calculated to weaken any one's faith in the power of prayer when properly offered. God urges us to pray with faith and importunity. He assures us that He will answer our petitions. He does not limit the subject of our petition to our spiritual needs. He would have us implore Him for material benefits as well as for the influence of the Holy Ghost. Bnt nowhere does He teach us that prayer may take the place of honest, hearty work. Our work should be done in a prayerful spirit indeed; bnt our prayers should be offered while we are working as well as before we begin work, and when we have done our utmost. This right of petitioning God was never meant to lead us to abate one jot of labor or of struggle. God aids those who aid themselves. He works within us to will and to do of his good pleasure, while we are working ont our own salvation. He will hear our prayers for holiness only while we struggle against the impellings of the sin within us and the temptations of sin abont us. He will regard our supplications for the conversion of the world, only as he sees us laboring in that direction. The prayer of faith, which he regards, is the prayer of the faithful; who is ready to do and dare, to undergo and overcome, until human resources are exhausted. It is man's extremity that is God's opportunity.

Prayer being designed, not as a substitute for, but as the complement of human power, it is for us to give and labor and sacrifice while we pray, to trust in the meantime that our heavenly Father will manifold our little gifts from His countless treasures; will energize our poor labors by the forth-putting of his omnipotence; and will make acceptable our sacrifices through the power of the Holy Ghost. Such are the prayers which God loves to answer.—S. S.. Times.

FAITH.

God must change before He will let a sinner perish who trusts in Christ. O, it is wonderful what power faith has! I recollect standing at the Mansion House one day, waiting to cross over to the other side, when the omnibuses were coming from all the corners of the compass, and I was looking for an opportunity to run in and out between them. A blind man came up and said, "I am sure you will lead me across; I am sure you will lead me across." I am sure I did not want the job; but I was quite sure that, if the blind man was sure I would do it, I could not decline to do it; and did it accordingly. I did not like to have a blind man's confidence thrown away. It seemed as if his confidence was my compulsion. And O, blind sinner, lay hold upon the skirts of Christ to-night, and say, "Jesus, I believe Thou wilt lead me into heaven. At any rate, I mean to trust Thee to do it. I have done with saving myself, and I mean to rely on Thee and on Thee only." I tell you, your faith will compel Him: your trust shall hold him fast. He will do any thing for faith. Was He not overcome at the brook Jabbok by Jacob's faith? Did not faith in the woman that touched the hem of His garment win a cure? And when He spoke to the Syro-Phœnician woman, and called her a dog, did she not win healing for her daughter by the brave stand she made by her faith? The Lord waiteth to be gracious! Trust Him, sinner. The Lord help you to do so; and He shall have the glory, for ever and ever!—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

THE FLASK OF A GEM.

An American travelling by himself in the Holy Land was taken ill of malarial fever at Jerusalem.

As he lay on his lonely couch, nearly hopeless of recovery, a stranger called to see him, and was admitted. Without giving his name, he proposed reading a passage from the Scriptures. He selected a short, beautiful Psalm, and having finished the reading, retired in the same quiet way he had entered. But the effect on the sufferer was powerful. Light broke through the gloom; and there arose in his soul a calm trust in Israel's Keeper. From that time the force of his disease abated, and his restoration was finally complete.

The Psalm chosen by the unknown visitor was the one hundred and twenty-first, and the name of the traveller, Dr. Joseph A. Seiss, Lutheran minister of Philadelphia.—Christian Intelligencer.

QUIET LIVES.

In a valley, centuries ago,
Grew a little fern leaf, green and slender—
Veining delicate and fibres tender,
Waving when the winds crept down so low,
Rushes tall, and moss and grass grew round it,
Playful sunbeams darted in and found it:
Drops of dew stole down by night and crowned it:
But no foot of man e'er came that way;
Earth was young and keeping holiday.

Unless? Lost? There came a thoughtful man;
Searching nature's secrets far and deep;
From a fissure in a rocky steep
He withdrew a stone o'er which there ran
Fairy pencillings, a quaint design,
Leafage veining, fibres clear and fine,
And the fern's life lay in every line!
So, I think, God hides some souls away,
Sweetly to surprise us the last day!

PUTTING OFF.

A preacher determined to preach on the text. "Now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation." Whilst in his study, thinking, he fell asleep and dreamed that he was carried into hell and set down in the midst of a conclave of lost spirits. They were assembled to devise means whereby they might get at the souls of men. One rose and said, "I will go to the earth and tell men that the Bible is all a fable—that it is not divinely appointed of God." No, that would not do.

Another said, "Let me go. I will tell them that there is no God, no Saviour, no heaven, no hell," and at the last words a fiendish smile lighted up all their countenances. "No, that will not do; we cannot make men believe that."

Suddenly one arose, and with a wise mien, like the serpent of old, suggested: "No, I will journey to the world of men and tell them that there is a God, that there is a Saviour, that there is a heaven—yes, and a hell too—but I'll tell them there is no hurry; to-morrow will do; it will be 'even as to-day;'" and they sent him.—Exchange.

WIFE.

What do you think the beautiful word "wife" comes from? It is the word in which the English and Latin languages conquered the French and Greek. I hope the French will some day get a word for it instead of that dreadful word femme. Bnt what do you think it comes from? The great value of Saxon words is that they mean something. Wife means "weaver." You must either be housewives or housemoths; remember that. In the deep sense, you must either weave men's fortunes, or embroider them, or feed upon and bring them to decay. Wherever a true wife comes, home is awake around her. The stars may be over her head, the glow-worm in the night-cold grass may be the fire at her foot; but home is where she is; and for a noble woman it stretches far around her, better than houses ceiled with cedar and painted with vermilion, shedding its quiet light far for those who are else homeless. This I believe to be the woman's true place and power.—Exchange.

GOD LOVES.

Do your gods love you?" asked a missionary. "The gods never think of loving," was the cheerful answer. The missionary repeated the sixteenth verse of the third chapter of St. John's Gospel: "For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but should have everlasting life." "Read it again," asked the arrested pagan. "That is large light—read it again." A third time the blessed words were repeated, and with this emphatic response: "That is true—I feel it."

CHILDREN.

Children hunger after new things and new ideas. They will learn with pleasure from the lips of parents what they deem drudgery to learn from books, and even if they have the misfortune to be deprived of many educational advantages they will grow up intelligent if they enjoy in childhood the privilege of listening to the conversation of intelligent people. Let them have many opportunities of learning in this way. Be kind to them, and don't think it beneath you to answer their little questions, for they proceed from an implanted faculty which every true man and woman should take delight in gratifying.

AFTER DARK.

The difference between day and night is universally perceived and universally acknowledged, and the varieties of its effects still afford a large field for intelligent observation.

We shall not now go into this subject extensively, showing the reciprocal influence of the physical and psychical natures of man and the modification of this influence by broad daylight and by dark night. There is one point, however, to which we wish to call special attention, and that is the relation of night to children in cities.

We say in cities, because ordinarily in the country there is but one thing for a child to do at night, namely, stay in the house. Another reason is that the writer, alas! knows very little of childlife in the country. He knows something of it in the city. He was born in a city. Until he was ten years of age he knew nothing of country life. He has spent more than half his life in cities in Europe and America. This has given him some experience and some opportunity for observation. He has watched also the growth of many children in many families, and has taken pains to notice the effect of different kinds of culture.

Almost invariably boys who have been allowed to roam free at night have come to moral shipwreck and social destruction. The exceptions have been where there was a wholesome temperament, a strong intellect, and peculiar social influences. Men and boys, women and girls, whatever may have been their culture, feel that there is something in the streets at night different from that which is in the day—something that excites apprehension, or creates alarm, or gives license. Boys that are demure by day will say things at night they would blush to utter in the daylight.

The result of our observation is the clear conviction that it is absolutely necessary that parents know exactly where their children are from sundown to sunrise. No boy ought to be allowed to go alone off the pavement of his father's house after sundown. It ought not to be a hard restriction; to a boy thus trained from infancy it will not be. It is unnatural that a child should want to go off to play in the dark with other children. The desire never comes until the child has begun to be corrupt. Sometimes, for quiet, parents will allow their children to go "round the corner" to play with some other children. Sometimes this is allowed through mere carelessness. We never knew it to fail to end disastrously. We have in our mind one or two striking cases in which weak mothers have pleaded for this liberty for their children, and are now reaping the bitter fruits.

Childhood should be trained with the gentleness of love and the firmness of sagacious authority, bnt whether these are at the command of the parent or not, there is one rule absolutely indispensable for the safety of the child and the honor of the family, namely, that while the child is small he shall never go off the lot without his parents or some other proper guardian; and that when he grows older, until he becomes of age, his parents ought to know where he is every moment of his time, and ought to know that he is in bed before 11 o'clock. Where this cannot be secured by the exercise of gentleness it must be obtained by authority. A refractory child may make the house hot if he is kept in it, but better endure eight or ten years of such heat than to have that child ruined, and all the family suffer through the remainder of his career.

We have spoken of boys because we do not suppose that any girls of decent families are allowed to be on the streets after dark.

We could enforce this lesson by statements of harrowing cases, if these were necessary. We do earnestly beseech parents who read this article to lay it to heart, to begin to make observations upon the condition of their children at night, to find where they are, and to prepare to answer to God our Heavenly Father for the painstaking care which they give to their children.—C. F. Deems.

A VALUABLE RELIC.

An exceedingly interesting and valuable relic has been discovered by the Rev. T. Somerville of Glasgow. It is no less than one of the original copies of the Solomon League and Covenant, which were sent all over Scotland for subscription. It is a small quarto, dated 1648. After the text of the Covenant are double columns of names, among them the reputed grandson of Queen Mary, and a famous chaplain in the army of Gustavus Adolphus. There are also the names of elders and deacons, some still represented by leading families in Scotland. It appears that a bankrupt tradesman, about to emigrate to the other side of the world, found this curious and precious document, in cleaning out his household effects, between the leaves of an old grandfather's Bible, and not wishing to take it out of the country sold it to Mr. Somerville. The latter has added it to the few other surviving copies of the famous document in the Advocate's Library in Edinburgh. The signatures show a diversity of quaint penmanship, and now and then "his mark," certified to by a notary, shows that some of the sturdy old Covenanters could not write their names.—Christian Intelligencer.

JUSTICE AND PRAYER.

"One hour of justice," said Mohammed, "is worth seventy years of prayer." But that is not the wise word of a prophet or even of a philosopher; it is the snap-judgment of an enthusiast. There is no true prayer that does not make way for justice; no man truly prays who does not seek to be made more just. Seventy years of genuine prayer will produce a great many hours of justice.—Sunday Afternoon.

AN AMERICAN MINISTER AMONG THE EDINBURGH CHURCHES.

The Rev. Dr. John F. Hust, an American divine, who is making a tour of Europe, recently spent a few days in Edinburgh. In writing to a New York paper, he says:

In Edinburgh one gets an excellent opportunity to arrive at a fair estimate of the Scotch pulpit. That city is not only the Athens of Scotland and the whole country north of London, bnt in many respects it is, as well, the religions centre. It is busy in religious work from morning to night. No stranger can walk its streets without being convinced of the intensity of its Christian life. It is the one place where, above all others, my young companions—Messrs. Ferry and Coit—and myself have come in contact with street preaching. Young men had their Bibles with them, read short passages, sang snatches of familiar hymns, made brief expositions, and then went off to other parts of the city, to do the same work in the marketplaces and street corners. The Edinburgh pulpit has less stir and dash than that of London, but is exceedingly scriptural, and the sermons are thoroughly wrought ont. The pastor of the venerable St. Giles' Church, Dr. Lees, preached a sermon on the charity that never fails, which had none of the traditional divisions, and was ornate, even to the Guthrie standard, but was delivered in such an unimpassioned style that the wonder was that the congregation could hear with any interest at all. But one thing strikes all strangers from America here in the public services—the people come to hear the gospel just because it is the gospel. They do not seem to care who is to preach or what is to be his theme; but they come and listen for the reason that it is the Word. They have little curiosity on their faces. So when Dr. Lees walked up into his little barrel-pulpit, with his great gown drapery about him, and read from his dainty manuscript, there was a breathless attention to every word he said; but no word of the sermon seemed to burn its way into the heart, or was carried away as a treasure into the closet and over the battlefields. Bnt then his text was a grand one, and when he pronounced it the people thought of it afresh. His prayers were direct, simple, forcible. They had no introduction, no skillfully-built framework, no perorations for human ears, but were simple expressions of the great wants of the soul to the near Friend. I would gladly have climbed again up the hill, and over the cobble-stones, leading to the Canongate and St. Giles, to be within the inspiration of such prayers.

Principal Cairns is one of the best Scotch theologians, and an earnest preacher withal. He was announced to preach in a distant part of the city, and so we threaded our way to the church. It was a little low building in the rear of a large house, and badly ventilated. Cairns is a tall, muscular, fresh-looking man. He has been writing and working too long to be without gray hairs. He has the broad Scotch accent which, in Scotland, goes for much. In fact, I have already been told a good many times in Ireland, Scotland and England that we Americans have such a peculiar accent that we can always be identified in any part of the British islands. The sermon of Cairns was extemporaneous only in delivery. It had been prepared with great care, was methodically arranged, was preached with great earnestness, and was a whole body of divinity in itself. It was full of fibre and had the quality of taking firm hold of the conscience and memory. It was seized by the audience with earnestness, and, when over there was a feeling that the soul was richer and stronger for what another soul had said richly and strongly. I noticed that the preacher, lest some part of his sermon might be forgotten, went over the entire analysis at the close, just as Sidney Smith was wont to deal with his essays. Americans will have an opportunity to hear Cairns next year, when he goes over to Philadelphia to participate in the Pan-Presbyterian Council.

BIRTH.

There is a large class of people who deem the business of life far too weighty and momentous to be made light of; who would leave merriment to children, and laughter to idiots, and who hold that a joke would be as much out of place on their lips as on a grave stone or in a ledger. Surely it cannot be requisite to a man's being in earnest, that he should wear a perpetual frown. Is there less of sincerity in nature doing her gambols in spring, than during the stiffness and harshness of her wintry gloom? And is it then altogether impossible to take up one's abode with truth, and to let all sweet homely feelings grow about it and cluster around it, and to smile upon it as a kind father or mother, and to sport with it, and hold light and merry talk with it, as with a loved brother or sister; and to fondle it, and play with it, as with a child. No otherwise did Socrates and Plato commune with truth; no otherwise Cervantes and Shakespeare.

BE CONSISTENT.

You wonder and lament that sinners do not inquire; bnt are you inquiring? You wonder that they do not feel; bnt do you feel? Can you expect a heart of stone to feel, when a heart of flesh does not? You are surprised that sinners can sleep. It is because you sleep alongside of them. Do yon bnt get awake, and bestir yourselves, and look up and cry to God, and you will see how soon they will begin to be roused, and to look about them, and to ask the meaning of your solicitude. O, that the saints would but inquire!—Nevins.

At a public meeting held on Monday afternoon at Dundee, addressed by Signor Gavazzi and other clergymen, an auxiliary branch of the Italian Missionary Society was formed.

A missionary of the Free Church of Scotland, Rev. James G. Robertson has succeeded in planting several churches and schools among the Fingoe Kaffirs. He is a native of Dundee.

In Okayama, Japan, there is a population of 35,000, seventy-five of whom recently attended the opening services of a new mission established there by the missionaries of the American Board. The mission is to be a permanent one, having large hope of success.

The Moravian General Synod in session at Hernhut, Germany, has done nothing of special importance. The noble little band move on in their mission work faithfully. Bishop Edmund DeSchieuitz was elected President of the Synod, the first American ever so honored.

A gold medal to be competed for annually in the Montreal Presbyterial College has been founded by Mr. David Morrice. The Canada Presbyterian says: This is the third medal founded in connection with the college in addition to a large number of scholarships ranging in value from $100 down.

Outside of the mission work the Moravians are a very small denomination, having but 122 congregations and about 16,000 members. Nearly 71,000 souls, however, have been converted from heathenism by their efforts. They have 340 missionaries in the foreign field, and contribute on an average six dollars each per annum.

The workmen on the new Christian church at Jahra, India, were formerly professional thieves, but were converted under the missionary efforts of the Rev. Narayan Sheshadri, who visited this country several years ago. These men have become carpenters and masons, and have learned various other branches of useful industry.

The General Congress of the Cecilia Societies of Germany will be held this year at Ratisbon on the 4th, 5th, and 6th of August. The object of these societies is to effect a reform of the music in the Roman Catholic churches, and to bring it back to the more severe styles of which Palestrina and his school are types.

The Sonntags Blatt says: It having been stated that the Bishop of Jerusalem was ignorant of German, and therefore unsuitable for the appointment as regards our countrymen, we are pleased that not only has Dr. Barclay, the Bishop appointed by the Queen of England, already had ten years' experience in Jerusalem as an English pastor, bnt he has an accurate knowledge of Hebrew and of the Talmud, and he is conversant with the Arabic and German languages.

The Wesleyan Methodists of Great Britain held their 136th annual conference at Birmingham on 22d July. They confess to a falling off in their numbers last year of 3,000, bnt Methodism does not seem to be near its fall, for in London this body has raised £120,000 for the erection of fifty new chapels, and thirty of these are already completed. The Methodist chapels in London contain now 80,000 more sittings than was the case twenty years since, when there were 30,000 only.

A bronze stature on a granite pedestal, the whole to cost $15,000, is to be erected in Edinburgh, to John Knox. The Weekly Review says of the subscription: The Moderators of the Presbyterian churches of the country head the list; after their names come those of Dean Stanley and Principal Tulloch. We are glad to notice also the names of representatives of the leading Nonconformist bodies in England, and of other gentlemen who simply as lovers of truth and liberty gladly join in the effort now made to honor the memory of Knox.

The twelve or fifteen millions of Coreans have to this day no portion of the Holy Scriptures in their own tongue. Their country, as well known, has for 2,000 years been hermetically sealed against visitors from without; and has succeeded till now in excluding even the Christian Missionary who has found his way almost throughout the known world. The Japanese have recently forced a treaty on their neighbors, which now gives them access to one port; and the new native church of Japan have resolved (it is said against the wish of their pastors and teachers) to send one of their number to carry to Corea that Gospel which has so recently won their allegiance. Yet more significant of the new order of things probably in store for this jealously guarded country, one-half of the New Testament has now been translated into the language of Corea. The translator, the Rev. John Ross, missionary of the United Presbyterian Church at New Chwang, Manotruria, told the story of his work to the Western Committee of the National Bible Society of Scotland at its meeting in Glasgow on Monday last, and laid on its table a fair copy in manuscript of the complete Gospel of Matthew. Mr. Ross has, under great difficulties, succeeded in producing a version which has been found easily intelligible by all the stray Coreans who have made their way through the famous "Gate" which separates their country from North China. The language is said to be phonetic, and to be so easily acquired that it is read and written by the entire adult population of the country. The Committee cordially agreed to render Mr. Ross every assistance in their power in printing one Gospel by way of experiment, and ere long, it may be hoped, a new version of the Scriptures will thus be added to the 250 already extant.

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 20, 1879.

BETTER TIMES.

We have so often looked ahead hopefully for the brighter times to come, and have been so often disappointed, that we almost fear to bring the subject again before our readers. But more prosperous times are before us. We do not believe that they will burst upon us like an electric flash, but that they will advance, as is indeed more desirable, steadily and surely. In fact, they are coming forward now. Fine crops are made on every hand, all manufacturing interests are improving. Some gleanings of the Holyoke Manufacturer we bring forward to enable our readers the more readily to "thank God and take conrage."

The lumber business is improving North. Men in the lumber business in Calais, Me., report the business outlook more promising there than it has been for years. They have all the orders they can fill, the business has assumed a healthy tone, though prices are low, all are regaining confidence and feel hopeful of a good fall trade. The Muscogee, Fla., mills have sold to a single New York railroad four million feet of lumber, to be delivered in sixty days. This is said to be the largest summer order ever filled by a Southern mill. The Boston Journal says:

"Following the improvements of the iron industry there are encouraging signs of better days for the lumber trade and in the coast carrying business, both of which have felt the depression most seriously. The prices of lumber are improved, and the demand is much greater. Coasting has suddenly become a fair business again."

With regard to the manufactnre of cloths the New York Economist says that "the live woolen goods commission men feel very happy now that their goods are generally sold ahead of production. They have done a better business this season than any time within the last five years. At no time within the history of the trade have orders for goods been placed so early and so largely as in this season." And again the Boston Journal: "One of the best indications of better times in manufacturing enterprises is the resumption of dividends by companies that have previously passed. The Androscoggin pays the first since January, 1878; Dwight first since July, 1874; Hill first since July, 1875, with the exception of 3 per cent. July, 1877. The Newmarket has not paid regularly since 1874, dividing 3 per cent. July, 1875, 3 July, 1877, 2 July, 1878, and now 3 per cent. The Chicopee increase from 3 to 5 per cent., Manchester 4 to 5, Naumkeag 2 to 3, and Pacific 6 to 8 per cent. The Ætna has decreased from 5 to 3 per cent."

So too the Moodus Yarn Company are so busy that they have employed a set of night hands, and the Granite Twine mills of the same place are about to start up with new machinery, after a vacation of two years.

In New York and New Jersey an extraordinary impulse has been given to the iron trade. Mills that have not for years been in full operation are now exerting themselves to the utmost, and manufacturers are crowded with orders.

Lands that were non-productive because never reclaimed are now being brought under cultivation on the Southern seacoast and put in tillage for provisions. The N. Y. Tribune thinks justly that "no better sign of improvement in the times is needed than that afforded by the rise in desirable New York city real estate. The recent sale of the Douglass property on Fifth and Madison avenues, opposite the Central Park, is the latest illustration. This property, consisting of thirty-four lots, was offered two years ago at auction for less than $400,000. It has just been sold for something less than $600,000 by Messrs. R. G. Dun & Co., of the Mercantile Agency, who owned it, and who make a clear profit of nearly $200,000 by the operation, receiving in a single cash payment $300,000."

We have, at least shown, we think, that the wave of prosperity has reached others; we will soon feel its influence in the South.

Now we need to hasten the good times by helping one another. Pay your debts as fast as you can, and as far. If you are a creditor, fortunately owing no man anything, bear along with those who owe you, and remit where you find to exact would be oppressive. But our prime counsel now is to be just toward God. Withhold nothing from the various causes of benevolence that are appealing for aid. Remember there is no debt more binding than that to your preacher. See to it that he is paid to the utmost dime. And what toward ourselves? Nothing—No advice to give. We are perfectly willing to trust ourselves in the hands of those who pay their preacher, and contribute liberally to Home and Foreign Missions, the support of disabled ministers and their families, &c., &c. Such people will take their church paper and pay for it. The converse of this proposition is also true: that those who take the paper and pay for it promptly, will pay their preacher and contribute to the causes of benevolence.

Let us put on the garments of praise, and look forward rejoicingly—aye, go forward manfully, to give fresh energy to whatsoever our hands find to do.

THE MEETINGS OF PRESBYTERIES.

The fall meetings of Presbyteries will soon be on hand. It will not be practicable for us to attend those meetings in the Synod of North Carolina, but at each Presbytery there will be a special representative of this paper, who will receive any subscriptions due or past due, and heartily welcome any new subscribers. We have received many kind and encouraging words lately, which assures us that the paper is appreciated. We have had to note, too, as an indication of special promise, that some who had discontinued long since are returning. Our friends are asked to interest and exert themselves as far as they can for the paper, and give such a report at Presbytery as will cause us to go forward rejoicingly.

TWO AND TWO.

A minister of Wilmington Presbytery asks:

"What of the 'two and two' we were promised at Mt. Zion last spring a year ago if we would abolish the fall meetings of Presbytery? I think I wrote to as many as six different brethren to help me in my large field at the spring communion and not one responded aye—could not come. And I presume that I am not one whit more accommodating than my brethren. I can't go either. My people are unwilling to spare me. Yet I think if the matter were properly explained they would consent to it."

We copy this extract because it brings the subject referred to clearly before those specially concerned. The brother who writes the above, thinks nothing can be effected, otherwise than through the action of Presbytery. But if the people of the various churches will seriously think of it they will probably be in some cases at least, willing to make a prayer meeting answer for a preaching appointment once in a while. The ruling elders might be brought into this service with advantage to themselves, and the communion season would be made more enjoyable and more useful, by bringing in additional preaching.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

A subscriber sends pay for his paper and gives us this encouragement: "It is a very welcome visitor and a great comfort and pleasure to my family and myself."

Constant reception of such as that makes the "merry heart that doeth good like a medicine."

The Church Messenger explains why it failed to recognize our courtesy, and why it used the language it employed in a late issue. The explanation is that we sent the PRESBYTERIAN in exchange to the office of publication, instead of to the editor, forty miles therefrom. The PRESBYTERIAN, on its receipt at the publication office, should have been mailed to the editor; but the explanation is entirely satisfactory to us.

"When we came here
There were no Christians,
When we went away
There were no heathen."

These were the words inscribed as an epitaph, upon the tomb of William Geddies, a Scotchman who in spite of the jeers and jibes of those who lacked his faith, went to Aneityum, in the New Hebrides, as a missionary. The epitaph describes the field when he entered and the field when, after thirty years service, he left it for his heavenly reward.

The Pope of Rome has blessed M. DeLesseps' Panama Canal scheme. Very comfortable this to M. DeLesseps, doubtless, but if he cannot succeed without the Pope's blessing he cannot succeed with it, for papal blessings do not command premiums in the stock market. A few thousands, cash, would be much more to the purpose.

The Southwestern Presbyterian brings forward this which is startling:

There are some 14,000 periodicals published in Europe; of these only fourteen are Roman Catholic. Of the 8,500 on this continent but 113 are of that faith; and of the 1,000 in South America only eleven. So much for the comparative intelligence of Protestanism and Roman Catholicism.

Rev. Dr. Lorimer, Principal of the Presbyterian College of London died on 1st inst. He had been sick but a few days and was supposed to be recovering, when by relapse he suddenly died. He had been connected with the College since its commencement, formerly as Professor of Biblical Criticism, but for the past eighteen months as Principal. He has written several works but is best known as the author of a memoir of John Knox. He was 67 years of age.

Dr. Holland says in Scribner's Monthly for September:

"We believe that there is nothing more common among educated Christian men than the conviction that the old opinions touching the inspiration of the Scriptures are unsound and indefensible."

So much for a publication looking in great measure for its support to Christian readers. Is it not time to let Scribner severely alone?

Efforts are seriously making to effect tenement house reform in New York city. The inspectors, composed about equally of physicians and engineers, are busy in visiting the houses, requiring proper ventilation, having filth removed, &c. There are said to be 25,000 tenement houses in New York city.

A note calling attention specially to Rev. Dr. B. M. Smith's articles on "Commentaries on the Bible" was crowded out last week. We now invite attention thereto. "Chautauqua Notes" will be found specially interesting; the article "The Light: Is it waning?" from the pen of one of the most venerable and most beloved brethren should be read and noted on.

Dr. Smith's article in next issue will be "Commentaries on the Old Testament and parts of it."

The following, cheering testimony to the practical effect of Foreign Missions is from Keshub Chunder Sen. It is an answer to the question: Who and what is Christ? Sixty thousand in Southern India accepted him as their personal Saviour last year; but this is only a small proportion of the ranks of Christian missions. The wave of inquiry is extending in an ever-widening circle. "Lift up your eyes and look on the fields; for they are white already to the harvest."

The Presbyterian Journal brings forward the following advice given by a Michigan lady. It is worth a premium:

"It is not by fretting or worrying or plying the fan that we can keep cool, but by taking up our work, doing it bravely and cheerily, with as little fuss as possible."

The Primitive Church Methodist Missionary Society is the rather cumbersome title of a small society in Ireland, who may never have separated formally from the Established (Episcopal) church, though they are at quite a distance from the centre. The Society is conducted on the principle of the employment of itinerant preachers, who must be lay agents in connection with the Episcopal Church. At the late Annual Conference in Dublin, of those who had not joined the Wesleyans, special efforts were made by the Episcopalians to adopt these wanderers, or as some would say, reclaim them. Canon Kinsley endeavored to show that Wesley never intended that the Methodist Church should be separated from the Church of England, and he declared it to be the object of the Primitive Methodists to maintain that position. The Bishop of Kilmore presided, and Archdeacon Reichel gave a special address to the preachers on the necessary qualification for the work.

The jealousy with which the British Parliament guards its honor is illustrated by the summary punishment of one Mr. Ward, a solicitor at law, of large practice, who was arraigned for having abetted a Mr. Grissell in attempting to corrupt a committee of the House of Commons. The principal, Grissell, having escaped to France, the accomplice was arrested and brought before the bar of the House, charged with a breach of privilege. The members remained covered and the speaker recited the charge and called for the defence. Mr. Ward withdrew, a discussion followed and a motion to commit to prison in the Clock Tower was unanimously carried. The imprisonment may, at the pleasure of the House, extend to the end of the session.

The proceeding is unusual in that other than members of Parliament are seldom taken into custody by the Sergeant-at-Arms. The last occupant of the room occupied by the present prisoner was a member, confined for nonattendance on committee.

Our country seems to be far behind England in the establishment of coffee taverns as a substitute for liquor shops. These coffee houses are doing a good work, though at their best they can only mitigate an evil which ought to be suppressed. Earl Cairns in opening a coffee tavern lately, made these sensible remarks:

If the people of this country would save only half what they expend in strong drink they could pay off annually the interest on our national debt, the expenses of our army and navy, judicial establishments, civil service, and education, and thus virtually abolish taxation. He deplored the fact that in twenty-two years the drink bill of the country had increased from £92,000,000 to £150,000,000. No better work could be done than to promote the cause of sobriety. One advice he gave to the promoters of coffee taverns. If well managed, he said, they ought to be commercially successful, and it was desirable that prices should not be fixed too low, as working men did not want to be made objects of charity.

Not in the Established Church of England only, and its branches, is the utmost contrariety of doctrine to be found under the name of unity. The Mohammedans have in their fold two parties so far apart in their views that a positive division seems not improbable. The Sunnites take in Mohammedan traditions as equally binding with the Koran. They are strictly conservative, holding with great tenacity to old usages, and wear as a distinguishing garb white turbans. The Schyites always wear red turbans and are extremely radical and progressive. They make light of all traditions, even hold the Koran in light esteem, and do not believe in miracles.

The English Nonconformists are not pleased with the New Burials Act passed by the British Parliament. It seems indeed from some of its provisions, to have been arranged specially to show how not to do it. We take this description of it from the Christian Union:

"The new Act provides that corporations of boroughs, improvement commissioners, local boards, and poor law guardians may construct and maintain a cemetery; they shall mark out the consecrated and the unconsecrated portions of the cemetery; within the consecrated portion they shall build a chapel, according to a plan approved by the bishop of the diocese, where the Burial Service of the Established Church shall be read in all cases; they may set apart the unconsecrated portion of the cemetery, or a part of it, as a place of burial for Nonconformists, and may allow the bodies of such persons to be interred therein, under such regulations as they may appoint; they may allow, in any chapel built on unconsecrated ground, a burial service to be performed other than that of the Established Church, by any minister of another church or congregation, duly authorized by law to officiate in such church, or recognized as a minister by the religious society to which he belongs. In other words, a portion of each cemetery will be consecrated and open, as a matter of right, for the burial of members of the Church of England, but it is left to the discretion of the local authorities to provide an unconsecrated portion for Nonconformists, and to allow them the use of their own burial services. Strange that they are not delighted!"

CHAUTAUQUA NOTES.

CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y., August 13.

Joseph Cook calls this a "University." It is a Sabbath School Teachers' University, for he may here get an insight into everything bearing on his work. He may see all methods of working exemplified by experienced leaders, ask them freely for information on any desired points, enter here upon the very plan proposed, and learn every help he needs. Let us see briefly how this is done.

First, enter the "Children's Temple." It is a large and airy circular room, with great doors opening into other apartments, half way around; but all can be and is usually thrown into one hall. Here hundreds of children assemble each day and are drilled in Scriptural lessons under selected leaders and in sacred song. Organ, blackboard, &c., are all here on an extensive platform: and adults can look on,

Across the street is a neat chapel, used for infant classes, lectures on New Testament Exegesis, &c. A little beyond is the new Pavilion or Amphitheatre. A natural hollow in the hill-side was chosen and smoothed, and seated from the bottom to the top of the hill in semicircular form. At the bottom sweeps out a grand platform; and rising back of that platform in ascending rows of seats is the choir gallery, with room for at least five hundred singers. This Amphitheatre will seat three thousand and five hundred people. Chairs are brought in, and as it is open on all sides under the roof, which extends far beyond the seats, many can and do stand on the hill-top, so that four thousand or more auditors may be gathered here.

Again, under the beautiful forest trees, in another part of this magnificent park, is the Auditorium, which with its raised and roofed platform and choir gallery, and wide sweeping seats, will accommodate a larger audience still.

Then comes the new Parthenon, or Hall of Philosophy, just dedicated. It stands in a beautiful grove, and reproduces the Grecian hall for teaching. It is merely a Grecian roof supported by pillars, its sides being entirely unenclosed. It is filled with chairs and will accommodate a thousand hearers.

Besides these, there are tents used for smaller gatherings. Also an Oriental House, with its flat roof, protected by the high parapet, is filled with models of Palestine and Professor Vaurlaner's admirable collection of articles exhibiting Eastern manners and customs. From the roof we have every morning the Christian muezzin's loud call to prayer in musical Arabic. These are some of the provisions made for work.

A condensed programme of one day's proceedings will give an idea of what use is made of this great preparation:

August 13th, 6 A. M. Morning Bells.

6.40 A. M. Prayers.

8 A. M. (a) Children's Hour in Temple; (b) Early Lecture, by Rev. A. A. Hodge, on "The Augustinian Theology" (in Hall); (c) Devotional Conference (in Auditorium), conducted by Maj. Cole.

9.30 A. M. (a) Competitive Examination (Chapel); (b) Musical College (Auditorium); (c) The Earth as an Astronomical Body, by Dr. Warren (Amphitheatre).

11 A. M. Joseph Cook on Alcohol and the Human Brain.

1 P. M. Denominational Congresses—Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, &c.—in various places.

2.30 P. M. Lecture and Readings; Elocution, by Prof. Churchill, of Andover; Singing, by Mr. Sankey.

4 P. M. Microscopy—(a) Models, Palestine, Geography of David's Life, Jerusalem, Tabernacle, Herod's Temple, Biblical Museum, lectures by different experts; (b) Frank Beard with Normal Class in Pencil and Crayon; (c) Calisthenics.

5 P. M. Biblical Exegesis, Greek and English, Prof. Strong.

7 P. M. Lecture on Confucius.

8 P. M. Joseph Cook and "Question Box;" Singing by Mr. Sankey.

10 P. M. Warning Bell.

10.30 P. M. Night Bells—all quiet.

These exercises are varied every day. Besides there are schools of languages, &c.

NEWS NOTES.

The Southern Home states that the First Presbyterian Church in Charlotte, will soon undergo considerable repairs.

The same paper says: Rev. Samuel M. Smith, son of Rev. Dr. Jacob Henry Smith, of Greensboro, and at present pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Washington, N. C., has received an invitation from the church at Columbus, Ga., to visit it with a view to a call.

A correspondent states that at Mt. Carmel Church in Richmond county there has been a glorious meeting. It commenced 8th of August inst., and lasted till the 14th and was under the ministrations of Rev. S. C. Alexander of Mecklenburg Presbytery. Nineteen were added to the church. The writer says, in his opinion, there has never been such a preacher in their country. At Mt. Harmony, preaching commenced on the 15th inst., and will be continued as long as any interest is manifested.

Rev. S. Henry Bell, formerly of Wilmington Presbytery, now, we think, of Wrightsville, Pa., is delivering public lectures in the State just named. His subject is the "Lifted Veil" and he exposes unsparingly the numerous counterfeits and frauds which infest society. The papers speak in the highest terms of Mr. Bell's polished manner, fine command of language and choice arrangements of words and sentences.

The Aurora, of Shelby, says that Rev. R. Z. Johnston is holding a protracted meeting in the Presbyterian church of that town.

Rev. B. W. Mebane, of Graham, N. C., is on a short tour of rest.

Rev. Dr. J. R. Wilson, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Wilmington, has left for a few weeks travel North.

At sparkling Catawba Springs, Rev. E. A. Yates, of the Methodist church, preached on Sunday, 10th inst. Rev. Dr. W. A. Wood preached on the Sabbath previous. The weather at the springs has been cold enough for blankets and comforts, still the numbers are said to be increasing daily, and the company to be unusually pleasant.

The old lightning rod attached to the steeple of the First Presbyterian church of Wilmington, N. C., has been removed and a new one substituted. The old rod had been struck three times by lightning and more or less damage done to the steeple. The rod now put up is five-eighths of an inch in diameter, composed of forty-nine strands of copper wire closely twisted, and the rod is about a hundred and ninety-seven feet in length, one hundred and seventy-five feet being above ground. In addition to the new rod, general repairs will be made to the steeple and roof. The whole will cost probably $500 or $600.

Rev. J. H. Morrison, formerly of North Carolina, now of Louisville, Ky., writes us:

There are many wide fields in Kentucky which need cultivating for Presbyterianism—and hence for Christ's cause—against the false teaching and errors of the Campbellite Church.

In many places they teach such heresies as the following:

1. That immersion is essential to salvation. When asked, "Why, then, did Christ die?" they cannot answer.

2. In many places they hold that there is no Holy Spirit. I have heard them pronounce what they call the "benediction," and they used these words alone: "May the blessing of God and the grace of Jesus Christ be with you. Amen."

3. In many places they hold that "anybody can preach." They seem to ignore Heb. v: 4, and 1 Tim. iv: 14.

4. They have no patience with "creeds." I have asked many of them, "What is a creed?" and they could not tell. When I read them the Apostles' Creed, they said: "Why, I believe that." They should be regarded as piratical vessels, who have no colors, as Dr. Stuart Robinson once said.

I hope the Old North State will keep itself pure from their contamination, and "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints."

Rev. H. T. Darnall, of Milton, N. C., for several days previous to August 14th assisted the Rev. T. U. Faucette at the old Red House church. There were some thirteen cases of interest, among which several gave expression to hope. God's people seemed greatly strengthened.

Since the above was received, Rev. T. U. Faucette writes on the same subject: "The Red House church has enjoyed a delightful season of grace. The meeting was continued for ten days, from the first Sabbath in August. The church was greatly edified, and eight or ten persons were, we trust, led by the spirit to embrace the Savior. Brother Darnall was with us much of the time, and we all rejoiced together in seeing the work of the Lord revived."

WEST HANOVER PRESBYTERY.

The regular meeting of West Hanover Presbytery was held at Lebanon church, August 6th. Rev. G. L. Petrie, of Charlottesville, was elected Moderator, and Rev. L. B. Johnston and P. P. Barbour were elected clerks.

Licentiate T. P. Epes, of West Hanover Presbytery, was received.

Rev. G. A. Wilson, who accepted a call from the church in Appomattox county, was received from Greenbrier Presbytery.

Gordonville and Orange county C. H. churches were granted leave to prosecute a call for the pastoral services of Mr. William E. Cave, a licentiate of Maryland Presbytery.

Rev. B. M. Wailes and Elder Allen were appointed to organize a church composed of members of Lebanon church. The new church is to be called Tabor.

Resignation of Rev. H. Henry, from the pastorate of Lebanon church, was accepted.

Rev. Dr. Dabney called special attention to the need of raising funds for Home Missions, and the Presbytery will endeavor to secure fifty cents per member from the churches.

Dr. Dabney and the Stated Clerk were appointed a committee to revise the manual.

Next regular meeting Cove church, April 24, 1880.

AN IDIOSYNCRACY OF AGE.

We have from a correspondent in one of our central towns, the following note of an idiosyncracy arising from extreme old age. It is certainly nothing more, but it is very sad nevertheless.

MR. EDITOR:—An old gentleman of ninety summers living in this place, had himself measured for his coffin a few days ago. After its completion, he was asked why he had so acted. His reply was, that coffin makers charge their own price after a man is dead. He has also selected his burial place, which has been staked off. He never goes to church—does not believe in the resurrection—yet reads the Bible more regularly than any one in the place, having faith only in the first nine chapters.

The recent rains have put a different face on things around us, but it came not a moment too soon.

Yours truly,

ELDER.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Old Preacher's Story.—This book has been neatly issued by the Presbyterian Publishing Company. It contains 628 pages of clear large type, and is handsomely bound. The style is beautiful and the characters represented in the most agreeable manner. There is a series of incidents in the history of the church, town and people, with which the preacher spends his whole life. The incidents interest the most careless reader and hold the attention throughout the entire book. Although written in the style of romance, there are moral teachings which produce a good effect upon its readers. It presents different characters, while it defends the Presbyterian doctrine and preaches the Gospel to its readers. Written by Rev. L. P. Bowen. St. Louis Publishing Co. Price $1 50.

How Two Girls Tried Farming is the title of a book from D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, Mass. Dorothea Alice Shepherd, the author, is said to be Ella Farman, editor of Wide Awake, and this, which is no doubt true, accounts for the charm of the work. It is illustrated and the pictures are tempting. Ladies binding wheat, looking after the chickens, and attending to other farm duties are very pretty, and suggestive of happiness. On the whole the book will be found good reading. It is founded on the actual experience of two young ladies who followed the advice of Horace Greeley and "went West," bought a farm, stocked and managed it themselves, and, without help from masculine arms, made the experiment a success.

THE INTRODUCTION OF THE TELEPHONE.

The rapidity attend the introduction of the telephone as a means of business communication is shown by the fact that thirteen months ago the first telephone was put up in Chicago. The American District Telegraph Company now has over fifteen hundred patrons—that is to say, it has put up that number of telephones, with the corresponding number of wires. The carbon telephone constructed by Edison is used. The company has a central office and nine branch offices, which take in nearly every portion of the city. At its central office and branches the number of messages per day average 20,000. The demand for the telephone may be inferred from the fact that the company has forty-seven men and five teams constantly employed in putting up new lines and instruments, and twelve others who are constantly engaged in keeping the lines in repair.

It is also stated that a company has been recently started to introduce the instrument in Paris, the Government having granted the first concession ever made for running telephonic wires to Mr. Frederick A. Gower, of Providence, R. I. Hitherto the telephone has not been used in France, the Commissioners appointed by the Telegraph Department to examine existing systems not being satisfied with them. The currents in Gower's telephone are generated by a magnet strong enough to allow a battery to be dispensed with. The increased power is gained by abandoning the horse-shoe form. It is shaped in a half-circle, with two arms bent into the centre, where they nearly touch each other. Signaling is effected by blowing through a reed like that of a parlor organ, this reed being cased in a tin tube and passing under the diaphragm, near the poles of the magnet. Superfluous vibration, the cause of indistinctness, is thus dispensed with. The vibration in the reed sets up an intense vibration in the diaphragm, which transmits a magneto-electro current to the receiver, producing a clear, loud note. The speaking tube is then taken up, and the voice is heard distinctly. The diaphragm and magnet are encased in a small metal box, from which the reed emerges.—Christian Union.

In the vicinity of Turnersburg, Iredell county, July 17, 1879, JOSEPH WELCH, aged about 75 years.

He had lived in Mocksville 20 years, and joined the Presbyterian church there; removed to Iredell county in 1856, and united with the church of Bethany. He was a quiet, inoffensive, good man, and will be much missed in the community. A wife and several children survive him.

Mrs. MARTHA E. BLAKE, relict of Mr. Jesse Blake, died suddenly in Holly Township, Pender county, N. C., on 27th ult. Mrs. Blake ate supper, apparently in usual health, but before 10 P. M. had died. She was 64 years old. An only son, now a physician in South Carolina, survives her. For thirty-five years she was a member of the Baptist church, and for the last three years a member of Mt. Williams Presbyterian church.

Near Tar Heel, Bladen county, on the 8th of July last, after an illness of a few hours, ELMIRA DeLAVERLETTE, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. McKay Robeson.

"It is well with the child," for the Saviour says, "Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." The death of this bright and happy little darling is a strange providence to the parents, but it is the voice of their God, who is too wise to err and too good to harm. PASTOR.

In Pender county, near Point Caswell, N. C., after a lingering disease, Mr. JOEL O. MOORE departed this life on the eve of July 8th, aged 28 years. He was a consistent member of Moore's Creek Presbyterian church—confessing Christ at the age of 18 and endeavored to live according to his profession of faith to the day of his death. Though an invalid the most of the time since the writer knew him, yet it was good to sit beside his sick bed, and learn patience through suffering. And as he lived so he died, in the full hope of a blessed resurrection. K. McD.

Died, after a long and protracted illness, in the town of Monroe, on the 10th day of June, 1879, Mr. WILLIAM HENDERSON SIMPSON. By reason of strength, the deceased had almost finished his three score years and ten, being 66 years, 11 months, and 27 days old, He was born and raised in Union county—then a part of Mecklenburg. As a citizen he was faithful to his trust, serving as magistrate for about thirty years, and as Clerk of the Court for about fourteen years—both of which offices he filled well. In 1868, he was licensed to practice law, and continued in his profession up to the time of his sickness.—He was kind to the poor, the widow, and indulgent to the debtor. At the age of 23 Mr. Simpson with some of his family, joined what was then known as "old Union church," now Bethlehem Presbyterian church; and at the organization of the Presbyterian church in Monroe, or soon thereafter, he became one of its members; thus, for over 40 years, he was a member of the church. Mr. Simpson was confined to his bed for over three months. He bore his sickness with much resignation, and studied how to be as little trouble as possible to his kind and watchful wife and friends. During his sickness, his wife, speaking to him about his condition, and apparent changes, he replied that he had made preparation for that change long ago. One by one our friends are passing over the river. A faithful husband, a kind father, and one possessing many virtues, has been called up higher. He leaves a widow, eight children, and numerous friends to mourn his loss.—Bereaved widow, know thou that God has promised to be a husband to the widow! Fatherless children, know that God has promised to be a father to the fatherless! Disconsolate friends, know that God has promised to be a friend that sticketh closer than a brother! Weep not, friends. True, the father's voice is hushed; his step will be heard no more, and to earth no more will he come, but you can go to him. "My grace is sufficient; I will not leave you comfortless." "In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." PASTOR.

A VIRGINIA LADY, WITH SEVERAL YEARS experience in teaching, desires a situation in some pleasant family or school, for the next scholastic year. References exchanged. Address,
TEACHER, County Line Cross Roads,
Charlotte Co., Virginia.

Charlotte Institute.

THE next session begins September 10th, 1879, and ends June 8th, 1880.

No Institute ever made more rapid progress in securing the confidence and esteem of its patrons than this one during the past session. Before the end of the scholastic year the number of its pupils, attracted by the well-earned reputation of the school, increased to 117, exclusive of the adult ladies who availed themselves of the superior advantages here given in the departments of Music, Art, and Modern Languages. In no respect is this Institute inferior to any other first-class boarding-school in the Southern Middle States. Such testimonials as will satisfy any one as to the high standard and thoroughness of the instruction here are published in the catalogue. These testimonials are peculiarly trustworthy, inasmuch as they are given by gentlemen engaged in teaching in well known schools and colleges of the highest grade, and who are therefore qualified to express an opinion in regard to educational institutions.

The total expense for the half session or term will be $125. This amount includes board, with washing, fuel, lights, furnished room and servants' attendance, tuition in all the English branches, Latin, with either French or German, Callisthenics, text books and stationery for school purposes. Pupils are not permitted to incur additional expense without permission of their parents. Parents are thus assured that their bills will not be greater than they expected.

Special arrangements and special terms for young ladies who wish to take only Music, Painting and Drawing, and Modern Languages, severally or collectively.

For further information address the Principal, Rev. WM. R. ATKINSON, Charlotte, N. C.

THE BUFFALO LITHIA WATERS,

For Malarial Poisoning, Especially Hepatic Diseases and Malarial Fevers.

Testimony of Distinguished Medical Men:

MALARIOUS FEVERS.

Extract from Letter of Dr. Wm. T. Howard, of Baltimore, Professor of Diseases of Women and Children in the University of Maryland, of August 1st, 1873.

Dr. Howard compares these waters with those of the celebrated Greenbrier White Sulphur, West Virginia, and adds the following:

The Greenbrier White Sulphur Waters will be recognized by all informed upon such subjects as one of the most noted Mineral Fountains of the World.

"Indeed, in a certain class of cases, it is much superior to the latter. I allude to the abiding debility attendant upon the tardy convalescence from grave acute diseases: and more especially to the cachexia and sequels incident to MALARIOUS FEVERS IN ALL THEIR GRADES AND VARIETIES."

* * * * * * * * In short, were I called upon to state from what mineral waters I have seen the greatest and most unmistakable amount of good accrue in the largest number of cases in a general way, I would unhesitatingly say the BUFFALO SPRINGS, in Mecklenburg county, Virginia."

———o———

Extract from Letter of the late Dr. Thos. P. Atkinson, of Danville, Va., Ex-President State Medical Society, dated August 15th, 1874.

"The Buffalo Lithia Waters have unquestionably displayed great power in the peculiar diseases of the warm, miasmatic regions of the South, which may be grouped together under the general head of Malarial Cachexia, covering Hepatic Engorgements, Enlargements of the Spleen, Jaundice, &c."

"It is not pretended that these Waters possess any anti-periodic properties, such as belong to Quinine—At the same time, however, it is unquestionably true, that in the intermittent and remittent fevers in a chronic form, they have in numerous instances, given relief in cases which had obstinately resisted all the anti-periodic drugs of the shops. From my experience with them, I feel fully warranted in saying that, with rare exceptions, whenever disease is found originating under malarial influence, a potent remedy may be found in this water."

———o———

Extract from a Letter of Dr. John C. Coleman, of Halifax county, Va., (prior to the War a surgeon of the U. S. Navy, now retired) dated near Scottsburg, Va., January 1st, 1879.

"Perhaps no claim made for the Buffalo Lithia Waters is more thoroughly established than that they are a powerful antidote to malarial poison in all its forms and varieties. In that large class of disorders, included in term Malarial Cachexia, embracing Engorgement of the Liver and Spleen, Jaundice, Indigestion, Dropsies and Neuralgias, of which the warm malarious districts of the South are so prolific, the action of these waters as a general rule is most decided and happy, and oftentimes astonishing. In Chronic Intermittent and Remittent Fevers, they are especially efficacious. I presume there is no season at these Springs in which some cases of this character do not find relief from these Waters, which have before baffled the healing art."

———o———

Extract from Letter of Dr. Alfred Plumber, of Manson, N. C., dated March 16, 1874.

"I have known the Buffalo Springs of Mecklenburg county, Va., for twenty-five years, and have sent many patients to them. In Chronic Intermittent and Remittent Fever, and in all diseases originating in malarial poison, I have found their action almost that of a charm. I have sent young ladies to these Springs so enfeebled from this influence as to be scarcely able to walk across a floor, and in a few weeks they would become so invigorated as to be able to dance half of every night."

———o———

These springs open for guests the 1st day of June. The water in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, $5,00 per case at the springs. Springs pamphlets sent to any address.

It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable, as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape)
It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.

FOR THE FAMILY.

They Didn't Think.

BY PHŒBE CARY.

Once a trap was baited
With a piece of cheese.
It tickled so a little mouse
It almost made him sneeze.
An old rat said: "There's danger;
Be careful where you go!"
"Nonsense!" said the other;
"I don't think you know!"
So he walked in boldly;
Nobody in sight:
First he took a nibble;
Then he took a bite;
Close the trap together
Snapped as quick as wink,
Catching mousey fast there,
'Cause he didn't think.

Once a little turkey,
Fond of her own way,
Wouldn't ask the old ones
Where to go or stay.
She said, "I'm not a baby:
Here I am, half-grown;
Surely I am big enough
To run about alone!"
Off she went; but somebody,
Hiding, saw her pass,
Soon like snow her feathers
Covered all the grass
So she made a supper
For a sly young mink,
'Cause she was so headstrong
That she wouldn't think.

Once there was a robin
Lived outside the door,
Who wanted to go inside
And hop upon the floor.
"No, no," said the mother:
"You must stay with me;
Little birds are safest
Sitting in a tree!"
"I don't care," said robin,
And gave his tail a fling.
"I don't think the old folks Know quite everything."
Down he flew, and Kitty seized him,
Before he'd time to blink.
"Oh!" he cried, "I'm sorry,
But I didn't think."

Now, my little children,
You who read this song,
Don't you see what trouble
Comes of thinking wrong?
And can't you take a warning
From their dreadful fate,
Who began their thinking
When it was too late?
Don't think there's always safety
Where no danger shows;
Don't suppose you know more
Than anybody knows;
But, when you're warned of ruin,
Pause upon the brink,
And don't go under headlong,
'Cause you didn't think.

Uncle Jean's Story.

BY LOUISE STOCKTON.

"All finished," said Louise, sitting down on the grass, and I do hope, Uncle Jean, that thy story is of war and of brave men."

"It certainly is of war; how brave were the men thou must decide. So, to begin: It was a dozen years ago, pretty nearly, when I had just come ashore from a long cruise, and was in the greatest hurry to go home to see my mother, that just as I was fairly ready to go, the captian of the "Deliverance" fell sick, and I was ordered to take his place and be ready to sail at once. I did not like it. It was a compliment, but I would rather have gone home—you see I had been away for years. 'Thou dost not wave thy sword over thy head,' said Count Hohenstack, who was my friend. 'I keep it for fighting, not waving,' said I, but in truth I had no heart for waving. As for the 'Deliverance,' she was a good little frigate of twenty-eight guns, and had as a comrade, and under my orders, the 'Isabel,' with twenty-four guns, and my old messmate, Gasper Brissac, for captain. What we had to do was to take a fleet of twenty merchantmen to Genoa. It was dangerous service, for we were at war with England, and her ships were lively enough if there was the prospect of a prize afloat.

"We had to hurry our preparations, as the Captain's had put things back, and one day when I was at the inn, seeing people, I was told that some one wanted to see me and wouldn't come in. When I went out, long after, there sat my dear little mother, and near by was old 'Gray Jacques,' harnessed to the blue cart, and Jules driving. How glad I was to see her! She had to come, she said, to see me before I sailed. I at once told everybody that wanted me to come that night, and I took my mother off to the ship, and I showed it to her. Ah, how it pleased her to see me captain of it!

"The next day, at noon, we sailed. It was all very good for a time, but off the coast of Spain we met the Englishmen. Two ships. One carried forty-eight, the other forty-four guns. It was great odds, Louis! My surgeon stood by me at the moment. 'There's no use in it,' he said. 'No use in what?' 'In making show of fight. We'll have to surrender at last.' This was a nice way to talk to a superior officer, wasn't it? 'And give up the merchantmen?' said I. 'Of course. They will necessarily be captured, and we have to think of ourselves sometimes.' 'Not first,' said I, 'we didn't come out for that.' So I just ordered him below, and told him if he opened his mouth to the men in this way, he would never doctor any one again, and then we went into action. It was lively work, Louis, and enough, as the cabin-boy says, to make a shark laugh, to see how desperately our guns fired. We had so few in comparison with the enemy that we had to do double work. Fortunately we had plenty of ammunition. There was but one thing to do, to keep both the Englishmen engaged and let the merchantmen get off. If we had let one of them free our fleet would have been lost, so we kept at it. When the merchantmen were out of sight; when our decks were slippery with blood, and our masts gone, we surrendered, but it was to the second mate of one of the vessels, for the officers were all dead. There was but a handful of us left, and we were hurried on board the enemy, as our ship was sinking fast. As for me, I had a ball in my leg, and Brissac a cut in his shoulder."

"We," continued the old sailor, "were taken to Portsmouth, and when we reached the shore we were ironed!

"Think of it, Louis, we Frenchmen, taken in battle, fighting like tigers, and fighting well, put into irons! Ah, it makes my blood boil when I remember it! I could not walk to the prison, and we were not on parole, so we were put into a cart, and the people crowded around us, hooting and scoffing. I told Brissac to fancy it applause, and then the louder they screamed the better he would like it, but he just shook his head. He was sick, and he was disgusted. As for me, I was furious! Never would I so treat a prisoner of war! They put us in a sort of inn, up in the upper room, where the windows were tightly barred, and a guard paced the hall.

"For some days an English doctor came to see us and dressed our wounds, but we had no confidence in him, but one day the guard pushed in a little fellow, and said: "There, go work for thy bread.' He was a Frenchman, a surgeon; and now he came and often talked of our escape, for upon it we were resolved. The surgeon had more liberty than we, as he went from room to room, accompanied by a guard, but he never left the house. Had I been in his place I would soon have been free, but he could not see that it was possible. Then, one day, he came to us in great joy, for he had secured a file, and that he gave to us. It made our way clear, for if once the windows were open to us we felt sure of escaping, and now, every day we talked and planned, and we called the file "a wound," and France "a cure," and the guards "objections," fearing we would be overheard. Of course we worked. The file was poor, but little by little the bars were sundered until they were held together by almost a thread, and our progress was concealed by bread-crumbs rubbed in soot.

"When the surgeon found he would have company in escaping he was cheered, and thought of new ways of help. There was a Swiss who brought cheese to the soldiers. He had been in Paris; he was not unfriendly, and he wanted money. Of this we gave him nearly all we had, and promised much more. Of course, if we escaped we would have to go by sea, but how? No Englishman would have sold his boat, and the Swiss would not have dared to buy; he was known to be poor, and he was no sailor nor fisherman. So the days went on, the bars were sawn almost through, but we were yet prisoners. One day, however, in a little tavern where the Swiss used to go, there sat a Norwegian who owned a shallop. He drank and drank, and he went to sleep with his head on the table. To him the Swiss went, and he shook him. 'Arouse,' he said, 'you must go to your boat;' and so he took him by the arm and led him to his own room, put him to bed, took away his clothes, and locked the door. Then he went swiftly to the surgeon and told him to prepare. That night we would be off! Then he bought bread, cheese, and beer, and put in the shallop, and took her in the twilight up a little creek.

"And we! We cried in each other's arms when the surgeon told us that liberty was so close at hand. France and liberty! Never in battle had our hearts beat so fiercely! And yet I—I was uneasy. I had a sense of what my part was to be, but I could not think of it; and I talked and talked to Brissac of what our plans would be. The surgeon was sure he could escape, for he was no longer closely watched; and, at midnight a stone was to be thrown against our window by the Swiss; and then we were to break the bars, and, upon ropes made of our bed-clothes, we were to descend. It was near midnight when, as we sat and watched the minutes slowly creeping by, that I took my courage in my hands, and told Brissac he would have to go alone! I don't like to-day, Louis, to think of what he said, and how he begged. I could not persuade him that I could not walk to the boat Even if I could not, he said, there would be three of them, and they could carry me. He could help me out of the window and the others could receive me at the ground; then he would follow; and, between them, they could easily get me to the boat. I reminded him of my size—that I was not a slim young fellow like him, but heavy, and almost helpless. He would not listen to anything. The worst of it was, for me especially, that all he said was true, and that it could have been managed just as he said, if it had not been for the fact of the danger of detection. I could have slid down the rope, and, with their help, I could have gotten to the boat, if we were unmolested; but if we should have chanced to meet any one, my presence would have been fatal to the whole party. I could not run. I would at once be known; and Brissac, I knew, whatever the others would do, would never desert me, and the end would be that we should be shot. To this the faithful fellow answered that the night was dark, the hour late, and the road led out of town; so the chances were that we would meet no one. We kept up this discussion, sometimes sadly, sometimes with heat and short words, until after the stone struck the window; and even after Brissac had the rope ready, and had embraced me, he urged me to go. 'No!' said I, finally. 'If you are in France you can work for my release. If I go, we may all be lost; and if you stay, as you still threaten, of what use will it be? We shall come to feel that God gave us an opportunity and we refused it. Go, then, urge my release, and tell my mother that I still remember not to think of Jean Berthold first.'

"Well, he went. We both wept; but he went. Then I crept to my bed. I was alone. The guard passed the door. 'If he should come in,' I thought, 'even yet they could be overtaken!' and, in English, I called out, 'Brissac, my lad, give me the water-jug; I die with thirst!' and then I upset a chair. The guard paused, I heard him laugh, and he went on. In the morning I threw up the bed-clothes on Brissac's bed, and when our breakfast came, the guard said: 'That lazy fellow, is he not up yet?' It was noon before it was discovered, for I sang and I talked, and it was thought we were both within. The surgeon was first missed."

"Wasn't there a great fuss made?" asked Louis, excitedly.

"Indeed there was! The drums were beat, the guards put under arms, the country scoured by horsemen, but, as I repeated again and again, that Brissac was a good walker, they did not set sail to look for him. The Swiss was never thought of until, when I was released, I sent the Norwegian money for his shallop."

"Then you did get off?" said Louis.

"Of course I did," replied his uncle, laughing, "how else thinkest thou I would be here?"

"And how?" asked Louis.

"My king sent for me," said Jean Berthold, proudly. "The merchantmen had told wonderful tales of what we did to save them, and it was thought we were all lost; so when Brissac reached St. Malo—and it took them forty-eight hours—the people rose and would have smothered him with kindness. They took him in triumph through the street, and he broke from them and told them I was in prison yet. I don't know what nonsense he talked, but the queen heard of it, and she sent for him, and the end was the king paid for my release."

Mosques and their Ministers.

In all Mohammedan countries the mosque is the great centre of religion and political influence. It is especially so among the Afghans. In the cities there are mosques attached to every street, and the villages to each section or parish. The village mosques are usually very simple structures of mud, but not unfrequently they are buildings of stone or brick with some architectural pretensions. The ordinary mosque is constructed in the figure of a square court with about one-third of it covered in with a three-domed roof. Within the covered portion is a Mihrab, or niche, marking the Kibla, or the direction of Mecca, to which all Mohammedans turn their faces during prayers. There is a Mimbar, or pulpit, consisting of three steps, from which the preacher recites the Friday Khutbah, or oration. If the mosque is situated on a river bank the ablutions are performed in the stream; but if there is no river, either a well or a tank will be constructed within the precincts of the courtyard for that purpose. The floor of the mosque is covered with matting, and the rich and the poor pray side by side, the chief with his servant and the ruler with his subject, men of wealth or rank enjoying no special distinction. Women are not forbidden to attend public places of worship, but they are not encouraged to do so, and in Afghanistan (and the same may be said of other Mohammedan countries) females never pray in the mosques. The Muslim takes off his shoes at the entrance of the mosque, carries them in his hand sole to sole, and places them upon the floor a little before the spot his head will touch in prostration. The mosque is not only the Muslim place of worship, but it is the village school or college, and if the priest in charge should be a man of renowned scholarship or piety, his pupils will be very numerous. The students from a distance reside in the mosque and receive their daily rations from the parish. The mosque is presided over by an Iman, or priest, whose pay is derived from the endowments and the free-will offerings of the people. The position of Iman is somewhat similar to that of a beneficed clergyman in Britain. His duties are to lead the prayers, to perform marriages and burials, and to settle the disputes of his parishioners. But unlike the clergyman of Britain, the Mohammedan priest is not expected to pay pastoral visits to his people, but the people pay frequent visits to their priest. Indeed, the social position of the Mohammedan priest is estimated entirely by the reputation he has, and by the number of people who visit him daily. If the Iman be a scholar and also a man of reputed sanctity, his advice will be sought upon almost every conceivable question, and the benefit of his prayers will be solicited in behalf of the most multifarious necessities.

Rotten Wood as a Pest Breeder.

Commenting on the filthy condition of the rotten wood pavements of Memphis, and their alleged influence in causing the outbreak of yellow fever there, the Baltimore Sun says that they have been continually denounced as foci of pestilence ever since 1873. The joints between the blocks and the ruts grow so deep and so enlarged that they are soon filled in with filth, which in warm, damp weather offers a wide surface for putrefactive action and for the generation of noxious effluvia. The blocks themselves become water-soaked and rotten below the surface, so that when any one is taken out it is found to be no more than a black, pulpy mass of decay, upon which the sun is acting all the time, eliminating malarious gases from it.

The cause of the yellow fever which devastated Norfolk in 1856 was very largely attributed to the decay of wood shaving, which had been used to fill in a wharf. The Memphis pavements must supply a much larger proportion of poisonous miasmata to the air than was given out by these decaying shavings at Norfolk. It is a peculiar property of half decayed wood in masses to retain moisture, to continue long in a state of slow fermentation, and to give off malarious effluvia. In country neighborhoods many a case of typhoid fever has been caused by a neglected wood pile near the house, where, upon a gradually accumulated mass of chips and sawdust that is fair enough on the outside, but rotted down to mould at the bottom, all the kitchen slops have been poured. It is a well known fact in sanitary works that hospital gangrene often results from washing the wood in floors of wards with water, and on shipboard new or moist timber is injurious to the health of the sailors. The damp timbers of the United States steamer Plymouth, retained and were able to revive and propagate the yellow fever germs recently, in spite of the most careful fumigation, disinfection and refrigeration during a whole winter. The decayed wood of the berth deck of this steamer could not be disinfected, so resolutely did it retain within itself the fever germs.

Memphis is paved with mile after mile of this sort of decayed wood, and every block, exposed to a sweltering sun, may nurse a fatal fever germ. These pavements were laid down ten to twelve years ago, and are reported by Mr. Niles Merriweather, a civil engineer, as being "almost entirely gone from decay and hard usage, so that their rotten and honeycombed condition makes them so many cesspools and receptacles for the retention of all manner of street filth and noxious gases, and they should therefore be removed as rapidly as possible."—Scientific American.

Timothy and His Mother.

If there be one word more touching and musical than another in our language, I suppose it is that which is first on lips in infancy, and often last in the hour of death, the word mother. For the roughest and the most hardened, as well as for the giddiest and most trifling, this word has a spell that belongs to no other, until we learn that there is One who loves us as even a mother never could; then her name yields to that of Jesus. Happy the child who learns to love and honor his Saviour for his mother, and his mother for his Saviour.

There was a Jewish mother, long years ago, who, blessed herself in the knowledge and love of her God, spared no pains to bring up her little son in the same teaching that she had received in her own childhood from her grandmother. She had married, indeed, one who was not formerly of her own religion, and perhaps her husbands early training having been in the follies of the idolatrous Greeks, made her the more anxious to establish her boy in the worship of the God of her forefathers, the Lord Jehovah. Day by day, while he stood at her knee, his dark eyes lifted up to hers with all the truthfulness of childhood, would she unroll before him the parchment records which told in words that could not err the histories of the past, and our wisdom as well as our hopes for the future. It seems that her labors were early crowned with a measure of success; he maintained a stainless character amidst the many temptations which beset the season of early youth; and though he was not yet a believer in Jesus of Nazareth, there was that about him which attracted the great Apostle of the Gentiles, when he passed through Timothy's native city. He seemed at once to take him to his heart as an adopted son; he sowed the good seed of the Gospel on the kindly soil which had been long since prepared by God's blessing on his mother's training; and when he had himself found the pearl of great price, the young Christian desired nothing better than to bring others to share his own joy. Faithfully he stood beside the beloved father of his adoption, amidst sore persecutions, perils by land and sea and deaths oft, and he lived so far to reap the earthly reward of fidelity, that he received from the Apostle's own hand the important Bishopric of Ephesus, and died himself the spiritual father of many souls.—Canada Presbyterian.

THE GENUINE

DR. C. McLANE'S

CELEBRATED

LIVER PILLS,

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression DR. MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. MCLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. MCLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER!

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventative for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. They were used during last season in New Orleans very successfully. The common method of using them was to apply them over the stomach, changing them every week. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS and seem to destroy the poison. One reason why they are of special value is that they stimulate the digestion, and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison. They are a cheap and almost certain preventative. Ask your physician about them. Benson's Capcine Plasters are a sure preventative and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price 25 cents.

COMMENTARIES ON THE BIBLE.

NO. III.

Rev. L. C. Vass, Newbern, N. C.:

Resuming these notices of commentaries, our attention is next turned to

COMMENTARIES ON THE OLD TESTAMENT AND PARTS OF IT.

1. The writings of some of the Fathers, especially Jerome, Augustine and Chrysostom, contain many valuable contributions to the interpretation of Scripture, and the late English expositors have recently availed themselves of these writings. But as few pastors, especially among the yonnger ministers, have access to the ponderons folios of the Fathers, the reader's time need not be occupied by any farther notices.

2. Cocceius of the 17th centnry, has made valuable contributions to the exegesis of Hebrew Scripture in his extensive Lexicon, and by his critical notes on nearly all the books of the Old Testament. His views, in this kind of commentary, are generally esteemed sonnd and useful. But his fondness for the theory of a "double sense"—the existence of a spiritual besides the literal meaning of the words of the Scriptnres—has greatly marred his interpretations, when he attempts exposition. From one living in the 17th century, we could not expect either the exegesis or exposition, which the advantages belonging to later scholars have enabled them to present. Most of what is really valuable in his criticism has been appropriated by writers subsequent to his day, and in view of this fact and the statements made above, his works have not obtained extensive circulation and their valne, considered relatively to their extent, may be regarded insufficient to justify their introdnction into a private library.

3. Cappel in the early part of the 17th century, and Le Clerc, nearer its close, have each left a critical commentary on the Old Testament. The remarks already made respecting Cocceins as to the relative valne of critical works on the Old Testament, prepared at that period, will apply to the works of these writers. They are also rather bnlky, and while valuable as books of occasional reference, for the same reason assigned as to Cocceius, the expense of procuring them would hardly be justified by the benefit they might afford in a private library.

4. Ainsworth, on the Pentatench, Psalms and Canticles (Song of Solomon) retains a high value especially in view of his judicions use of Rabbinical learning, in illnstrating the meaning of the Hebrew.

5. Alexander J. A., on Isaiah, is simply indispensable to the atndent who wishes to acquire a full and clear knowledge of the writings of the evangelical prophet. With his wonderful linguistic attainments, he was able to read, as if in his vernacular, the works on Isaiah, in Greek, Latin, German, French, Spanish and Italian and has presented a "synopsis criticorum" of the most valuable contributors to the exegesis and exposition of the prophecies of Isaiah, both ancient and modern. His sturdy common sense, clear perceptions of truth and error, invincible convictions of evangelical trnth, homage for the Divine Word, and adoring love to the Christ of prophecy, promise, history and apostolic teaching, combined with his extensive learning, gave him nnsurpassed advantages, as an interpreter. In his introdnction, especially that to the "Later Prophicies," he has by sound reasoning on conceded facts and the firm establishment of historical positions, hitherto questioned, with his cutting sarcasm mingled with irresistible hnmonr, put aside the vain conccits, sophistical theories and rash assumptions, as well as unfounded interpretations of continental rationalists and their fawning imitators, in Great Britain and the United States. Often, by one short sentence, he cuts off by the roots, paragraphs of elaborate and specions exposition, sustained by immature learning and illegitimate criticism of men ever learning and never coming to the knowledge of the truth."

6. Dr. Alexander's work on the Psalms, is not equal to the foregoing. It lacks the extended criticism, the fuller examination of views conflicting with his own and the more complete exposition. Yet it is a work of great value for the training of the student to the cultivation of critical accnracy in translation and the grammatical interpretation of the language. It may be questioned whether the method, or rather principle, of interpreting Messianic Psalms is the best, in allowing a primary reference to David, on which that respecting Christ is based. It may be true of some Psalms that the description of the sufferings and the joy of the writer may be accepted, not only as that of all believers, bnt as finding a culmination in its verification in onr Lord's life. But there are certainly others as the second, forty-fifth, seventy-second, hnndred-and-tenth, which find verification only in Him, setting forth relations only trne of Him, and snch as twenty-second and fortieth describe feelings, which it is hard to believe have ever fonnd an example, in the conscionsness of any other than the Great Mediator.

Yours, &c.,
B. M. SMITH.

EXTRACTS.

"That the baptism of John was not Christian baptism would seem plain: (1) Because it belonged to the old dispensation. The Christian church was not yet established. (2) It bonnd no man to faith in Jesns Christ as the son of God and the Saviour. (3) He baptised all Jndea, hnt all the people of Jndea, Pharisees and others, were not thereby made professing Christians. (4) It was a baptism simply nnto repentance, as a preparation for the coming of Christ. (5) Those who were baptised by John were re-baptised when they professed to become Christians. Of the mnltitndes converted on the day of Pentecost and immediately after, many no donbt had been baptised by John, and yet they were baptised anew. And, according to the interpretation almost nniversally received in onr day, of Acts xix: 1, 6, Panl baptised in Ephesns 'certain disciples' in the name of the Lord Jesns, who had already been baptised by John.'

"To be unbaptised is a grievons injnry and reproach; one which no parent can innocently entail on his children. The neglect of baptism, which implies want of appreciation of the ordinance is one of the crying sins of this generation. It is good to be of the nnmber of those to whom God has made a special promise of grace and salvation. For the promise is nnto ns and onr children. It is a great evil to he 'aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenant of promise.' They, therefore, sin against God in their own sonls who neglect the command to be baptised in the name of the Lord, and those parents sin grievously against the sonls of their children who neglect to consecrate them to God in the ordinance of baptism. So let the little ones have their names written in the Lamb's book of life, even if they afterwards choose to erase them. Being thns enrolled may be the means of their salvation." DR. HODGE.

THE BEAUTIFUL NAOMI.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

The unselfish devotion of the beautifnl Rnth, that lovely yonng woman of Moab, who clung so passionately to her mother-in-law, and shared her fortnnes so trnstfnlly, is one of the most interesting of Old Testament scenes. Long, long ago the events of that idyllio story took place; yet this snmmer, as the winds go rippling throngh the bending grass, and the grapes begin to grow large and round on the sun-kissed vines, it is as fresh and new as ever. No pastoral in literatnre compares with it. It is a poem of the heart and the dew of the world's day-dawn sparkles npon its lines. How many a yonth, how many a maiden, how many a true, tender soul, plighting troth for all life's changes has done it, the ages throngh, in those resolute words of Ruth, "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee; for whither thon goest, I will go; and where thon lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God. Where thou diest will I die, and there will I be bnried. The Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught bnt death part thee and me."

Rnth has inspired eloquent pens and gifted pencils. As the ancestress, who into the royal line whence our Saviour sprang, brought the thread of Gentile blood, she received special honor. She, with others, with brave men and holy women, belong to the stately company of whom Panl said, "And truly, if they had been mindful of that country from whence they came out, they might have had opportnnity to have retnrned."

Bnt more and more, as I read the simple narrative, the beauty of the elder woman grows npon me. The lovelinss of the aged mother is something which appeals very strongly to those who have dear mothers of their own, who are leaning on them a little more, and ever a little more, as they descend the evening slopes of life. How wistfully we regard them when now and then the feeling comes to ns that only a few years at best, and they will be gone. How we need them more now, it seems to ns, than when we were playing at their feet. How we trnst them, refreshing onrselves after the dnst and toil of the day by their innocent, single-hearted, straightforward steadfastness. The purity, the sonl-strength, the spirtuality and the lovingness of onr beantiful mothers, our mothers who are no longer young, except as the heart keeps its yonth, are to ns as a charm and a defence. To many a low-roofed cottage on New England hills, to many a homestead by the sea, the boys and girls, hard-working men of hnsiness, grave professors, elegant women, leaders of the social world, will return this snmmer, drawn to the old place as by a magnet: and why? Because they want to see Naomi. She is sitting by the western window with her Bible on her lap and her knitting in her hand, and her patient eyes are looking down the road, over which child after child of her training has gone to take a share in the world's dnties, and oh! how glad she will be when one after another comes back, lifting the old latch and crying ont, "Mother, dear mother, I've come home to see yon!"

Sometimes Naomi is very lonely. Elimelech and Mahlon and Chillon, all died in the land of Moab. She went out full and she came home empty. She has no sweet Rnth, not even an inconstant Orpah to cheer her as she sits by herself with nobody of her own kin to care for and love her. I think I never feel so profonndly sorrowful for any one as for an aged woman who in the feebleness of later years is regarded as a burden by somebody who makes a merit of endnring her infirmities. Every aged mother, whether her children are here or have been gathered to heaven before her, should dwell in the land of Beulah. There should be some winsome woman, with the pulses of yonth still beating buoyantly, who should minister out of her affluent life to the impoverished one, and who, emulating Ruth of old, should take the bitterness from the desolate heart.

I am told that there are old women who are indeed trials to those with whom they dwell. They are frivolons, spiteful, cross-grained and noisy, and as memory fails and the gray hairs come npon them, they take on no snpreme beauty, such as your mother and mine wears, a sunset glory, richer than the former hours beheld. I do not know any snch, bnt I can imagine them, the product of wasted lives. If seed-time was nnimproved and the harvest was scanty shall we expect anything of the aftermath? Bnt, even though she be nnattractive and irritable, and capricions, Naomi in her old age should never be neglected. She may be thirsty for love, and her life long, love may have been given her by dole. For the sake of the happy old age which we desire, when our own toiling time is past, let ns be thoughtful, considerate and deferential to the women who have reached the borderland of the dark river, on whose other side are the saints.

Naomi, in the Bible, was a mother-in-law. There has been a great deal of cheap satire and foolish fun directed at this much maligned character. In real life the mother-in-law is nsnally the friend who comes to the front promptly, in all domestic crises, and who pnts her own ease aside to be helpful in another home, when she has fairly earned the right to leisnre in her own. She is nsually the idolized and indulgent grandmother of a flock of indulgent children, and her pride in them, and in their parents, is enough to excite a smile. The daughter's husband, and her son's wife, have been adopted and elected into her generous maternal heart, and they, as they ought, love her loyally and believe in her fondly.

Ruth's mother-in-law, however, must have been exceptionally amiable and wise, for in the Oriential honsehold she held, as she holds in the East to-day, the sceptre of an absolnte anthority. Her son's wives were nnder her control, and she conld make them happy or wretched, according as she used her power. Evidently Naomi's away was a gentle and gracions one, retaining its influence when home and wealth were gone, and a weary, hopeless widow, she grew sick with that yearning for native land which oppresses the exile, even nnder favorable circnmstances and propitions skies. Adverse fortnne and triple bereavement did not make her cold or selfish. She wonld not take the sacrifice of the yonng lives so freely offered her, without an earnest protest, "Nay, my daughters," she said, when they were fain to go with her, and she embraced the Orpah who left her, as she did the Rnth who clave to her. In the economy of the East, the shrewish mother-in-law is a despot, who stirs up continnal strife, the hotter and more malignant that several sons and their wives are nnder the same roof, and life drifts by in idleness and ignorance. Bnt in Elimelech's house, though the Moabitish women may have kept their gods, and not wholly have worshipped the God of Israel, there was the sound of morning and evening prayer, and we may be snre that Naomi always turned her face toward the plains and hills of her fathers when she knelt to ask for guidance from above. Ruth, in that formal leave-taking of her own people, and that solemn love-covenant she made with Naomi, renounced her childish religion, and fully adopted that of the land to which she was going. Henceforward the two were united, and no wonder when Naomi was again at home, that loving and admiring glances rested on "the damsel that came back with Naomi, ont of the country of Moab,"—Christian Intelligencer.

WEARY WOMEN.

Nothing is more reprehensible and thoroughly wrong than the idea that a woman fulfills her dnty by doing an amonnt of work that is far beyond her strength. She not only does not fulfill her duty, but she most signally fails in it, and the failnre is truly deplorable. There can be no sadder sight than that of a broken-down, over-worked wife and mother—a woman who is tired all her life through. If the work of the house-hold cannot be accomplished by order, system and moderate work, without the necessity of wearing, heart-breaking toil—toil that is never ended and never begun, without making life a treadmill of labor, then, for the sake of humanity let the work go. Better to live in the midst of disorder than that order should be purchased at so high a price—the cost of health, strength, happiness and all that makes existence endurable. The woman who spends her life in unnecessary labor is by this very labor unfitted for the highest duties of home. She should be the haven of rest to which both husband and children turn for peace and refreshment. She should be the careful, intelligent adviser and guide of the one, the tender confidant and helpmate of the other. How is it possible for a woman exhausted in body, as a natural consequence in mind also, to perform either of these offices? No, it is not possible. The constant strain is too great. Nature gives way beneath it. She loses health and spirits and hopefulness, and more than all, her youth, the last thing that a woman should allow to slip from her, for, no matter how old she may be in years, she should be young in heart and feeling, for the youth of age is sometimes more attractive than youth itself. To the over-worked woman this green old age is out of the question; old age comes on her sore and yellow before her time. Her disposition is ruined, her temper is soured, her very nature is changed by the burden, which, too heavy to carry, is dragged along as long as wearied feet and tired hands can do their part. Even her affections are blunted, and she becomes merely a machine—a woman without the time to be womanly, a mother without the time to train and guide her children as only a mother can, a wife without the time to sympathize with and cheer her husband, a woman so over-worked during the day that when night comes her sole thought and most intense longing is for the rest and sleep that very probably never come; and, even if it should, that she is too tired to enjoy. Better by far let everything go unfinished, to live as best she can, than to entail on herself and family the curse of over-work."—Sanitary Magazine.

MARRIAGE.

Love is proverbially blind; bnt a girl loses nothing if she allows a little commen sense to mix with it. Many a girl has had her whole happiness for life destroyed because she obstinately chose to form her estimate of the character of a snitor exclusively by his behaviour towards her, and his professions of love, rather than by his condnct towards others. It is a pretty safe rule that a man whose whole life is but an exemplification of selfishness will not long continue generous in relation to his wife. Character is seldom revolutionized by marriage. There may be a slight reform temporarily; it rarely lasts long. And men suffer as much as women from ill-assorted marriages. Many a towering ambition has been crushed, many a cnpful of happiness has been converted into the dregs of bitterness, from the neglect of a young man to become thoronghly acquainted with a girl before taking this most important step in life.

CONSECRATION.

BY WILLIAM NORRIS BURR.

Lord, I am in thy hands; for Thee
Nothing or anything I'll be;
A willing sacrifice, I give Myself to Thee, for Thee to live.

Most for the Master's use I'd be,
Finding my joy in serving Thee;
Humble, that all around might see
Only the mind of Christ in me.

Nothing would I esteem too rare
To place within Thy loving care.
Here, Lord, I give this will of mine,
For I would know no will but Thine.

WRINKLE FOR A MAN AND WIFE.

How often is the happiness of many a well-meaning conple marred by their forgetfulness of the dnty enjoined upon us, to bear "one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ!"

How often when John comes home from work a little pnt out because things have not gone quite smoothly at the workshop, or Sally is just a wee bit out of temper because the children have been rather more trouble-some than nsual—how often, I say, in such a case, instead of gentle words to make things pleasant, is some snch remark as this indnlged in, "Hollos! why how cross you are to-night!" This leads to the retort, "I ain't cross a bit; it's you that's always trying to make a body angry;" then one word of course brings on another, and a most uncomfortable evening they spend, yon may be sure.

Now, I knew a couple with whom this difficnlty not nnfrequently occurred, and very wretched for the time it made them. But they were really very fond of one another, and had more common sense than many people I have met with. What wonder, then, that they should pnt their heads together and try to find some means by which this state of things could be got over.

They did; and now I will tell you the experiment they tried and what was the result. It was agreed between them that if things had gone nnpleasantly with John dnring the day, when he came home he was to wear his paper cap a little on one side, and Sally then must do her very best to make all smooth at home. If, on the contrary, her temper had been ruffled by little household trobles in the day, a corner of her apron was to be tncked up on John's retnrn, and he was then to be more amiable than nsual. The plan was tried and answered admirably. Many a pleasant evening was enjoyed which otherwise would have been passed in great discomfort.

At length they fonnd themselves in this dilemma. One evening John returned with his paper cap immensely on one side, and what was his dismay on entering the house to find that Sally's apron also was tucked up. Now what was to be done? Whose dnty was it to give way and try to make things pleasant to the other? The difficnlty lasted only for a moment. Looking at each other strangely they both burst out into a hearty laugh. John gave his wife a long and loving kiss, and they have since been heard to say it was one of the happiest evenings they ever spent.

More than this, that very night, I have good cause to know, they lifted up their hearts together in thanks to Him who had enabled them to overcome the wicked one, and in prayer that He would ever keep them steadfast in their love to Him and to each other; and now I am sure for twenty miles around there is not a happier couple to be met with than John and Sally.—British Workman.

UNDER-MANNED.

In May last Rev. Fleming Stevenson said, in an address before the London Missionary Society:

"But the message is this—it was given me by men in the far distant mission field; it was given me from the dying bed. I bore it throngh my wife from the death-bed of one of yonr noble women yonder—Mrs. Edkins. It was given me in Japan and in China and in India. The words are always in my mind. I never can lose the sound or meaning of them. The one cry was this, 'We are under-manned. We are holding posts with one or two men, and we onght to have fifty men. We are holding them against every disadvantage. We cannot take rest when we are tired; we cannot get relief when we are sick. We work through sickness and weariness, and sometimes throngh despondency; bnt we hold these posts nntil we die, only,' (they said), 'do not forget to tell the churches at home that we are under-manned." The missionary societies know it to their cost, bnt the churches do not realize it, and their cry was not to the missionary society—it was to the Church at home, 'We are under-manned.' Sometimes we are content to send out commerce and literatnre, and there is no question that there are a thousand indirect agencies at work—commerce, literature, Western culture, and charities that the famine has produced—which are all influencing opinion in that distant East. But these are only after all the light squatters that we have sent. Remember, too, that our commerce is tainted with opinm, and our literatnre is marked with a baneful skepticism. Sometimes the books that pass into inquirers' hands are sceptical books, placed in their hands by sceptical Englishmen and sceptical Americans. Remember that this great Western literatnre may not at once do anything in those countries but dissolve what already exists; they are preparatory and dissolving forces at the best; what is wanted is that great Christian forces should be sent ont to this field, and that the churches should march their whole regiments ont upon Hindostan, China and Africa, that we should not be content with one or two, nor ever be satisfied until there are at least as many missionaries representing every church abroad as there are ministers representing every church at home. 'Under-manned'—what is the meaning of it? It means that opportunities are lost, that they are postponed, it may be for a generation; those who stay here cannot tell, in fact, what it means. The meaning sometimes to the missionary is so terrible, that while he sees a station there that he could open if only he had a man to stand beside him, and another here if he could send a man to evangelise; he is tied to the work which he cannot leave, and the opportunities pass away. Let us go with a greater spirit of earnestness and consecration into this blessed work of our Lord Jesus Christ. It seemed to me when I went round that we were watching the building of an enormous temple. We saw walls rising up in some lands—not visible in others; we saw workmen always at their post, the stones beside them and the tools in their hands; we found them daring and enduring, full of hope, although those who lacked their motive said they had reason for despair; we found them admiring, not the beauty of the walls as they rose, but the glory of Christ in whose honor they would be raised; we found that there was one blessed thought among them all, that the time would come when that building would be completed, and when the aisles would be filled with a great company, each chanting the praises of Jesus Christ in his own tongue, when the pillars of that church, that mighty temple of God, will bear up the great and glorious roof; when there will be only one song sung and one love known, the song of Jesus Christ and the love of the blessed Lord; and, when that building is raised, will come the time when the last that is left upon earth will bear the blessed saying of the Lord, 'Come, ye blessed, enter into the kingdom prepared for you of My Father.' Therefore, I say, let us go and work by our prayer and by our love at home, and sustain those missionaries that are yonder."

RELIGIOUS READING.

If it be asked if religious reading is interesting, there must be differing replies. The person of slight Christian experience, and whose exercise in reading has been wholly or mainly in that which is secular, will answer at once in the negative. The one of advanced spiritnal life, and whose practice has been to study the Bible and some of its religious helps, will respond in the affirmative. It is a question of taste and appreciation, and must be settled as these are taken properly into account. It would be foolish to accept the opinion of an uneducated person on a question of philosophy, but not more so than to permit an unbeliever, or a worldly believer, to fix our estimate of religious literature.

There are Christians frank enough to say that such reading is very dry. They enjoy newspapers, magazines, books of travel, and the best novels, but get neither entertainment nor instruction from books of devotion or Christian information. If they have such, it is in deference to the sentiment which makes them appropriate to a Christian home, or through some accident of purchase, or the generosity of friends.

If we think for a moment of those who have produced the books of a religious kind that are pronounced standard, we will easily be persuaded that the fault of dryness must be in those who read and not in the literature. The best minds and hearts of the world have been devoted to its production. Learning, experience, character, deep feeling and the rest look forward to the day when all the bishops shall be "'verts" and the clergy recruited from the weak-backed yonng men who posture and cross themselves every Sunday at Alban's, Holborn, or St. Peter's, London Docks. It is not improbable, however, that some effort will be made to bring this state of things before the Propaganda, so as to prevent Cardinal Manning from giving undne influence to the ex-Anglican element.

painstaking care—these have all been employed by its authors, and it is not to be supposed they would all fail to make it interesting. Into many pages and volnmes have gone the prayers and consecration of devont lives, which, because they were near God, would receive a communication of His Spirit in their sonls. The writing of a saintly man comes from a sphere of holy communion. It has npon it the breath of the Spirit. Can it, therefore, be essentially dry?

If it be asked how the proper taste for it can be acquired, the answer must be, in two ways, and first, by the practice of reading it. It is a result of education and familiarity. If we take an author who is devoted and scholarly and persistently read him, the effect will be to grow into an appreciation of his style and spirit. Especially will this be so if accompanying the reading there is a spirit of earnest asking and devont contemplation of the trnths communicated. The second way will be by cultivating the soul into a deeper experience of the Gospel and a closer walk with God. The person so exercised will then seek such reading as will be congenial to him, and this will be the kind that was formerly dry and sapless. He will have a new taste as well as "a right spirit," and will feel the need of the pious companionship to be fonnd in the thonghts and reflections of religions writers. His sonl will crave what before it despised, and growing still in his nearness to the Saviour, and learning more of the excellence of His trnth and spirit, he will find himself so attracted by a Christian biography, a volume of poems, and other devotional compositions, as to prefer it to all others. The novel will become too poor to be desired, and all will be made subordinate to that which tells in some way of the love and ores and devotion to the Master.—United Presbyterian.

ROME'S RECRUITS.

The Roman correspondent of a London paper writes: The Propaganda is giving its close attention to the ecclesiastical affairs of England, and every effort is being made to appraise the exact condition of the Anglo-Roman Church. The convert element has obtained the upper hand, and in London especially they are being placed by Cardinal Manning into all the most important positions. In due corse the episcopate will be recruited from the ex-Ritnalists, and the old traditions of the days of Milner and Wiseman will be completely snapped asunder. Romanising Anglican clergymen who are in the black books of their bishops have now an excellent chance of being made Roman Catholic priests without professional training; and they may consider themselves as men marked out for higher promotion if they will volnnteer to teach the man-millinery of Ritnalism to a robnst clergy, who have spent their college life in studying dogmatio and pastoral theology, placing the question of altar decoration and sanctuary etiquette in the last place. One serious complaint made to the anthorities here is, that ex-Anglican priests will not work in the provinces. They shirk Liverpool, and dislike Manchester, where the Romish clergy have hard times and small pay. They do not object to watering-places; bnt London and especially the West End, is their "joy and their crown." They religiously avoid the dozens of thousands of Irish poor to be found in Whitechapel, Clerkenwell, or Southwark, and confine themselves to a dilettanti apostolate in prim lodgings, with an occasional starring engagement for "one night only" down at the East End. These heart-bnrnings among the Anglo-Roman clergy go to prove that the men who have raised snch agitation in the Church of England are not more submissive when they enter a Communion which they acknowledge to be the ideal of their dogmatic dreams. It is not likely that much notice will be taken here in Rome of the grievances of English Papists, whether lay or clerical. Leo XIII. is anxions to appoint a competent sncccssor to Monsignor Rinaldi, who was formerly the manager of the British Department of the Propaganda. Some hidden influence has, however, been brought to bear upon the Vatican; and an Italian who has never been to England holds this important position. A Roman Monsignor who speaks broken English is scarcely a fitting personage to rule an episcopate which has been misunderstood because its members partake of a national character entirely different from that of the Latin nations. The priests of England justly say that their fidelity to their religion is too well known to admit of doubt. The old-fashioned section were for a long time effaced by the school represented by the Dublin Review. Bnt the elevation of Cardinal Newman to the purple is a proof that the aggressive school is not to have the monopoly of teaching, and we may hope that Rome will yet learn that the converts leave the pit villages of Durham or the poorer quarters of the northern towns, to men who have been to college for twelve years, part of which has been employed in teaching or in supplementary studies. The Anglican "vert" loves to rule. He has no Public Worship Regulations Act to fear. He can burn incense, wear vestments, hear confessions, and anoint the skin, without that whisper of remorse which told him in his Ritualistic days that he was looked upon as insincere by everybody save a few friends. He has a little money—nay, he may keep his fellowship at Oxford now. Bnt he is not happy. He finds that Popish priests dislike his crotchets and his "flash in the pan" zeal, as much as did Dr. Jackson or Dr. Bickersteth. The poor Irish prefer a priest who has been trained to minister to them. The priests write to Rome and complain of men who want to be doctors before they have been disciples. The result is that some of them become Unitarians, like Father Suffield. Others get sick of their work and withdraw;

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

In the Rhine valley a religions revival is in progress, and among its frnits are 200 oases of conversions in the town of Dusseldorf alone.

In some of the English ritnalistic societies every member is obliged to pledge himself never to enter a nonconformist place of worship.

The resignation of Cardinal Nina, the Pontifical Secretary of State, is spoken of as imminent. Snch a step seems to indicate a change in the Vatican policy.

The Bishop of Llandaff, in opening a new church at Cardiff on Tuesday, said that a considerable nnmber of dissenting ministers were applying to him for ordination.

A Paris correspondent says MM. Louis Blanc, Clemenceau, Naquet, and other members of the Extreme Left have submitted a proposal for the repeal of the Concordat and the cessation of all ecclesiastical subsidies, on the ground that all forms of belief or nnbelief should be on a perfect equality.

The Bible Christian Society have continned their sittings at Trnro Wesleyan Chapel. The report, which was adopted, showed that in their Home, Canadian, Australian, and New Zealand Missions they had 186 preachers, 855 local preachers, 681 chapels, and 15,067 full members, being a small increase on the year.

It is asserted that Cardinal Manning has sent to the Pope a carefnlly compiled Memorandnm relating to the condition of the Roman Catholic Church in England, to serve as a basis for a scheme of reorganization. The communication, it is said, will be favorably entertained by the Vatican.

It is reported that the order of Jesnits is about to make the island of Jersey one of its headquarters, and that for this purpose it has pnrchased the Imperial Hotel, which was built about fourteen years ago by a limited liability company (since wonnd np), at a cost of about £40,000.

The Methodist Episcopal conference of Sweden held its annnal session at Stockholm July 10-15. Bishop Wiley presided. A glance at the reports presented shows that the society has: Preachers 53, societies 94, local preachers 109, members 5,536, probationers 3,451, chapels 53, Sunday schools 133, scholars 6,649.

Rev. David Macrae declines the call to his old congregation at Gonrock, which congregation has voted to leave the United Presbyterian Chnrch. Bnt then, Mr. Macrae has a call to the School Wynd church, the late Mr. Gilfillan's a much more influential chnrch. The excitement in the Gonrock congregation is dying ont.

The polyglot character of the popnlation for which the Chnrch of England missionaries at Constantinople labor is illnstrated by the fact that the school at "the Home" is made up of twenty-six Armenians not Protestants, eighteen Armenians who are Protestants, eleven English, four Americans, one German, one Dane, one Hungarian, two Jews, two Bulgarians, and four Greeks.

Mr. Thomas Brassey, M. P., offers a prize of £25 for the best handbook of suggestions to merchant officers willing to help their crews in spiritnal matters, and to promote the more devont observance of the Lord's day at sea. The Earl of Aberdeen and the Bishop of Dover are amongst the adjudicators, and the Missions to Seamen Society, 11, Buckingham Street, Strand, London, W. C., issues the conditions under which the competitive essays are to be written. Dnring the century succeeding the Reformation divine service was conducted daily on board ship, as it still is in the Qneen's service, bnt in the majority of the 37,000 British merchant ships of to-day even Snnday worship is neglected.

The Russian Synod has voted 50,000 roubles (about 37,500) toward extending the Greek Chnrch in Japan. The reports received by the Synod from its missionaries in the Mikado's empire announced a large increase in the nnmber of converts, at Tokio alone there being more than one thousand now professing the Greek faith. Recently the chief official in charge of the Japanese prisons joined the Russian orthodox church and directed his snbordinates to give the missionaries full liberty to prosecute their work in the establishments nnder their charge. This is said to have resnlted in adding 120 persons to the body of converts.

In the Convocation of the Province of York last Friday, a lengthened discussion took place on the Athanasian Creed. Rev. C. P. Peach moved, and Canon Temple seconded, that no additional explanatory rubric is required. The Bishop of Durham moved an amendment, that the word "shall" in the rubric be changed to "may," thns allowing the optional use of the creed. The Archdeacon of York seconded the amendment, which was carried in the Upper House, bnt rejected in the Lower House by 34 to 8. The original motion being withdrawn, the Dean of Chester moved the entire omission of the rubric, which was rejected in the Lower House. No change will therefore be recommended.

Fourteen peasants have been tried at Tamboff for attempting to murder a prestaff, or Government bailiff. The particulars are as follows: Last year, in the village of Solazgori, in the Spasski district of the province of Tamboff, a holy spring appeared on the surface, and excited wonder throughout the country by the miraculous healing powers its waters possessed. The peasants of the village, to guard the spring from injury by the crowds of pilgrims resorting to it, placed a watchman over the spot. The village priest then blessed both the watchman and the spring, and gave the sanction of religion to the gathering from all parts of the sick, the halt, and the blind. The result of this was a great development of the pilgrimage, and a corresponding influx of wealth into Solazgori. The matter was reported to the Government, and as of late a number of holy springs have appeared in various parts of Russia, and the discovery of them has become a common thing with villages trying to draw trade to their districts, a prestaff, or Government bailiff, was sent to Solazgori to report npon the alleged miracles effected. On his arrival his inquiries elicited that the healing powers of the spring were exaggerated, and, in consequence, he dismissed the watchman from the spot, and drove away the pilgrims.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 27, 1879.

WHY WE SHOULD GIVE.

Money is wanted—money will always be wanted—to carry on the work of the Church at home and abroad. Nothing is to be gained by closing our eyes to the fact. God designs that the wealth which he distributes among his people, shall be used in such measure as may be required in prosecuting his work, and it is He that provides the necessity.

We are in constant danger of overlooking the fact that his design in thus calling for what he has placed in our trust, is not that He cannot dispense with the means of His people. The main-spring of human action, when not under divine grace, is selfishness. But the prime law of Christian life is self-denial—sacrifice.

The Great Head of the Church illustrated the principle in His earthly walk, and pre-eminently in the culmination of His work of redemption on the cross; the Scriptures are filled with the teaching expressly or by plainest reference. This self-denial requires the reversal of all unholy affections, the foregoing of all sinful pleasures. It makes the will of God the supreme law, and places us and all we have, and of our own free will, at His disposal.

But not only by the example of Christ and by the precepts of Scripture is self-denial inculcated. God has instituted that worship of Him shall be in part by the return to Him of the gifts with which he has endowed us; that regular and constant practice shall enforce and promote His teachings. The return of these gifts for the promotion of God's glory brings into lively exercise the graces of self-denying love, and humble trust in His providence. The natural selfishness of the human heart needs to be broken down and destroyed, and the giving as God has blessed us for the advancement of His cause is a means to that end. Giving is then a special means of grace; at once a duty and the highest privilege. It is a requirement from which none are exempt. No individual has more right to do this giving for another than he has to do for another the praying, or the exercising of faith, or the studying of the word of God.

We are not authorized to regard the work of the Church in the world in the same light, or as governed by the same principles, as any vast secular enterprize: and yet too often it is just thus that we do regard it. A call is made as at the present time for increased contributions, that the opportunities which God has made for the furtherance of his work may be embraced, and the facilities which He has placed at command may be duly used. Instead of joyously hasting in thankfulness to Him, to pour into His treasury the necessary means, we set to work to devise appeals to human selfishness. Voluntary surrender is the requirement, and all fairs, festivals, lectures or other plans, whether harmful or otherwise in the incidents which accompany them, are baleful in that they provide a consideration to self-interest—a compensation other than God proposes—and thus thwart the prime purpose for which the plan of giving was instituted.

If the individual Christian hopes for God's blessing upon himself, if he would see the Church of God prosper, he must come forward heartily and cheerfully to give as he is blessed, from a sense of duty to his Maker.

Whoever, standing as the messenger of God to men, fails to give them the opportunity, to urge the duty and rightly to teach the nature and design of Christian giving, fails in the performance of a most important part of his service.

Is there not great need that the Church should be aroused to the fact that cheerful, self-denying giving is a means of grace, as clearly so as prayer or meditation? In how many congregations is it true that the opportunity for giving is not even presented? or if a call is made for offerings to any object of benevolence, that it is done in a way that carries with it the impression that compliance is at best a matter of indifference? When we shall awake to a full sense of duty in this matter we shall have no complaints that ministers' salaries are not paid, that the widows and orphans of the Church are destitute, that our home missions are neglected, that the foreign mission work must be curtailed, while the heathen are stretching out their hands for the Gospel, and messengers are urgent to go forth; for the Lord of Hosts will open the windows of heaven and pour forth such a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it.

DEAN STANLEY.

To members of his own communion the Dean of Westminster must be much of a mystery, and scarcely less to others. Strongly favoring some of the claims of the Baptists as to baptism he is practically a most pronounced non-immersionist. Expressly declaring that Presbyterianism represents the form of government of the early Christian Church, he yet holds firmly to prelacy. Devotedly attached to the Episcopal Church, he yet consorts most amicably and interchanges freely with members of any other evangelical body of Christians. Latterly he has been preaching on the "Book of Common Prayer." He proposes to improve it. Shade of Elizabeth! He pronounces especially against the rule which prevents the burial service being read over "the most saintly member of the Society of Friends, or the most innocent child of a Baptist."

We admire this "Broad Churchism," no doubt the more because the breadth is toward us rather than from us.

But, apart from his views as a churchman, the Dean is a power in England. The royal family of England, with the good Queen at their head, and little regard for republican France before their eyes, had fully determined that the remains of the late Prince Imperial should have a resting place in Westminster Abbey and that a monument should be erected over them. The Dean entered heartily into the plan, but the nation opposed, and the press discusses it fully. Parliament makes it a subject of inquiry, and decides that the Dean of Westminster has sole authority in the matter. And now Dean Stanley with the rare good sense which distinguishes him, albeit the not less sensible Queen approves, acquiesces with the wish of the people. Long may Westminster enjoy the services of the wise Dean Stanley.

FIGURES FROM THE MINUTES.

An esteemed friend has collated the following for us, and has our thanks for the kindness:

According to the Minutes of the last General Assembly there are 117 ministers in the Synod of North Carolina, 222 churches and 17,747 members.

Orange Presbytery has 58 churches, 32 ministers and 3,515 members; paid average salary to 22 ministers about $712; raised for Benevolence $3,279; for all objects $27,296; added on examination 202 persons, and has 12 vacant churches.

Concord Presbytery has 35 churches, 23 ministers, 3,526 members; paid to 17 ministers average salary $618; raised for Benevolence $5,944; for all objects $24,257; added 156 members and has 6 vacant churches.

Fayetteville Presbytery has 49 churches, 19 ministers, 4,925 members; paid 19 ministers an average salary of $558; raised for Benevolence $1,824; for all objects $16,541; added 565 members, and has 6 vacant churches.

Wilmington Presbytery has 32 churches, 15 ministers, 1,727 members; paid to 10 ministers an average salary of $394; raised for Benevolence $895, for all objects $26,336; added 80 members and has 3 vacant churches.

Mecklenburg Presbytery has 47 churches, 27 ministers, 4,054 members; paid to 21 ministers an average salary of $553; raised for Benevolence $3,722, for all objects $19,838; added 259 members, and has 1 vacant church.

There are more Presbyterians in Fayetteville Presbytery than in any other, and more were added to the church in that Presbytery. Wilmington Presbytery has the smallest number of members and raised the least for Benevolence, but paid its ministers more than any other Presbytery. Mecklenburg Presbytery is second in number of Presbyterians, and raised more for Benevolence than any other Presbytery except Concord (Salisbury church is credited with more than $4,000 for Education), and has but one vacant church. It receives occasional services from three neighboring ministers; but the Presbyterians in Mecklenburg Presbytery pay their ministers less than any other ministers in the Synod receive for their service, the average salary being about $553.

These figures are taken from the Minutes of the Assembly, which are compiled from the actual returns made to Presbyteries by the sessions. Doubtless more has been done by many of our people and churches, but sessions did not report it.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

The papal blessing to DeLesseps canal scheme avails him little. The scheme is abandoned for to-day. But this is doubtless a case in which to-morrow never comes.

From an exchange we take the following: A church, with fifteen members, was recently organized at Gainesville, Texas, of which Rev. W. L. Miller is pastor.

We presume this refers to Rev. Willis L. Miller formerly one of the editors of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN.

The following is worthy of imitation between all Evangelical denominations:

"A young minister desired to leave Methodism and join the Church of England, but the Bishop of Rochester declined to receive him until he had paid up all that the Wesleyan Theological College was entitled to for giving him his training."

What does it mean? We clip from the Interior: During the last two or three months booksellers of Leipsic have not been able to fill the orders for dictionaries, grammars, and primers of the Russian language, for maps, plans of cities, and guide-books of the Russian territory, which have poured in from officers of the Russian army.

The extent to which the Sabbath day is desecrated in this country is becoming truly alarming. Perhaps the most fearful phase of the subject is found in the countenance given to it, even the participation in it, by Christians under the name of worship. In some places camp-meetings are held, occupying several days, including the Sabbath, and on that day extra trains are run and an admission fee charged for entrance to the grounds. Of course, under such circumstances it is not possible to prevent the most disgraceful dissipation and disorder. Little can be done to stem the tide of evil in the direction of Sabbath desecration while Christians encourage it. At Chautauqua the gates are closed on Saturday evening and are not again opened until Monday morning.

The Catholic Mirror of Baltimore contains a letter from a correspondent, stating that Bishop Kerne of Richmond lectured at Covington, Va., "in a Methodist meeting house." A week or two since we ventured the opinion that our Methodist friends would be ill-repaid for their courtesy. Here is a part of what the Bishop said to his Methodist entertainers:

The Bishop showed, then, that the Catholic Church is the only infallible guide to truth and light, and that none other than an uniform and unerring guide could pretend to be of divine institution; hence he concluded, that other religious denominations were wanting in the essentials that constitute the Church of Christ.

The Presbyterians of Petersburg could have advised them on the subject.

A correspondent sends us an account of the Union Y. M. Christian Association which held its sessions at Lumber Bridge church, in Robeson county, N. C., on 2d inst. Of fifteen societies associated only three (Antioch, Big Rockfish and Lumber Bridge) were represented. The crowd present, however, was large. Mr. Dockery Johnson of Richmond county delivered the address. Our correspondent says these societies have done good in bringing persons out to perform their duties in the Church.

NEWS NOTES.

We especially invite news from all quarters for this column.

The Presbyterian congregation have purchased the Fayetteville Street [illegible] Pritchett's, where they propose erecting a church in the near future.—Greensboro Patriot.

The Lenoir (N. C.) Topic says: The Presbyterian church is undergoing repairs, and has received a new coat of paint. It now presents a very handsome appearance.

Rev. J. Rumple's vacation of four weeks at Rocky River, proved to be only a few days. At the organization of Centre Church, in Norwood, and the protracted meeting on the occasion he preached twenty-one sermons.

Rev. C. M. Payne, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Wilmington, has returned home and resumed his labors. He will, during the absence of Dr. Wilson, pastor of the First church, preach in the Second church in the forenoon, and in the First church in the afternoon of each Sabbath.

In the proper column is announced the marriage of Rev. H. G. Hill. We extend our heartiest congratulations. The Fayetteville, N. C., Gazette informs us that Mr. Hill has a four week's vacation which he will spend with his bride, partly at each, Buffalo Lithia Springs and Richmond, Va. The Fayetteville church will be filled during the absence of its pastor, by Rev. J. M. Rose, of Portsmouth, Va., and by Rev. Messrs. J. P. McPherson and Jos. M. Atkinson.

SABBATH SCHOOL CELEBRATION.

There will be held at Galatia church, Cumberland county, N. C., a Sabbath School celebration, on Saturday, September 13th, at 11 o'clock a. m., conducted by Rev. William S. Lacy, pastor of Buffalo and Euphronia churches.

The public are cordially invited to attend, and especially parents and children and Sabbath School workers.

CALDWELL CHURCH.

Mr. Editor: It has been well and truly said that variety is the spice of life. It is this that gives life and freshness to newspapers. I have thought that a short account of my journeyings in these ends of the earth might afford at least some of the variety which comes in to make up the spice of life.

On the several Sabbaths in August I attended a communion meeting in Caldwell church. This was formerly called Paw Creek, taking its name from a stream that runs through the congregation and empties into the Catawba river. But some years since the congregation applied to the Presbytery to change the name to Caldwell, as a memorial to Rev. S. C. Caldwell, who was the first minister who preached and organized the church in that place. The church is located on the railroad running from Charlotte to Lincolnton, six or seven miles from Charlotte—embracing a beautiful and fertile region lying between Charlotte and the Catawba river. There are some things about this congregation that will arrest the attention of those who visit it, and are worthy of public notice. First, the number of very old people. You will find in this congregation more old people than are generally found within the same limits. There are a large number whose ages range from seventy-five to ninety. A few months since a man died in the bounds of that congregation 101 years of age. There is a venerable man still living about ninety years of age, who was long an active elder—a pillar in the church; and though surrounded by infirmities, he is still an example of regularity in his attendance upon the means of grace. These old people indicate that the climate is healthy and that the people are temperate and industrious. But another feature in the congregation that will arrest the attention of the visitor is the number of children and young people. A few years since, when they had no pastor, I was there at a communion, and baptized sixteen children at one time. The children and young people are the hope of the Church. The number of these make this a peculiarly interesting and a highly desirable field for ministerial labor.

Another thing that will be noticed by a close observer is the number of families who have the same name. There are fourteen families of Todds, and fourteen of Cathey, nine Johnstons and five families of McCords. These make up a large portion of the congregation. They have been noted for their unanimity and harmony. But if there should be an apple of discord tossed in among them, and these large families array themselves against each other, they would be liable to fall to pieces, showing that Solomon spoke the words of truth and soberness where he says a brother offended is harder to be won than a strong city, and their contentions are like the bars of a castle. But these numerous families are linked together by many ties of affinity and consanguinity, and they have been successful in keeping the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace.

Presbyterianism has never developed itself as fully in that congregation as in some other places in this county. I think this is owing to the fact that until recently the congregation has never had a pastor to live among them, and thus be identified himself with them. Their ministers have all before this lived outside of the congregation. But brother Cook, who now ministers to them with great acceptance and success, has settled among them and identified himself with them. They feel that he is their pastor; he feels that they are his people. They are greatly encouraged to support him and to labor for them. One result has been that they have raised from four hundred dollars, for half the time (which they had great difficulty in paying), to one hundred dollars for the whole time of their minister. This they pay with cheerfulness and promptness. They are now taking a step in the right direction to build a larger and more comfortable house of worship. This will have a great moral influence in binding the people together and uniting them upon the church of their fathers, for where the treasure is, there the heart will be also. This congregation, with the smiles of the Great Head of the Church, promises to be one of the headquarters of Presbyterianism in this county.

DRIFTING.

There is a great deal of drifting in this world. There are a great many men who are merely chips or straws upon a stream, borne along by the current whatsoever direction it may take. There are many people who drift so far as their views and opinions are concerned. They adopt—no, they don't adopt; they are not active enough for that—they are adopted by the sentiments which prevail around them. They take their color from the society in which they mingle. In Canada we see this in political affairs. The same thing may be observed in the matter of religious belief. A man is torn away from his old faith, such as it is, and landed at length in a faith altogether different, such as it is; and he has not been aware of the change until it has fully taken place. The same thing may be witnessed also in the matters of character and life. Men are all the while floating along calmly, serenely whither they would never deliberately choose to go. They "drift." They "drift" from honesty to dishonesty, from purity to impurity, from sincerity to duplicity, from charity to bigotry.

We have sometimes thought that most of the evils which we see around us are due to this habit of "drifting" on the part of men. One said that "more evil is wrought for want of thought than is wrought for want of heart." And the statement is not far from being true, the doctrine of total depravity to the contrary notwithstanding. Men are led unthinkingly, unreasoningly, by their associations, by forces which they are hardly aware of, forces, certainly which they do not intentionally submit to.

But it may be asked: "Is it not inevitable that men should "drift" to some extent? Is it not inevitable that outside influences should leave their impress upon them? We answer, yes. But then we add: The formative forces should not be entirely outside of men. There should be something within as well as without every man that shall decide what he shall be and do. Every man should have a mind of his own; every man should have a soul and conscience of his own. And before that mind, and before that soul and conscience, every article of belief and every detail of conduct should pass muster. What are men's minds for if they are not made to work? What are men's consciences for if they are never called into operation?

We believe that it is generally confessed that there is much erroneous religious doctrine in the world of to-day. There are those who go far astray because they believe too much. They carry on their backs a burden of traditionalism that is heavy enough to sink a ship of three thousand tons register. They echo all the voices of fathers and grandfathers. Then there are those who go far astray because they believe too little. They will hardly carry an empty soldier's knapsack. But there is worse than this. There is a large amount of defective religious life in the world of to-day. It is crippling our churches, hindering all spiritual progress, bringing disaster and defeat on the armies of righteousness and truth. Why are these things? We have too much "drift wood" among Christians.

Reader, we don't mean you. But try to learn whom we do mean. Look and see if the cap will fit your friend in the next pew. —Canada Presbyterian.

WILL THE JEWS RETURN?

The Record of the Free Church of Scotland, in answer to the question, "Will the Jews return to Palestine?" gives the following important summary:

"This is not a possibility of the far future. They are going back now, and what is more interesting to the Christian is the fact that the land of their promised inheritance is rapidly becoming their own in fee. If we compare the present time with eighty-three years ago, when the Sublime Porte permitted only three hundred to live within the walls of the Holy City, the change is remarkable. Forty years since, the Porte modified this original order so that a larger number could abide there; but they were shut up in narrow and filthy quarters, next to the dog and leper quarters, the objects of contempt and cruel oppressions. But even this quarter restriction was removed ten years ago. And now the ruling power is in the hand of Great Britain, and the sceptre itself is in the hand of an Israelite, and Baron Rothschild holds a mortgage on Palestine as security for 200,000,000 francs loaned to the Sultan of Turkey. It looks very much as if accomplished fact had put itself in the place of prophecy.

"The Jews, after the quarter restrictions were removed, bought all the land which could be obtained within the gates, and have built entire streets of houses without the gates. With the improvements inevitable from liberty and possession of homes have come kindred progressions in provisions of charity for the destitute and afflicted. The German Jews have sixteen of these. Two journals have been started, and in the Rothschild and other Jewish hospitals 6,000 patients are under constant treatment. The Venetian Jews have given 60,000 francs to found a school of agriculture; and, in evidence of a progress that shows divine care and intervention, the number of Jews has doubled in about ten years. In 1869 there were not more than seven thousand Jews, shut up in their quarters; and though a vast improvement on the past, still they appear to us wretched enough to make the most careless sigh over the mighty fallen. But in the five succeeding years they increased to more than 13,000. We do not believe all the Jews will return, even under the most favorable circumstances, any more than all returned from the Babylonish captivity; but God will yet have representative remnants from every nation, kindred, and tongue under the whole heavens. Jerusalem will yet be the joy of the whole earth."

CALL AND WORK.

Probably the larger part of those in the ministry have at sometime passed through a season of peculiar depression and distress in regard to their work. Very often soon after the entrance upon the work there is a sense of a great indefinable want, a reaching out for a something we do not possess. We have chosen our course deliberately as called of God, and we do not desire to turn from it. On the contrary our interest becomes more intense, and we labor more earnestly in it, but we find the way closed upon us, or we labor without results. We toil, but are dissatisfied with our best efforts. This experience often returns upon us at later periods, and always with the same distress of mind.

A careful examination will generally show us, that it arises either from our not working up to our call or from our working beyond it. There is sometimes an introversion of the mind which is supposed to be humility and self-examination, but which is really pride and self-trust. It does not spring from faith and the desire to see large results from our own labors. We dwell with a certain measure of satisfaction on our consecration to God's work, but we as earnestly study our own work and estimate it at a high value. When what we consider our best efforts seem to be fruitless, we are depressed, and lament that all is darkness. The real trouble is, we are not working up to our call. If we would turn away from ourselves to that for which we are set apart, and without thought for ourselves work for God and humanity as opportunity is given; if we should look less for results and more for opportunities; if we would recall our services less and God's promises more; if we would cease estimating effects and prepare more for future work; if we would forget the things behind and reach out unto the things before, caring less for our own gratification and more for God's glory, our seasons of depression would fill our hearts with strength.

This failure to follow closely God's guidance sometimes leads us to work beyond his call, with the same unhappy results. It may be in the line of our real call, but ahead of God's time, or it may be aside from that for which God has chosen us. Paul was not allowed to preach when and where he chose, but he followed closely God's Spirit, and waited or turned aside as directed. We may regard it as a fixed rule that if God calls us he has a work for us to do. If we press forward beyond that call to a work for which we are not yet prepared, as when we fall behind his call, there is disappointment. Ministers are often moved with strong desire for a larger field, or for a different one, but enter it only to find disappointment. A young man burns with a desire to preach the Gospel, and seeks licensure before he has completed what experience has shown to be the necessary training, and then finds himself without appointments in the work he sought. What is the conclusion? That God has not called him to the work of ministry? No, but that he has pressed beyond his call, leaving the work to which he was called, and has entered that for which he is not qualified. His Presbytery accedes to his wish; but if the higher authority has no work for him to do, he may safely go back to his studies and let the licensure lie inactive until he has evidence that he is called of God.

If a pastor feels cramped and longs for a field of larger usefulness, let him be patient and wait, assured that if God wishes him elsewhere he will open the way. If the door is closed, we may knock, but may not push it open. God's call is to work, but it is to the work he puts before us.—United Presbyterian.

THE SENTIMENTAL.

Not many people know to what extent they are controlled by mere sentiment. They do not intend to be so controlled, but they are; and their lives, if this were left out, would be totally different from what they are, and very often much more consistent and effective. For, while sentiment is good in its proper place and measure, it is really valuable only when it is not admitted to authority and government. It acts sometimes as an inspiration, softens feelings that would otherwise be harsh, excites tenderness, affection, and takes away from exact justice the rigidity that might make it despotic, or at least severe, diffusing thus a spirit of kindliness over life that is as beautiful as it is helpful. It would be altogether wrong to banish this element and put men on the regime of precise, untempered, rationalistic devotion to the truth. But reason and conscience must rule when we expect to make our work beneficent, since they alone are able to arrive at such judgment as well stand the test of life and time. We need to take the truth, not to flutter over it and bubble out our admiration and enthusiasm, but to examine it carefully, prayerfully, in the light of the Scriptures and providences of God, and then calmly make up our minds as to duty and what we shall do. The passion of a sudden emotional excitement will easily lead us into all kinds of absurdities if there is not connected with it the balancing power of good rational thought and considerate judgment. A good deal of our religion is too strongly infected with this spirit of sentimentalism to make it stregthening to the soul and character, or hopeful in the world's work. People do not reason as to what they ought to say, sing, or do, but consult their feelings; and acting under their impulses, they easily manifest their strength and exert their influence. The result is a good deal of effort in poor directions, and many spasmodic exhibitions of zeal, which perish and die without success or reward. Very many of the hasty efforts at reform which grew rapidly from small beginnings into convulsive movements, were instances of the influence of this principle. They had much good in them; they were inspired by noble motives, helped by excellent people, and included a large amount of thought and morality, but the power that controlled them was not so much sober intelligence and reason as sentiment. As they appeared suddenly and grew up rapidly, so they quickly passed away.—London Weekly Review.

EDUCATION.

To the Chairmen of the Presbyterial Committees of Education:

Please bear in mind that application for aid to students must be made annually. The fact that a student was on our list last year makes no difference. If he wishes aid this year, application must be made by the Chairman of Education in his Presbytery. Brethren will also please state whether the student is in College, or in the Seminary. The undersigned has authority from the Committee to receive all students as beneficiaries for whom application is made in the regular way.

My postoffice address at present is Covington, Tenn., but letters addressed to me at Memphis will be forwarded. Quite a number of letters on the subject of Education have been addressed to Rev. Dr. Waddel, the former Secretary. Brethren will bear in mind that there has been a change of Secretaries.

E. M. RICHARDSON,
Secretary of Education.

THE BEST WEALTH.

It is not gold or goods that make a man wealthy. The best wealth is of the heart, an enlightened mind, a loyal conscience, pure affections. He is wealthiest who has the largest stock of wisdom, virtue and love, whose heart beats with warm sympathy for his fellow man, who finds good in all seasons, all men. The generous man who pities the unfortunate, the poor man who orders well his life, the loving man who clings closely to his family and friends, the studious man who seeks instruction in all things, are the truly wealthy men.

Rev. P. D. Stephenson of Trenton, Tenn., has accepted a call to Sedalia, Mo., and will soon enter upon his work there.—St. Louis Presbyterian.

The pulpit of the Presbyterian church at Greensboro, Ala., is now vacant. The Female College is also at this time without a principal.

Rev. A. Shotwell, one of the editors of the St. Louis Presbyterian, is off on a recuperative tour. He has worked hard and long, and well deserves the rest.

On 3d inst. John H. Brady and James C. Carr were ordained ruling elders to fill vacancies caused by the death of Lorenzo D. McNair and of Geo. Harrel.

The postoffice address of Rev. J. E. DuBose has been changed from Pulaski to Brownsville, Tenn. He has taken charge of the church at Brownsville.

Rev. L. H. Blanton of Paris, Tenn., who has been absent on a tour in quest of health, has returned home. His health has not improved, and he is unable to resume pastoral labor.

Rev. J. M. Travis writes to the St. Louis Presbyterian: "Rev. C. W. Humphries of Rockbridge Baths, Va., has accepted a call to supply the Pleasant Hill, Paris and Florida churches, all in Monroe county and the Presbytery of Palmyra. Mr. H. is looked for about the 1st of September."

A correspondent of the Christian Observer writes that the church building of the Presbyterian congregation of Danville, under the pastoral care of Rev. Dr. Alexander Martin, is being rapidly demolished, and they hope to have a more modern and capacious one in its place. They worship at present in the Methodist church, and the Synod of Virginia will meet in that building in October.

The church at Lancaster, Texas, is a feeble organization of only twelve members, but is hungry for the preaching of the Gospel. A correspondent writes us that it would contribute $250 the first year toward the support of a minister, and a larger salary the second year. Cannot an arrangement be made to supply it? Prof. C. M. Lyon of Lancaster will answer inquiries in reference to it.—Christian Observer.

The venerable William S. Plumer, D. D., of South Carolina, entered his 78th year on July 26. He is still vigorous, and articles from his pen frequently appear in the religious papers. In his younger years he was a prolific writer. He is the author of twenty-nine volumes and ninety-one tracts, which have been published by New York, Philadelphia and Richmond houses. —N. Y. Herald.

Lebanon church, Albemarle county, has succeeded in obtaining the pastoral services of Rev. B. M. Wailes for a part of his time. A Sunday school has been organized, which gives promise of great usefulness.—Central Presbyterian.

Rev. A. J. Witherspoon, chaplain of the Seamen's Bethel in New Orleans, writes to the St. Louis Presbyterian in regard to his work in that city: "In regard to the Sabbath school work at Carrollton, that mission is supported by the Ladies' Aid Society of the First Presbyterian church (Rev. Dr. Palmer's). The second mission is sustained by the Brotherhood of the same church, and the Bethel by the New Orleans Seaman's Friend Society and Ladies' Bethel Association. These are the three missions I preach to at morning, afternoon and night, which gives me three sermons on Sabbath when ships are in port. At present the quarantine has run all the ships away, and the Bethel is being enlarged so as to contain about 200 more persons. I am at present deeply engaged in the Sabbath school work, which is a very important branch of my work as city missionary, and I thank God for the interest at Carrollton. Rev. Dr. Palmer has entirely recovered, and looks as well as ever, and preaches as often as ever. He is at present gone to St. Tammany parish, by appointment of Presbytery, to preach at Madisonville and Mandeville, two watering places or summer resorts across Lake Pontchartrain. The brethren are all well, the health of the city very good, thanks to God."

GENERAL.

The Baltimore conference of the M. E. Church South has lost by death one of its most highly esteemed members. Rev. Thos. B. Sargent died at his home in Baltimore of apoplexy. He was in his 75th year.

Last Thursday the corner-stone of the new Evangeligal Lutheran church to be erected at Company Shops was laid. It was named Macedonia. Rev. W. Kimball of Gibsonville was master of ceremonies, and Rev. Mr. Lutz of Winston delivered the address. There was a large congregation present. The address was delivered in Union church, and we hear it spoken of as a fine production. The work of building the church is to be pushed ahead, and its completion is looked for by Christmas.—Alamance Gleaner.

From the Carolina Watchman we condense: "The Rowan (N. C.) Sabbath school Association lately held an annual meeting at Luther's chapel. Twenty Sabbath schools and the following denominations were represented: Lutheran, Methodist and Presbyterian. The various questions set for discussion occupied about two days. Rowan County Bible Society held its annual meeting at Luther's chapel, near China Grove, on 13th inst. A fine showing was made, viz: To the credit of this auxiliary with the parent society in New York there is $96 14. On motion it was ordered that $50 of this amount should be donated to the parent society if not needed in Rowan county. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: J. L. Graeber, president; Pastors of Evangelical Churches in Salisbury, vice presidents; J. D. McNeely, treasurer; J. F. Ross, depositary; the executive committee are: P. N. Heilig, R. R. Crawford, J. D. McNeely, Geo. L. Wright, B. F. Rogers and the vice presidents ex officio.

NORTHERN.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The will of Mrs. Means has been admitted to probate in Allegheny county, Pa. She leaves the Home Board of Missions $2,000, the Foreign Board $25,000, and smaller bequests to the Disabled Ministers' Fund and to Bethel church, of which she was a member.

Rev. J. W. E. Ker died in Philadelphia recently, in his 71st year. He had not been in the active ministry lately on account of infirm health.

The Sunday school of the First Presbyterian church, Orange, N. J., has twenty-nine officers and teachers and two hundred and fifty-two scholars. It was formed in 1816 of four persons.

On the 3d of August Rev. J. E. Platter organized a Presbyterian church at Cedar Vale, Chautauqua county, Kansas, with thirteen members. This is the first Presbyterian church organized in that county. There have been eleven churches organized in Kansas since April 1st.—Presbyterian.

The Christian at Work, of which Rev. Dr. W. M. Taylor is an editor, says: "As some of our contemporaries are mentioning the probabilities that the Rev. Dr. Taylor may accept the pastorate of the St. John's-wood Presbyterian church, London, we take occasion to state by authority to state that Dr. Taylor has declined the overtures which were made to him by the St. John's-wood church, and will remain with his people of the Broadway Tabernacle church."

EPISCOPAL.

The Rev. Dr. S. S. Harris, Bishop elect of Michigan, will be consecrated in St. Paul's church, Detroit, on the 17th of September.

The Rev. J. C. Fleischacker has entered the service of the Protestant Episcopal Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews of New York. His duty will be to act as a missionary to the Jews, to induce them to become Episcopalians.

The Protestant Episcopal church in Kentucky owns thirty-eight churches and chapels, and has 4,142 communicants.

Bishop Clarkson of Nebraska recently admitted to the order of Deacons Rev. Joshua V. Himes, who for thirty-four years had been a missionary and editor among the Second Adventists. Mr. Himes is seventy-four years of age. He has been assigned to a missionary circuit in Dakota.

BAPTIST.

Two converts from Romanism were baptized at West Medway, Mass., July 10, by the pastor of the Baptist church.

The Rev. James French has charge of mission property in and about Denver, Col., which he is managing for the Baptist Home and Foreign Mission Societies. This property has already netted to these societies about $40,000, and at the same rate about $60,000 will yet be realized.

MORAVIAN.

At the recent meeting of the General Synod, seventeen invitations to begin new missions were declined on account of a lack of funds.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

Munificent bequests have gone to the Foreign and Home Boards of Missions, and perhaps to other Boards and institutions of the United Presbyterian Church, from the late Mr. John McNab, long a well known and active member and elder in that church.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The new minutes of the Congregational churches of Michigan show a total membership of 17,142, which is a net gain of 633 for the year. From the summary of ministers, it appears that only nine are installed pastors, while 189 are not installed. According to the Congregational Year Book, while there are only 910 pastors regularly installed over their churches, there are 1,806 acting pastors—nearly double the number.

Rev. Enoch Pond, D. D., of Bangor, Me., has just completed a new book of six or seven hundred pages entitled "Conversations on the Bible." This is late work for a man eighty-eight years old. Dr. Pond has been forty seven years in connection with the Bangor Seminary, and his influence over the 500 students who have graduated from this institution, has been great and beneficial. He has prepared for publication over sixty volumes, besides pamphlets. Among these, his lectures on Christian Theology reached a fourth edition, his lectures on Pastoral Duties, a second, and his reply to Dr. Judson on Baptism, a third.—Congregationalist.

LUTHERAN.

The German Lutheran congregation in Pittsburgh, Pa., formerly served by Rev. Mr. Wenzel as pastor, has given notice to the President of the Pittsburgh Synod that they have severed connection with that body, and assigns as a reason that it cannot approve the General Council either as to doctrine or practice.

The Rev. Daniel Kloss, late of Highland, Doniphan county, Kansas, formerly of New Berlin and Lykenstown, Pa., has left the Lutheran church, and is now serving the Congregational church in Highland.

METHODIST.

A Methodist church was dedicated near Haines' Falls, in the Catskill Mountains, on the 27th of July. Rev. Dr. L. H. King conducted the services. The building cost $4,000 and was dedicated free of debt.

The Rev. G. DeB. Stoddard, of Providence Conference, has withdrawn from the ministry and membership of the Methodist church.

The Rev. A. W. Wilson, Secretary of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, has received from a brother in Kentucky $6,000.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

Up to this time $600,000 have been subscribed towards the erection of the Cathedral in New York city. About $5,000,000 will be necessary to complete the Cathedral and the buildings connected with it.

GENERAL.

The Methodist Episcopal Church stands third in the list in regard to the amount of appropriations for foreign missions from the Missionary Societies of the United States. It appropriates $300,664, and the Presbyterian Board and the American Board expend over that amount.

ECLECTICISMS.

DO WHAT YOU CAN.

United Presbyterian:

When a man is able to do but little the temptation to leave that little undone is often very strong. It should be watched and resisted until overcome. The Master is familiar with the measure of our ability, and asks only what we are able to do. Nor shall he that is "faithful in the least" be without his reward.

PRAYER A NECESSITY.

S. S. Times:

"Those who neglect the habit of regular prayer soon find that nothing so quickly affects the sweetness and the strength of the Christian life, or its nearness to a right spiritual condition. As a recent German writer expresses this idea: "The lark goes up singing towards heaven; but if she stops the motion of her wings, then straightway she falls. So it is with him who prays not. Prayer is the movement of the wings of the soul: it bears one heavenwards; but without prayer, he sinks in the filth of earthly impulses."

THE PROBLEM.

Banner:

Then what is to be feared in this country now, is not consolidated Romanism, but disintegrating Romanism. What American institutions and the Protestant churches have to meet and deal with now, is not Rome with its adherents held firmly in its grasp; but what is much worse, these former adherents escaping from Rome and in their blindness and madness ready to resist all civil and religious authority. This is the problem to be solved, so far as Romanism is concerned; to American statesman and the evangelical Churches must address themselves, as well as to the other responsibilities crowding upon them at the present time.

MAKE NO APOLOGIES.

Zion's Herald:

Do not engage in the objectionable practice, in the pulpit, of making apologies. If you have nothing worth saying, the people will find it out soon enough without your telling them; if you have a really valuable thought, they will consider your apology a misstatement, or an act of unpardonable vanity. In either case it is better to speak out plainly what you have to say. You need have no fears that the people will not know the value of your utterances. They know you better than you know yourself, and after all your attempts to hide your defects under shallow apologies, will estimate your service for just about what they are worth.

THE REASON WHY.

Exchange:

Albert Barnes says many times, "No man has more piety than he wishes to have and labors to have." I verily believe the reason why so many of us are spiritual pigmies is because we have such low conceptions of what we ought to be. We have a sort of undefined idea that we ought to be more spiritually-minded, and that it is possible for us to become so, but we have never called a halt in the march of life long enough to look into our hearts and see how far we are from what it is our duty to be, and to form a fixed purpose to attain a nearer approach to God. We may sing "Nearer, my God, to Thee," till we grow gray, but we shall make small progress until we form the habit of private meditation and prayer.

TOO "TOUCHY."

Methodist Recorder:

The average Christian man is too "touchy." He manages to get himself insulted too many times in a year—about the seventy times seven. The gospel plies the figures on the other side of the count. Christians must bear patiently the offences of the world. Even a brother's offense must be forgiven, once, twice, thrice, again and again into indefinite hundreds of forgotten pardons. But how painfully true is the remark that Christians show temper about as quickly as quick-tempered sinners! Let there be mastery of this rebel self. The lips that pray and sing praise should not so easily quiver and turn white in rage. The true disciple is sweet-spirited and loving and gentle and calm.

IS THERE LOSS OF POWER?

Church and School:

"Why has the pulpit lost its power? is the plaintive inquiry of some melancholy individuals. We would answer this question by asking another! How do you know the pulpit has lost its power? One sure indication of prevailing and generally influential talent in any direction is the number of eminent names connected with that field of effort. And in what generation has there blazed a brighter constellation of eminent preachers than now? Consider, too, the revivals which are so frequent in our days. Further, scrutinize the actual influence of the average pastor in the average congregation. From all these observations we shall be inclined to reverse the inquiry above and ask, What is the secret of the prodigious power of the pulpit in these days?

THE CHURCH ONE.

Herald Presbyter:

Christ speaketh not of fields as many, but of the field as of one. We speak of nations who are savage or barbarous, or half civilized, civilized or enlightened. We speak of Christian and of heathen lands, of the home and foreign fields. To make the classification, as a matter of convenience, is no doubt proper enough, but we shall err grievously if we ever allow them to suggest the idea that any one part of the earth is entitled more than another to the reception of the gospel blessings. Let us not forget that the Church is one, or, at least, ought to be one—not necessarily one in organization, but one in faith, one in Christian effort and Christian love.

BEAR THE BURDEN.

Wahrheitszeuge:

"Ah," sighed an old, faithful clock which I had in my room, "what a burden is life! These weights wear me out. With much pleasure would I say, 'Tick—Tick,' and strike, as is my duty, if I only need not carry these dreadful heavy weights; I am not free from them one single hour." So it sighed daily, till I, moved with pity to my dear old favorite clock, took away its weights, when its complaints stopped; but it never gave me a sign of gratitude since; it was henceforth silent as the grave. So it would be with many of us if we were without the burdens of life. No doubt they are often heavy and wearisome, but needful to our spiritual life.

SECULAR NEWS.

Reports of wrecks by the late gale continue to come in.

The floods in England are fearful—in some places the highest ever known.

Accounts from counties east and west report the corn crop as unusually large.

Two new cases of yellow fever in New Orleans. The report that it is spreading is denied.

The London Gazette announces that the Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath has been conferred upon Lord Chelmsford, late Commander-in-Chief of Her Majesty's forces in South Africa.

Great excitement prevails in San Antonio on account of the prevalence of small pox. Five white families are infected. Heretofore the disease has been confined mainly to Mexicans and negroes.

A St. Petersburg dispatch to the London Daily Telegraph says very serious signs of a disturbance have been observed among the peasantry. The recent proclamation affirming the permanence of the present disposition of land was designed to meet the grave and increasing danger.

The London Missionary Society received a telegram, August 23d, from Aden, announcing that Dr. Mullens, formerly foreign secretary to that Society, died of peritonitis on July 10th. Dr. Mullens had gone, at his own urgent request, to assist in establishing a mission on Lake Yongarzika.

A dispatch dated at Henry, N. C., 24th inst., states that on the night of the 23d the mail and passenger train on the Western North Carolina railroad, with an excursion train attached, was wrecked at Mud Cut by a landslide. A coach containing excursionists was completely buried, but no one was seriously injured.—Star.

Rev. J. S. Kalloch, nominee of the workingmen's party for mayor of San Francisco, was shot on the 23d by one DeYoung, whom, in a speech, he had denounced. Intense excitement was the immediate consequence. DeYoung was hurried to jail and the workingmen assembled demanding his delivery to them. General McComb, commanding the State troops, in the absence of the Governor from the capital, called on the U. S. Secretary of War, and obtained 50,000 rounds of ammunition. Troops have been called out to defend the jail. A collision is imminent. Kalloch was shot through the left lung, but there is a probability of his recovery. At latest accounts Kearney, the famous leader of the workingmen, had succeeded in quieting the crowd for the time.

The yellow fever shows no signs of abatement in Memphis. The report for the week made on Saturday, 23rd inst., was 148; whites 69, colored 79. Total number of deaths from yellow fever, for the week, 31; to date, 177. Crime is on the increase. Threatening letters have been sent to the newspaper offices, containing threats against citizens, and especially against city government officers, if certain demands are not complied with. Vigilance committees are talked of and daily accessions are made to the minute men. The police force is also being strengthened by the addition of a mounted force for all-night duty. This branch of the police had lively work with a gang of six men, who committed a robbery on Trigg avenue, Thursday night, finally succeeding in capturing five of the number. A white military company has been organized.

MAJOR LYNCH'S SELECT SCHOOL.—The school of Major Lynch, at High Point, deserves consideration from those looking for an institution where their boys will not only receive a thorough education, but be kept under the strictest moral restraint. The Principal has associated with him Mr. B. P. Reid, a first-honor graduate of Davidson College. The village of High Point has fine advantages in that it is a healthy location, board can be had cheaply, and Sabbath services are held by the four evangelical denominations. Send to Major W. B. Lynch, High Point, for circulars setting forth the special advantages of the school.

ATLANTA MEDICAL COLLEGE.—The advertisement of this institution appears in this issue. It is no doubt worthy of the patronage of those pursuing medical studies. Its reputation and standing are said to be equal to the highest.

Mr. McNeely is Agent for the Missionary also.

TO AGENTS.

It will not be practicable to write to each one of the Agents of the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN, and ask them to continue their exertions. We now make the general request, and take occasion to thank them and all other friends for the disinterested kindness so fully and so constantly manifested in the past.

MESS. POLK, MILLER & CO.:
I have used your "VEST POCKET DYSPEPSIA CURE" and it acted like a charm; quickly cuts and dissolves cankered stomach and is all it claims to be a "NATIONAL REMEDY FOR OUR NATIONAL DISEASE."
J. W. THOMAS, M. D., New York City.
July 2, 1879.

WORKINGMEN.

Before you begin your heavy spring work after a winter of relaxation, your system needs cleansing and strengthening to prevent an attack of Ague, Billious or Spring Fever, or some other Spring sickness that will unfit you for a season's work. You will save time, much sickness and great expense if you will use one bottle of Hop Bitters in your family this month. Don't wait. See other column.

MARRIED.

☞ No notice of a marriage or death will be inserted unless accompanied by a responsible name, which is wanted not for publication but as a guaranty of good faith.

In Fayettteville on the 19th inst., by Rev. Jno. M. Rose of Portsmouth, Va., Rev. H. G. HILL, pastor of the Presbyterian church of Fayetteville, to Miss KATE L. SHEPHERD, second daughter of the late Judge J. G. Shepherd.

DIED.

☞ Obituary notices must be paid for in advance. The first ten lines are inserted free. The excess over ten lines is charged for at the rate of ten cents per line. Correspondents can ascertain what an obituary will cost by counting eight words to a line, and multiplying each line by ten cents.

In Cabarrus county, Aug. 11th, little JENNIE GOODNIGHT, daughter of C. M. B. and A. J. Goodnight, aged five years, three months, and fourteen days.

O Lord! the message from Thy throne has come,
We hear Thy voice and give her back to Thee;
With tears we lay our darling in the tomb,
In faith her spirit at thy feet we see.

Miss MARY A. MORRISON, daughter of the late George M. Morrison, of Bethany congregation, Iredell county, N. C., died on the 26th ult., aged about 65 years.

She had been a member of the Presbyterian Church about 50 years. She suffered a long time with paralysis; and in the latter part of her life endured great pain with patience. She rested from her labors in the joy of the Lord. Death was gain.

In Salisbury, N. C., Aug. 15, 1879, Mrs. MARY B. McKENZIE, wife of Mr. Jno. W. McKenzie and daughter of Mr. J. J., and Mary A. Bruner, in the 31st year of her age.

Though assured that to her death was gain, yet her influence and her presence here seemed so necessary, that many attached friends and relatives cannot help feeling saddened by the void made by the departure of this estimable and lovely Christian woman. A sorrowing husband, six motherless children, parents, brothers and sisters mourn, but not as those who have no hope. Brought up in the Presbyterian Church here, she had been for a number of years a worthy and consistent communicant in the same. Naturally joyous and bouyant in youth, in the midst of household cares and wasting illness, she was brave, faithful, untiring, submissive, hopeful. She was ready to depart and be with Christ. J. R.

Charlotte Institute.

THE next session begins September 10th, 1879, and ends June 8th, 1880.

No Institute ever made more rapid progress in securing the confidence and esteem of its patrons than this one during the past session. Before the end of the scholastic year the number of its pupils, attracted by the well-earned reputation of the school, increased to 117, exclusive of the adult ladies who availed themselves of the superior advantages here given in the departments of Music, Art, and Modern Languages. In no respect is this Institute inferior to any other first-class boarding-school in the Southern or Middle States. Such testimonials as will satisfy an one as to the high standard and thoroughness of the instruction here are published in the catalogue These testimonials are peculiarly trustworthy, inasmuch as they are given by gentlemen engaged in teaching in well known schools and colleges of the highest grade, and who are therefore qualified to express an opinion in regard to educational institutions.

The total expense for the half session or term will be $125. This amount includes board, with washing, fuel, lights, furnished room and servants' attendance, tuition in all the English branches, Latin, with either French or German, Calisthenics, text books and stationery for school purposes. Pupils are not permitted to incur additional expense without permission of their parents. Parents are thus assured that their bills will not be greater than they expected.

Special arrangements and special terms for young ladies who wish to take only Music, Painting and Drawing, and Modern Languages, severally or collectively.

TALBOTT'S PATENT SPARK ARRESTER
The Invention of the Age.

It does not destroy the draft.
It does not interfere with cleaning the tubes.
It will not choke up, and requires no cleaning.
It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable, as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape.)
It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation, destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, if neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler is kept in a filthy condition.
It is simple and durable and can be relied upon.
It can be attached to any boiler.
No planter should be without one of them. Insurance companies will insure gins and barns where the Talbott Engines and Spark-Arresters are used at same rate as charged for water or horse-power.

FOR THE FAMILY.

No Time Like the Present.

If you're told to do a thing,
And mean to do it really,
Never let it be by halves;
Do it fully, freely.

Do not make a poor excuse,
Waiting, weak, unsteady;
All obedience worth the name
Must be prompt and ready.

When father calls, though pleasant be
The play you are pursuing,
Do not say, "I'll come when I
Have finished what I'm doing."

If you are told to learn a task,
And you should begin it,
Do not tell your mother, "Yes,
I'm coming in a minute."

Waste not moments nor your words,
In telling what you could do
Some other time; the present is
For doing what you should do.

Don't do right unwillingly,
And stop to plan and measure;
'Tis working with the heart and soul
That makes our duty pleasure.

Summer Out of Doors—After Moccasin-Flowers.

BY ROSE TERRY COOKE.

Mrs. Nemily and I have "plants on the brain," as a scoffer says, and a certain Monday not long ago, though it was Monday, was also June.

I had wrestled all the morning with a patent pen, warranted to make writing a mere pastime; and in the strife I had ruined my dress with splashes of ink, colored my fingers deeply and darkly, smeared the illusive and treacherous little machine imaginatively called a "filler" from end to end, and entirely destroyed my temper (for after all these mishaps the patent thing declined to make its mark), when suddenly I remembered that we two plant-lovers had heard where the pink moccasin-flower grew, and had planned to go and find it that very afternoon. It was refreshing enough to my tired head and weary fingers to think of such a rest, but it was better still to arrange it successfully, and, after some contriving and some coaxing, we persuaded Peter and Paul to take us. Mrs. Nemily and Paul, however, did not wait for Peter and me—they had a stop to make at their uncle's, and we followed as soon as might be.

The day was cold, and not bright. "Nice winter weather" Peter sarcastically remarked; but still there was summer foliage about us, and plenty of wraps supplied warmth; so, well satisfied, we began our journey down the lovely little valley that lies south of Mytown.

On one side of us a sharp precipice rose, covered partly with trees, but showing here and there a sheer cliff of cruel granite from among the leaves that fluttered lightly in the wind! On the other hand, a bright little meadow spread its varied tints of green, enameled with deep-blue flag-flowers, golden buttercups, milky daisies, and the deep orange tassels of a slight, tall swamp-flower whose name I forget; the harmony of color was wonderful, the tints countless, elusive, indescribable, but all exquisite; and as we crossed and recrossed the bright brook that fed all this greenness, and saw the big-headed kingfisher fly from his sport at the noise of wheels, with harsh creak, or the oriole flash across the grasses, and heard a cat-bird giving his gratuitous concert from the topmost twig of an elm, it was impossible not to think how God must have enjoyed creating so beautiful a world. Think of it! to have made one of those wild-convolvulus vines that wreathe the rough fences must have been pure pleasure. Look at the detail of those classic leaves and perfectly graceful sprays—every fine outline and delicate angle defined with a beauty sculpture never knew; and in a few days what airy cups will open to sun and dew all over this lovely verdure; cups pink with the cool, reserved tints of dawn, not the rose's warm and living blush, but that cold and serene pink that early morning alone knows; and as one bud closes itself in a spiral of sleep another opens, as gracious and as fair, close on the place of the sleeper. Even the insect that preys on this wild beauty is in itself splendid, being a tiny beetle, so shining that it looks like a diamond spark in the sunshine.

This is high art, dearly beloved; and you who labor at cat-tail reeds and awkward sunflowers, making the screen of the period, for the amusement of posterity, should come out into the fields with me and see how much more lovely are the weeds with which Nature decorates than all the ungainly devices of Eastlake or conventional posies of Morris. If I could paint, I would cover my walls with a trellis of these wild bindweeds and make you admire in spite of yourselves.

After a half-hour's progress through this clustering and crowding beauty of leaf and flower and bird, we overtook our friends.

"What is it we are going after?" inquired Paul, with a meek voice, belied by the twist of his mustache.

"Cyripedium satisfactionem!" mocked Peter.

"Oh!"

And then they looked at their wives, but met only silent contempt. Mrs. Nemily and I are hardened to their scorn; it does not affect us from men who carry a daily paper into the woods, or smoke a cigarette in the perfumed silence of a forest nook. An occasional indulgence in diluted botany pleases us and does not hurt them; while cigarettes and papers in such precincts wound the finest feelings of our natures. But, as my ten-year-old daughter sagely remarks:

"You can't rely on men, Mamma!"

We were just turning off the road as this scornful jeer assailed us, in through a pair of bars, and past a tiny cemetery where lies in peace one whom we all remembered. A true and typical New England woman, fragile as the wild anemone that springs in the clefts of the rocks, but sternly conscientious and faithful to duty as the grimmest Puritan of old New England days. Poor child! it was curious and pitiful to see the war of spirit and flesh that wore her into her grave; the fair, delicate face, with set lips and cold, sad eyes, the constant toil imposed on a figure slight as a young birch sapling, and as ill able to endure the weight of work and responsibility she took on herself as that delicate tree to bear the snows of a severe winter; and, at last, the unwilling yet patient suffering unto death, and the latest words of a tired soul:

"Now I shall have rest! rest!"

All this came back to me as I cast a look at her green grave; and thought of her abundant entrance into the kingdom and peace of God.

Past this little garden of the Lord, a few steps brought us into the forest-path where we hoped to find our treasures. On either side stately pine trees rose up far in air, and made columns of rich darkness, which rarely a stray sunbeam entered and reddened; the ground was strewn with brown and slippery "pine-needles," and above, the crowded boughs, soft and dark, sang, like the anthem of the sea, a choral, grand and powerful, though subdued as organ-tones heard afar off; incense of God's own making filled this earthly temple, and the ground was strewn with bright-scarlet berries on trails of deep, green vines, tiny spires of the smallest convallaria, delicate and fragrant as its namesake, the lily of the valley, and here and there a fresh cluster of the smaller ferns. We stood enchanted; the beauty of Nature is so finished, its minutest detail is so perfect, that it tells a story of divine creation by its very contrast with man's rough work. There was a moment's pause, and then a bit of deep pink met my eye.

"There they are!"

And Mrs. Nemily exclaimed:

"She has found them first! I knew she would!"

And why should I not? I have known them ever since I went with my father, in the old chaise, a little child, to gather them on Windsor plain; I have been with another since, not only to gather but transplant them; and with neither of these shall I ever drive, or walk, or talk again, till the dead alive and the living dead find mutual resurrection. The flower lives and talks to me still—why should I not recognize it before a stranger?

Yes, there they were, the straight, clean stem springing up from between two broad, large leaves that lay flat on the sand and pine-needles; a stem almost overborne with the quaint, veined, deep-pink pouch, that has an accord with the tint of the pine-trees and their slender columns curiously harmonious. The need ask no daintier moments for his little feet, as he stands to drink sweet dews from the painted cup's vermillion edge, where Bryant saw and sung him, than this cool and pink-veined shoe of deep purplish pink, swung ready for him on its green stem.

"Brown and slender Manitou of flowers"

Here were enough to have shod a tribe of Manitous; and, with the hunger of true plant-lovers, we could not get enough. Though we filled our baskets with sods, threaded through with the thick, fibrous roots, yet the more we took up the more there seemed to be, nodding gently in these brown and odorous glades; and we began to wonder if their kindred, the gold-colored and the great rose-and-white cypripediums grew thereabout.

We pushed on through the slippery paths, and came out on a bit of meadow, sunny and golden-green, hiding in its low, sweet grasses lower and sweeter straw-berries, the first of the season, and flavorous to a degree unknown to the baskets of civilization. While we explored for further blossoms, Peter and Paul profaned the gracious scene with their morning paper and cigarette, and we had our quest to ourselves—and a bootless quest it was. Nature had but one gift for such greedy children; we must be satisfied with its profusion. So we turned our faces homeward, across the hills, swept now by chilly winds, while, high in heaven, a mighty cloud, stretching from the northeast like a pair of hovering wings, threatened storm for the morrow. But we cared little now; we had found the pine moccasin-flowers, and set in our souls a perfect woodland picture and the memory of a pleasant day; it was one of out-door summer glories never to be forgotten; and on the frame of this landscape is written:

"Oh! if so much of beauty pour itself
Into each vein of life and of creation,
How beautiful must the great fountain be!
The Bright! The Eternal!"

The Pope's Private Garden.

Its particular interest is in the fact that for eight years the Popes have not stepped out of the Vatican Palace except to go into this garden, and naturally it is jealously secluded from profane intruders. However, we bribed the official and were let into the garden surreptitiously with permission to remain an hour, and we improved the time to the utmost. Until recently it has been only a place to stroll about in on foot. But now the Pope is having a carriage rode made through it, and has just had an elegant landau constructed in Rome, with the papal escutcheon upon it, expressly to drive about the garden in. The principal avenues are bordered by flat hedges, and in passing along you catch glimpses, through green arches, of the sweetest little sylvan retreats that you can imagine—birds singing, fountains babbling, light and shade playing through the flickering leaves, the air full of the scents of orange-blossoms and roses, shady paths winding in and out, up and down, in the most distracting way, the ground covered with a thick matting of leaves, the accumulation of years. Here, an ancient sarcophagus, with sculptured figures in relief; there a marble statue, gray with age, and a something inexpressibly weird in the twilight gloom, the solitude and air of neglect and decay. Again, you emerge upon open, sunny spaces, and the promenade skirts a quadrangular space sunken fifteen or twenty feet, with perpendicular walls, originally, perhaps, the vaults of some ancient construction. This is laid out in an immense flower-garden, and in the midst the gorgeous papal monogram traced in living verdure.

"A pretty surprise was a small grotto in rock-work, representing that of Notre Dame de Lourdes, in which stood a little fancy figure of the Virgin, at her feet a little grating through which offerings were dropped, and three tiny streams of water flowing from tiny spouts into a little basin, and above these words: "Drink and be healed." Of course, we applied our mouths to the little streams and drank the consecrated water.

"We thought we had explored every nook and corner of the garden, but had failed to find the place we were specially in search of, the famous casino, where Pius IX. used to sit on sunny days, and which is said to be a favorite resort of the present Pope for studying and writing. We met a servant who went with us to show the way, and gave us a boquet of exquisite damask roses. The casino is completely enclosed and hidden by high hedges, entered by a single arch. Following a path through shrubbery, we passed under a deep stone archway, lined with mosaics—three niches each side filled with ancient statues—and came upon a small circular esplanade with fine mosaic pavement, enclosed by two semi-circular loggias or porticos supported by marble columns, the ceiling and inside walls covered with beautiful but faded frescoes and curious mosaic and shell work, with niches occupied by busts and statues. All around was a wilderness of flowers and shrubbery, and close by the great dome of St. Peter filled in the view. Finally through a distant arch, we saw a vista of trees, and following it up came out upon an elevated terrace, where, under the shade of old trees covered with purple blossoms, was a large basin of water upon which was a man-of-war in bronze, eight or ten feet long, the rigging complete, rows of cannon projecting from its sides, the mariners at their post. From this terrace was a view of the city, the castle of St. Angelo prominent in the foreground and Monte Mario on the left, the valley of the Tiber beneath and the Campagna stretching out to the Alban range in the distance."—*Cor. Life at the Seaside.

A correspondent of the Southwestern Presbyterian gives such a graphic and picturesque account of sea-bathing, as practised at the summer resorts, that we are fain to copy it for our readers:

NARRAGANSETT PIER, R. I., August 12.

Mr. Editor: The spectacle of hundreds, or at our popular seaside resorts, thousands of people, attired in costumes of every fashion or hue, rushing into the waves and plunging about in the foaming spray, amidst such a clamor of cries and laughter-peals as was never heard except in a mad-house, is certainly a very strange, if not an absurd one. Very grave characters, however, indulge in this exercise, and the fascination of it seems to be well-nigh universal. I have half a suspicion that one element in the charm of sea-bathing lies in the fact that the party engaging in it enjoys a temporary escape from the rigors of dominant conventionalisms. Think of a majestic Senator or a venerable divine exchanging their symbolic robes for a suit of blue or gray flannel, encasing the whole person from neck to knee, trimmed with white tape, and belted with a white circingle—think of such a personage emerging from his robing-room, bare-headed, bare-footed and bare-armed, stepping along the strand, lifting convulsively first one foot and then the other, as the cold waves strike them; cautiously getting deeper and deeper into the water, until, when his body has accommodated itself to the temperature of the element, a broad grin of satisfaction spreads over his countenance, and he is ready for any of the antics of the bather. Do you not believe that a large portion of his enjoyment consists in his exemption from buttons and neck-ties, from starch and buckram, and in the liberty allowed him, without a breach of decency or a loss of respectability, of playing the boy again? Or think of the young maiden, living habitually under the regime of Fifth Avenue etiquette, and fretted in every movement and impulse by a law of fashion as stern in its exactions as that of Draco, feeling herself free to appear before the public with her head turbaned with a fantastic oil-cloth cap, with her body enclosed in a sack of coarse material, girdled at the waist, and descending to the knees, and eked out by loose and short pantaloons, concealing while not confining the limbs, with her feet encased in blue, red, or variegated stockings—think of such a creature feeling herself actually privileged to skip and gambol over the beach like some young animal just let loose from the tether, and to laugh and shout in very emulation of the breakers; and to float or swim, or flounder, ad libitum, on the surging waters! Does not self expand, dilate, revel in a joy as sense of personality and vitality under such circumstances, on a scale unknown to the poor imprisoned soul under the remorseless restrictions of social despotism? I never see this motley crowd, in the furor of glee which seems to possess them while in the surf, without reflecting, "What a set of children these people are," and without adding to this reflection, "Yes! but this is the essence of their enjoyment—the very cream of their pleasure—that they are here permitted to be children once more."

Without any speculation, however, there are reasons enough of a most obvious kind to explain the attractiveness of this diversion. It has in it the gratefulness which attends bathing generally, made manifoldly more intense by the facts that the element here is salt water, not fresh, and water which is in perpetual motion, not still; that the continuity of an excited multitude disposes the mind of each participant in the sport sympathetically to share in the prevalent excitement, and chiefly that bathing in the ocean and the surf is an exercise which enlists the constant attention, the agility, and sometimes the stalwart strength of the person engaging in it. In fact, he is for the time a sort of athlete. He is resisting force incessantly, and force which, if he is not on his guard, will some time give him an ignominious fall. The evidence of the amount of muscular energy put into play by a fifteen minutes' struggle with the waves is the lassitude and the desire for refreshment or sleep which commonly follows the process. The approach of a monster billow generally has a twofold effect. It starts one crowd of bathers (the agile and experienced) towards it, that they may meet it at a proper advantage; and another crowd (the timid and inexpert) landward, that they may get beyond the line where the billow is likely to break and pour down its volume in a concentrated cataract. Fat and bulky people, presenting so much surface to the wave, are particularly apt to be sufferers in the melee. I have in my mind the picture of a very large rotund man who was completely felled and submerged the other day, whose look of bewilderment as he regained his footing after his temporary burial "in gurgite vasto," was indescribably ludicrous. The worst of his case was that, just as the consciousness that he had somehow been very badly treated was dawning upon his mind, another enormous billow came and put him through the same process. What the issue of this experience was, I do not know; probably a rapid exit, on his part, from the water.

The secret of the art of dealing with a breaker is simply to detach yourself from the land. To retain your hold on this is resistance. To surrender it is to let the surge bear you along, as it will do, of course, a short distance, and then plant you on the bottom again. Most persons therefore, upon the approach of a wave, meet it with a spring, and are clasped by it thus as in an embrace, instead of being smitten by it, as with a blow. Sometimes, as a long billow comes rolling in to the shore, hundreds of heads may be seen bobbing like jugs upon its crest. An alert swimmer will dive into its bosom, as it rears itself to the breaking point, and pass quietly through it. Others avoid a shock by stooping so low that the projected volume of water curls over their heads, with comparatively little violence, provided always that the feet be lifted from the ground. The sea apparently is supreme in its own domain. Your trust in terra firma must be abandoned, if you would propitiate its powers. This process of obviating the fury of a rushing billow reminds one of the Scripture method of turning away wrath by a soft word. While the rank and file of the bathing army are engaged in this contest with the breakers, a detachment in front and another in the rear are pursuing in different forms, their sport. In the foreground the little folks, with infinite delight, dabble in the broad area of snowy spray, into which the broad billows spread themselves; while away out beyond the gathering swells, in what is called "smooth water," a score of adventurous experts may be seen swimming at a distance from the shore, which [illegible] der. [illegible] accidents [illegible] confidence or fool-hardiness on the part of the victims. It will be due to somebody in this class, I greatly fear, that some day the boast, so often uttered here, "No life was ever lost at Narragansett Pier," will be contradicted.

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER!

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventative for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. They were used during last season in New Orleans very successfully. The common method of using them was to apply them over the stomach, changing them every week. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS and seem to destroy the poison. One reason why they are of special value is that they stimulate the digestion, and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison. They are a cheap and almost certain preventative. Ask your physician about them. Benson's Capcine Plasters are a sure preventative and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price 25 cents.

A SINGULAR CHARACTER.

In John xiii: 2 it is said that the devil put it into the heart of Judas to destroy Christ, and verse 27, "After the sop satan entered into him." But this possession by satan is by the free consent of the man's own will giving way to the devil, and not like the demoniacal possessions so often mentioned in the Bible, where the evil spirits took forcible control of human faculties, and used them at their pleasure. "We all feel (says Trench) that Judas' possession, when satan entered into him, was specifically different from that of most of the unhappy persons whom Christ came to deliver." He sold himself to work iniquity, and in his case, who had enjoyed so great privileges, taking such a course after eating with the Lord, we are taught a solemn lesson with regard to those who have stood high in the Church, and have handled holy things, and yet have turned back to work wickedness.

We once knew a case of this kind where, though the man was not outrageously criminal so that the civil law could take hold of him, yet who did great evil in society, and his peculiarities took a singular turn.

His name was John R—. His grandfather, of the same name, had been a long time before the pastor of a church in Duxbury, Massachusetts, and he probably inherited the liberary of his ancestors, for, at the sale of his effects after his death we saw a good many large folio volumes, like Pool's Synopsis.

He was born in 1760, in one of the interior towns of Connecticut. His father was an extensive merchant, in the old revolution, and also a farmer. He was connected by birth and marriage with the first families in the country, the Hydes, the Trumbulls, &c. The father was a near neighbor to Jonathan T. (Brother Jonathan), Governor of the State from 1770 to 1783.

He had the best opportunity for early education. Within less than half a mile of his father's house was at that time one of the most famous schools in the country, kept up continually for more than thirty years by Nathan Tisdale, a graduate of Harvard College in 1740. The academy, in the centre of the town, stood on an open grass plot a few rods south of the church, and a school was kept up in it till near the middle of this century. Master Tisdale's school acquired such a reputation as to attract scholars from the West India Islands, Georgia, North and South Carolina, as well as from New England and the Northern colonies. His pupils, it is said, were received at Yale College, on his recommendation, without examination.

John R— also had one of the best preachers for pastors up to the time of going to college—Rev. Solomon W—, who was graduated at Harvard College in 1719, and ministered at that place from 1722 to 1776. A man of learning, an able preacher, faithful pastor, a friend of education, the above mentioned school was established mainly by his efforts. It is said of him "that few ministers of his day accomplished so much for the promotion of literature and science among their people as Dr. W—."

John R— entered Yale College and was graduated in 1780. Where he studied theology we do not know, but there were several neighboring pastors, men of ability, if no one yet had succeeded Dr. W—, in his native place.

January 14, 1789, he was ordained and installed pastor of a Congregational church in Massachusetts. Whether he had preached there sometime before his ordination does not appear. A writer in the American Quarterly Register, Nov. 1837, says: "More than six years elapsed before Mr. R—, Mr. Parkman's successor, was invested with the pastoral office. He continued in the place several years, but incipient difficulties, which early appeared, were not diminished by time, and eventually resulted in his dismission. He then removed to Connecticut." He resigned there October 1, 1807. What he did in the meantime does not appear, but he returned to his native place in 1815. He had married Abigail Drury in Massachusetts, and had two children. His wife died December 29, 1816. His daughter was a grown young lady in 1823. His son, John A., went into commercial business in a large city and acquired great wealth, but died long ago.

The reason of his dismissal from the church in Massachusetts is left very indefinite. We do not know of what he was guilty, but infer that he was deposed from the ministry and excommunicated from the church. He was a man of wealth, and bought out the interests of the other heirs in the paternal estate, settled down there and became a very troublesome member of society. He had law-suits and quarrels continually. There was a goose found in the highway, on the opposite side of the way to him. A neighbor, thinking it unhealthy, ditched and drained it off. He sued the neighbor for that. He got a telescope, by which, when at home, he could inspect the premises of his neighbors for some distance around. Sabbath mornings he would station himself at the church door, and insult the preacher as he entered the sanctuary, "Well, old pope, you have not stuck the tomahawk into me yet." The pews were annually sold to raise the salary. He could secure any seat he desired. He selected one near the centre of the church on the broad aisle, in the most conspicuous place, and just before a pillar that supported the gallery. He had a peg driven into this to hang his hat upon. The writer has seen him come in late in cold weather, wearing a large overcoat, with a large cape, with a great many brass buttons. Before taking his seat he must have his hat in the right place, unbutton his overcoat and take out of his vest pocket a little awl, to fasten up his watch to the back of the seat before him to watch the progress of the sermon. Then he would commence ahem! ahem! which he would repeat some sixty times in one sermon.

A few days ago a man told the writer that he had seen Mr. R. going to church on Sabbath morning in the warmest weather of summer with that overcoat on and woolen gloves, as if very cold. If he had loaned out money and the borrower displeased him any way he must pay up the money immediately.

One of the worst of his acts, and one which perhaps exceeds all ever heard of before, was that as he could keep his seat in time of communion he brought his own bread and wine, and when the officers of the church carried around the elements he partook of his own by himself.

After the loss of his daughter in 1823, and the departure of his son, being cut off from society in a high degree, he married, in February, 1824, Betsey Tiffany, born in 1769, who had lived for a long time in the old storehouse on his premises with her aged mother, and had many years before lived in the family of the writer's father.

But at length, in 1832, he died suddenly—fell down in a fit at a street corner not far from the church where he had acted so strangely—at the age of 72. He went to his sad account after preaching and administering the sacrament eighteen years.

Must we not conclude that, in some sense, the devil entered into him?

His last wife survived him till 1871, when she also died, aged 102.

A few days ago we saw the lofty granite monument, more lasting than brass, erected by the son in his lifetime to the memory of his ancestors, with eleven names engraved on it. The family name is now extinct in that region of country? E. F. R.

COMMENTARIES ON THE BIBLE.

NO. IV.

Rev. L. C. Vass, Newbern, N. C.:

6. Rev. Mr. Barnes was a prolific commentator on Scripture. His excellence as a pastor and a certain prominence, acquired by his conspicuous and unenviable position in the great church controversies and schism of 1837-'8, together with his studious habits, combined with adaptation of his ealier efforts in the preparation of "Notes on the Gospels," especially for the benefit of youth, conspired to give great popularity and success to all his expositions on the Scriptures. His works on the Old Testament—Job, Daniel, Psalms and Isaiah—are not comparable for extent of learning, judiciously applied, with the commentaries of Dr. Alexander, even those on the Psalms. His extensive reading and familiarity with German Biblical literature, enabled him to produce works of great merit, but his scholarship was rather of that kind which evinces great knowledge than great wisdom. His admiration of German authors on criticism on the Scriptures, or an inability to discriminate rightly or to apprehend fully their tendencies, hindered him from decidedly refuting positions of the German school of criticism, and, by independent discussion, sustaining interpretations which have been so extensively received as to become almost a constituent part of the Faith of the Church. (See Barnes on Job. xix: 25-27.) His work on Psalms is more creditable and useful, though his system of interpreting the Messianic Psalms is, to some extent, liable to the criticism already given on some.

7. Blayney on Jeremiah and the book of Lamentations, while containing much excellent matter, presents a notable illustration of a failure to arrange the prophet's writings on some other plan than that in which they had appeared for centuries, and been approved both by Jews and Christians. Owing perhaps to this failure, as much as to any other cause, the work has fallen into comparative obscurity.

8. Burke's Guomon on the Psalm's is a good specimen of the olden criticisms. It gives full analytical summaries; and his exegeses is good for the exegetical culture of his day.

9. Bythner's (Lyra Prophetica) work on the Psalms, has retained a high reputation to our day, and deservedly. Though almost limited to a grammatical interpretation and verbal criticism, it may yet be used with profit to aid in a student's training in that kind of criticism. Yet later writers have made such use of his labours as greatly to diminish the demand for this work. The recent reproduction of an edition of some of the writings in Oriental literature is a tribute to his excellence. The edition to which allusion is made contains his Grammar: whether the "Lyra" is comprehended has not transpired.

10. Alford on Genesis and part of Exodus must not be omitted, though passed over in this attempt to follow an alphabetical order. Dean Alford is better known by his excellent critical and expository work on the New Testament. His effort in the interpretation of this part of the Old Testament is equally creditable to his learning and to his skill in making a right use of knowledge, which can by no means be said to have puffed up its professor. In few, well-chosen and sound words, he "puts to silence the ignorance of foolish men." His commentary is full, without being tedious, and explicit and positive, without being dogmatic. His effort is directed rather to the instruction of the mass of the people, than to that of their teachers; and yet not without decided advantage to them, providing them, not only a training to study and the communication of knowledge, but also exemplifying the method of making that knowledge intelligent and edifying to others. There is no parade of learning; and while making difficult places smooth and plain, he does not encumber his text nor burden his readers with the minute processes by which he reaches his results. His commentary on the New Testament will be noticed in the proper place.

11. Caldwell on the Psalms. Mr. C. was an earnest and devoted minister of the Episcopal Church. His brief professional life was spent in Norfolk, Alexandria, and Amherst county. His work is incomplete, there being only fifty Psalms expounded, in a series of lectures. The exposition is devout, practical and suggestive for the reader, and highly valuable as such, though not critical.

12. Cowles on the Pentateud, Psalms, Ezekiel, Daniel, Proverbs and Songs, is probably the part of an intended exposition of the whole Bible. Mr. C. has adopted a plan of commenting on the Scripture very much resembling that of Dr. Alexander. He gives us the results of his studies of the Scripture in the original languages. His conciseness with clearness and judicions as well as sound exposition rank him among the best of our authors of American birth and rearing. There is every reason to expect him to be an extensive writer on the Scriptures, and from the specimens now published, his works may prove not only sound, but eminently instructive in the best methods of studying the Scriptures in the original languages, and also edifying to ministers and people at large. While, in explaining the Psalms, he accepts, for many, the principle of a double or higher as well as a lower application, on the ground that with proper modification, language adopted to express sentiments belonging to all Christian people, also presents them as having a culminating verification in the experience of the Messiah; at the same time, he recognizes in the clearly marked Messianic Psalms a primary and sole application to Him of whom David "in the Psalms" as well as "Moses" in the Law and "the Prophets" did write.

Yours truly, B. M. Smith.

A SCENE IN CHURCH ON SUNDAY.

A rich merchant, a poor widow, a young man battling with temptation, and a poor cigar-maker who had lately lost his wife, were among the number who entered the massive portals of the elegant church at E——, last Sunday night. The rich merchant sought his highly upholstered pew, the poor widow an obscure corner, and the cigar-maker and the young men endeavored to make themselves comfortable near the door.

The service commenced; the choir sang a hymn alone, the minister kneeled on a soft ottoman and prayed for all the world, then the collection was taken up, a long list of ungodly amusements was announced for the coming week, another hymn was sung to a tune which no one knew but the choir, and then the minister, with all eyes riveted upon him, announced his text. Until then a helpless and disinterested look upon the faces of our friends; the service as yet had no attractions for them. The merchant was evidently in the realms of stocks and bonds, and worrying about the coming dividend. The poor widow was in doubt about the coming rent. The cigar-maker had been in church twice since his wedding—once at his wife's funeral and on the present occasion; he evidently did not feel at home. The tempted young man was still agonizing over his temptations, and discussing it pro and con.

But now, as the minister stands up to deliver the oracles of God, their disinterestedness is turned to expectancy. They evidently felt "hungry." It matters little where the text was located, the subject was "Evolution." The congregation settled itself down to hear a fine discourse, and to luxuriate in the realms of their minister's fancy. Vast and deep was the learning he had acquired, long and wide were the paths of knowledge he had trodden. He summoned all his logic and rhetoric to demolish his opponents, and the ghosts of ungodly science were only summoned forth to be put to a glorious flight. Tyndall, Huxley and Darwin were crushed beneath the weight of his arguments and consigned to everlasting infamy by the invective of his sarcasm. He had arrived as far as the Carboniferous period and was holding before his hearers' eyes the first vestiges of an arborescent vegetation, when a wave of uneasiness passed simultaneously over our four friends. Their destitute hearts rebelled against the feast of mind. The merchant had left one part of his heart to be filled with Christ. The elements of his better nature had pleaded with him to wait at least until Sunday night before he had given that sacred reservation to the world. But now as he sat listening to "Evolution," stock, bonds, merchandize and worldly ambition was soon scrambling for the sacred locality and Christ stood without grieved. The poor widow immersed in deep affliction was looking for the hand of Christ to draw her out. Instead of her having her wounds healed up with the balm of God's mercies and promises, there came floating toward her in soft cadences and mellifluous sweetness, words that she understood not and which sounded like "Crustacean," "Articulates," "Batracians." She went down to her lonely house with her face dimmed and with a heart whose longing had remained unsatisfied.

The poor cigar-maker, who had always thought more of tobacco than of Christ, had lately been brought into the presence of God by the death of his wife. He had just caught a faint glimpse of the fact that the best part of life was beyond the grave. Hastening to the church he listened eagerly for some words of cheer, and looked in vain for beam of hope. A gap had been taken out of his nature, and he was unconsciously looking for Christ to fill it. But a despondent look settled over his face as the void remained unfilled, and he never knew how near he had been to the kingdom. What was he to know about the "tridactyl foot-prints of ornithoid reptiles!" The tempted young man had come to church as a place of refuge. Fierce and bitter was the conflict which was raging within him. He listened eagerly for some words of comfort, but none came. Instead of Christ's pleadings he heard something about the Tertiary epoch. Instead of having some sweet peace distilled into his soul he listened to a Ciceronian period on prehistoric man." He gave up in despair, and just as the minister was ending in a brilliant peroration the temptation overpowered him. And as the vast congregation was slowly wending its way out of church enlivened by the peals of the organ there were four who were going into the coming week with dissatisfied hearts. There were four who had hungered for Christ and had been filled with the husks of science.—New York Advocate.

A LITTLE WHILE.

REV. WASHINGTON GLADDEN.

What is this that He saith?
"It is but a little while,
And trouble and pain and death
Shall vanish before His smile.

"A little while," and the load
Shall drop at the pilgrim's feet,
Where the steep and thorny road
Doth merge in the golden street.

But what is this that he saith?
"A little while," and the day
Of the servant that laboreth
Shall be done forever and aye.

O the truth that is yet untold!
O the songs that are yet unsung!
O the sufferings manifold,
And the sorrows that have no tongue!

O the helpless hands held out,
And the wayward feet that stray
In the desolate paths of doubt
And the sinner's downward way!

For a silence soon will fall
On the lips that burn for speech,
And the needy and poor that call
Will forever be out of reach.

"For the work that ye must do
Before the coming of death
There remaineth, O faithful few,
But a little while," He saith.

—Sunday Afternoon.

LIGHT READING.

It is not to be denied that, considering the nature of their wares, publishers and booksellers have certain responsibilities which do not press upon those who are engaged in other trades, except those which supply the world with food and medicine. The butcher and the grocer are bound not to sell unwholesome food; the apothecary not to sell adulterated drugs, or poisons, except under certain restrictions; and the publisher is, in like manner, bound not to sell indecent books, or books which he believes to be of evil tendency. Apart from these considerations, however, he is free in his calling like any other manufacturer or trader, and may—must—sell just what his customers prefer to buy.

* * * * *

There is now and has been for a long time, in operation an influence at work upon the external form of all literary publications which has tendered not only to reduce their bulk and to cheapen them, but to make them brief and even fragmentary. That vaguely outlined but pretty well apprehended and very important personage, the general reader, has a great dislike for anything long, except a long story—that is, a novel. For readers who are not specialists in reading (and the general reader is never a specialist) it is useless to publish voluminous books. The continuous cry is for small books—something short. Moreover, length is not the only characteristic in disfavor with the general reader. He dislikes systematic treatment, thoroughness and detail. He wants everything made short, simple and easy. He likes a primer of literature, a primer of science, a primer of art, in which a man who has thoroughly studied a subject has prepared it for him, the reader, in such a way that he can feel that he has mastered it in a month or a week—why not in a day? He is quite ignorant that the disentanglement of a subject and the systematic reconstruction of it, with the thought demanded by those processes, is the most valuable part of study, and that the more he frees himself from this trouble the less will he really know about anything. However, the demand for literature in this form is imperative. The monthly magazine is the result of a conformity to it, and newspapers of the present day contain articles upon subjects in science, literature and art, which twenty-five years ago no editor would have ventured to publish. This fashion has its objectionable points. It tends to encourage superficiality, to engender conceit and to lead incompetent persons to form opinions upon very insufficient knowledge. But on the whole, its tendency is good. A little knowledge, however great, must be little in its beginning. The fashion of administering literature, science and art in small and simple doses brings great numbers of people under their influence who otherwise would remain without a tincture of any one of them. People who would not touch any bound book but a novel will read a little paper bound pamphlet or a magazine article, or if not equal to one of these, an article in a newspaper, upon a subject of which they would otherwise remain in ignorance. In this way thought is stimulated and the appetite for knowledge provoked. This is one of the means by which the present time has become one of such general intellectual activity. The mind of the world at large has been excited to action by little books on great subjects.—N. Y. Times.

CHRISTIAN WOMEN.

We have no doubt there are hundreds of educated Christian women in all our great evangelical churches, who are just now for the first time, beginning to find out what they can do and what they were made for. There are some within the circle of our acquaintance who have made this discovery within the last ten years, who have waked up to the consciousness of new spiritual life, to the glorious discovery that God has given them a work to do, a mission of usefulness to fulfill. They have seen, as though the scales of worldliness and selfishness had fallen from their eyes—that there is a higher life for educated Christian women than that of selfish enjoyment. They have seen the folly of a mere butterfly existence in the sunshine of fashionable society. As by an inspiration from heaven, they have been made to feel that God and society and the church of Jesus Christ, and a world yet lying in the darkness of paganism, have claims upon them which are not met and answered by a life spent in the frivolity and extravagance and heartless dissipations and elegant gewgaws of what is called genteel society. What a waste of life and health and money and happiness is everywhere witnessed in the gay saloons and parlors of this great world of fashion where woman shines! And what a new world of power will be gained for God and the true ends of existence when all this talent, education, influence of society's queens shall be converted, consecrated, and turned into other channels!

This is just the change which is now going on among many of the best educated, the most gifted, the wealthiest and most accomplished ladies of our times. It is a change which will reconvert half the Church. But it is going on, God is moving on the hearts of his daughters as on a great deep. It is at once the deepest and most important fountain of influence in the world. Many have discovered already, and others are making the discovery every day, that there is something after all worth living for, that God has given to women in his Church a sublime destiny, that He has consecrated her by a baptism from heaven to a noble work, and that she may learn what it is at the Cross.—Correspondence of the Interior.

AMERICAN MISSIONS IN TURKEY.

The Seventeenth Annual Meeting of the Mission to Eastern Turkey has recently been held at Mardin. This mission has four stations—Mardin, Erzroom, Van and Harpoot. It also has several large and important centers, as Diarbekir, Mosul, Bagdad, Bittis, Trebizond, etc. On account of the disturbed state of the country no meeting was held for the last two years. The reports from different parts of the mission are unusually encouraging. In the Erzroom field, which was ravaged by the late war, there are increased congregations and a new spirit of inquiry. In regions where the truth was wont to be rejected with violence people are now asking for preachers and teachers. Even in Southern Russia, in the region beyond Kars, in the districts of Erzroom, Tiflis, and even Echmiadzin, the residence of the Catholicos, the spiritual head of the Armenians, there is a strong leaning toward the truth. There is not very much religious liberty in that part of Russia, but there is much more than formerly, and if cautious, wise laborers were at hand they would find abundant opportunities for sowing the seed, opportunities such as have in previous years been sought in vain. In the district belonging to Mardin there is also unusual encouragement. The ancient Syrian of Jacobite Church has its center in that field. The process of disintegration has evidently begun in this church. The Patriarch has been absent in England, India and Constantinople for five or six years, and the members of that communion are looking about for some other spiritual home, with an apparent leaning towards Protestantism. Mosul, which was once a missionary station and which has more missionary graves than any city in the interior of Turkey and which is a stronghold of the Papacy, was never in so hopeful a state as now. A large company of respectable men are in the habit of meeting together every Sunday for the study of the Bible, who are so largely leavened with the truth as to be practically Protestants. And the papal Nestorians, of whom there is a respectable number, are becoming disgusted with Rome. Even in Bagdad a little light appears to be springing up. The great want everywhere is faithful, earnest laborers. The workers are out of all proportion to the harvest. Mr. Cole is at present alone in Erzroom, where three missionaries are absolutely essential. The missionary force in Mardin, too, needs to be strengthened by the addition of another family to help to care for Mosul and to lead the Jacobites, who occupy the district between Mardin and Mosul, to the truth. There is also a great lack of native laborers of the right kind. "Turkish reforms" are still talked about. Two Reform Commissioners, one a Turk and the other a Papal Armenian, have recently been sent from Constantinople, with large salaries, to execute reforms. They are now at work in Diarbekia. They make large pretensions, but there is little hope that they will accomplish any permanent good. Reforms can hardly be accomplished through the agency of the Turks. They are too thoroughly corrupt. Possibly the Central Government may have some expectation of improvement, but it is a question whether this whole movement is not an intentional sham to deceive England and Europe once more. Sir Henry Layard, the English Ambassador, in private letters, constantly expresses the hope of substantial improvement, but with reports from consuls and others, constantly describing the actual state of affairs, it is difficult to see how such a delusion can be maintained. The corruption of Turkish officials is not the only reason for despair or reform. The Government is bankrupt, and its debt is increasing every day. It appears to have no care for the people, but is continually making them poorer. During the war a large amount of paper money was printed and scattered through the country. As it was irredeemable, except for taxes, of course it depreciated rapidly until, a few months ago, by a telegram from the capital, it was demonetized and in a single hour it became nearly worthless, and many were ruined. So too in regard to copper. This has been the basis of trade for a good many years. As it was not in use at the south, the region about Harpoot was flooded with it, and there had come to be quite a large discount upon it. The other day the local government wholly abolished it, making no provision for its redemption, so that in a single day this money, too, became nearly worthless, and the community are left to suffer. It is not allowed to be carried elsewhere. There is no principle of political economy which is not habitually violated. How can political reform come through such hands? In addition to these evils, there is a prospect of scarcity of food and high prices. Rains for the last year have been very deficient. Poor crops are universal as far south as Bagdad. The northern part of the great Mesopotamian Plain, which is one of the chief grain-producing districts of the Empire, is almost naked.—Christian Union.

PARTIAL TRUTH.

It is said by a man of skeptical spirit that "of the two ministers he heard, one preached about God as if there had been no Christ, and the other about Christ as if there had been no God." Assuming the justice of this charge, both were unfaithful to "the ministry of reconciliation" with which they had been entrusted, a ministry, summed up by the Apostle in the proposition, "That God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them." Nor is it enough to say that each sacrificed half of the truth which this proposition embodies. God, without "the grace of Christ," is not the God of the Scriptures, and Christ, without "the righteousness of God," is not the Christ of the Scriptures. He only has the truth here, who has the whole truth; all that comes short of this is falsehood.—Presbyterian Journal.

FOREIGN.

A recent accession of twenty-six persons to the Presbyterian church in the City of Mexico is announced.

The 700,000 Protestants of France contribute 1,000,000 francs a year for the support of home and foreign missions.

Returns show that the operation of the Sunday Closing Act in Ireland has diminished the number of arrests for drunkenness two-thirds.

Padre Cruci, an ex-Jesuit, is editing an Italian translation of the Bible, with the design of bringing accepted Protestant and Roman Catholic versions into harmony with modern scholarship.

The Archbishop of Canterbury publishes an appeal for two young clergymen to go to Kurdistan to teach the Nestorians, who are anxious to revive their church, and have asked the Church of England to send them teachers.

The English Church Missionary Society received the very large sum of $237,930 from the children alone during the last missionary year. It was gathered by the little collecting books, cards and boxes that the society sends out.

At a prayer meeting in London, special prayer was asked for the Divine blessing on 10,000 postal cards that had been sent out to "upper class families," each card bearing four texts of Scripture. Lord Radstock and some of his friends have largely engaged in this variety of evangelical effort.

It is stated that the names of the Roman Catholic prelates to be raised to the purple at the consistory to be held at Christmas or Easter next are under consideration, and that the hat to be allotted to Great Britain will be given either to Monsignor Strain, Archbishop of St. Andrews, or Monsignor Maccabe, Archbishop of Dublin.

Mr. Charles Dickens addressed to Mr. Spurgeon a series of questions respecting the Metropolitan Tabernacle, to be answered for the "Dictionary of London." One of the queries related to the "terms of membership." Mr. Spurgeon replied that at the Tabernacle they have no terms: "the condition of membership are conversion and baptism."

Dr. Blodget, of Pekin, writes to the Missionary Herald some cheering news from that city. He says eleven persons have just been received by baptism, including a family of six from Ho-kien-fu, who were relieved last year as famine sufferers. One of the baptized was a Buddhist priest, named Meng, who surrendered his certificate of priesthood, his sacred bowl, and his sacred garments, and lost withal a very comfortable income.

The Canada Presbyterian says that "there is a Presbyterian church among the Chippewas—or the Ojibways, as they call themselves—on Lake Superior. They now report twenty-two members, with a most excellent and intelligent Indian (half-breed) pastor. Last year eighteen were received to the Church, and fourteen adult baptisms show that these were from the heathen Indians."

A singular claim for the recovery of 30,000 francs has been brought against a priest in the neighborhood of Madrid by the heir of a connoisseur whom he had attended in his last moments. The plaintiff alleges that the defendant refused to absolve the dying man until he had burned two valuable paintings by Rubens, as he objected to them from a moral point of view, and that this act of vandalism had injured the estate to the extent mentioned. The court has not, as yet, given its judgment in the case.

It may be a matter of surprise to many that there is a Christian church in the city of Cabul, Afghanistan. But in the Bella Hissar (or walled fort) and not far from the Ameer's palace, there has been a little Armenian church ever since the days of Nadir Shah, and his little band of Armenian Christians have been allowed to worship their God and Saviour undisturbed in that church all through the many political and administrative changes that have taken place in that city. At one time there was a considerable number of Armenian Christians in Cabul, but now there are not more than twelve souls. Most of these have received baptism from clergymen of the Church of England.

The Russian Synod has voted 50,000 roubles towards spreading the Russo-Greek religion in Japan. Intelligence received by the Synod from its numerous missionaries in the Mikado's dominions reports a rapid increase in the number of converts, at Tokkio alone, there being now more than 1,000 Japanese professing the Russo-Greek faith. Recently the chief official supervising the prisons in Japan joined the Russian Orthodox religion, and ordered his subordinates to allow the missionaries to pursue their labors freely in the establishments under their charge. His conversion has had the effect of causing 120 persons to change their religion for that of Russia.

A Spanish correspondent writes to the London Review that "a recent occurrence at Garriquella, near Figueras, in Catalonia, has attracted attention. Some Protestant pastors were arrested by the civil guards or gendarmes on Sabbath before last, during Divine service, the congregation being dispersed, the women driven out of the place of worship, and the men stopped till their numbers and their names were written down in the police books. The Correspondencia, the most popular and most extensively read paper in Madrid, justifies the conduct of the authorities by stating that 'the free exercise of public worship is subject to some legal formalities, and that one thing is the temple, and another the domestic hearth. As these formalities were disregarded the domestic hearth lost its immunity, and hence the arrest of the pastors.' If one can understand the Correspondencia, it should be inferred that, though meeting for Protestant worship in a temple or church is allowed, family prayer in a house is a crime, and those taking part in it are liable to arrest and prosecution. Be it remembered that the service was at Garriquella, where the Protestants have no chapel, was held not by a 'domestic hearth,' but in a large room in a private house with open doors."

A singular wedding took place on Saturday last at Barnes parish church, the ceremony being performed by the Rev. John Ellerton, M. A., rector of Barnes, the bride and bridegroom, Eliza, the eldest daughter of Richard Shipman, of Hope Villas, Barnes, and Robert Froude Prettejohn, being members of the "Garden of Eden" of the Order of Danicites, which was organized at 40 Brunswick square, W. C. The pledge of that society is to abstain from flesh, fowl, alcohol and tobacco. The guests, as well as the bride and bridegroom, wore a pair of silver tassels on the left shoulder, the badge of the several vegetarian societies in common, which was very effective. After the ceremony the company partook of an excellent breakfast, consisting, in addition to a large and costly bridal cake, of greengages, pineapples, strawberries, gooseberries, cherries, melons, bananas, nuts, savory vegetable pies, haricots, lentals, green peas, and numerous other savories, various fruit tarts and pies, biscuits, syrup of limes, lemonade, &c. The reverend gentleman who officiated, being one of the party, expressed his surprise that such an elegant and sumptuous wedding breakfast could be prepared to the exclusion of all animal food, the tables literally groaning under the weight of a delightful variety of the fruits of the earth. One of the most remarkable novelties of the occasion was that the bridal pair and guests had the privilege of dipping in the waters of the river Jordan, which had been brought from the Holy Land by the founder of the order, who, in a speech in praise of the vegetable system of diet, stated that, being a life vegetarian, he was delighted to think that this wedding party, which was the first he had ever attended, should be of the Order of the Danielites.

Dean Stanley, in a sermon recently delivered at Westminster Abbey, on the Book of Common Prayer, maintained that there are two modes in which that book may be improved—namely, by giving greater elasticity and freedom to forms of worship, and by removing stumbling blocks which contract the limits of the Church of England, and give offense to persons outside its borders. In the course of his sermon the Dean said: "On this, the seventh Sunday after Trinity, an extraordinary scene took place in the chief church of the city of Edinburgh, which makes the day and the service forever famous. On the seventh Sunday after Trinity, in the month of July, 1637, the English liturgy was read for the first and last time in the National Church of Scotland. It had been forced upon the Scottish people by the imprudence and haste of England, and its prayers were received as the symbol of an alien Church and a superstitious religion, and the congregation became more and more excited as the service proceeded, and at last, as the Dean of Edinburgh read the collect, in which we joined to-day, 'Lord of all power and might,' an old woman threw a stool at his head, and the church became the scene of general uproar, and from that day to this the English liturgy has never been read in the National Church of Scotland—not even in the time of Charles II. The incident is worthy of reflection. It shows the folly of thrusting upon a reluctant people forms of worship, however excellent, with which they are not familiar. It shows, also, how greatly these fierce asperities are softened by time, for although the English Prayer-Book has never been adopted by the Church of Scotland since that day, hostility towards it has almost passed away, and I myself have read again and again in Scottish churches the very collect which almost cost the Dean of Edinburgh his life."

WILMINGTON, N. C.:

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 1879.

THE TRUE PRINCIPLE OF ACTION.

As there are all sorts of people in the world so are there all sorts of people in the Church; that is to say there are all varieties of disposition and all kinds and degrees of mental characteristics. We have the quiet, gentle, lamblike dispositions who represent the graces of Christianity, and we have rugged untamed natures who, while they work most zealously for Christianity, manifest little of its spirit, and we have all that lies between. God requires what he has given us to be used in His service. We may not plead that we do not possess the peculiar gifts or graces needed for the various occasions or opportunities which arise. It was so in times that are past. The modest retiring, sweet-tempered, Melancthon, in the earliest days of the Reformation, amid all the clamor and amid all the turbulence of the times did his work well; John Knox braving royalty in all the fearlessness of a martyr spirit improved the occasion presented to him. So Calvin, Luther, and later Wesley and hosts of others. We may not all be reformers. We certainly are not all called to devise new plans, to innovate upon established usages, or even to pull down all that is now standing in the hope that some new and better structure will be erected. Our best service probably in the present state of the Church would be to strengthen the things that remain. The plans, the modes, the machinery of our Church are sufficient for present practical purposes. If they are not the best that can be devised, at least no better have been tried, probably no better have been suggested. The work before us we say distinctly is not to pull down but to build up. To employ all our powers of mind, all the advantages of whatever kind we may possess, in pushing forward the work which our hands find to do. We are not disposed to deplore the fact that in the Church are those whose disposition is to throw every obstacle possible in the way of every plan proposed, whatever that plan may be; we are not disposed to complain that they have nothing to propose in lieu of that which they would destroy, or that at best any plan they propose has nothing better to recommend it than the fact that it has not been tried. We do not complain of these things—we do not regret them—because the fact that all schemes, or modes of operating them, will be certainly opposed and opposed with deadly vehemence, necessitates the utmost wisdom in projecting and the utmost skill in maturing any plan for the work of the Church. The very difficulties sure to be encountered ensure the strength and solidity necessary to perpetuity and effectiveness.

Our present machinery and our present modes are fully adequate to the work to be done, but yet the work halts. Certainly there is much to be done that we are not doing. One difficulty, it seems to us, is lack of system—system founded on a single principle; such a system as would throw every thought, every affection, every action forward to one single point. The whole army of Cromwell moved forward like a machine directed by the hand of one man, for it was vitalized by a single idea, that of duty to God.

So all the powers of the Church, so many of which are now latent, ought to be invigorated by the truth that Christ is our Lord and King, as well as our Redeemer and Saviour; as a writer now reaping his reward expressed it: "Christ Jesus, the Lord; not only Redeemer, but King; to be not merely trusted, but loyally served." With this as a principle actuating not only every preacher, not only every office-bearer, but every individual of the Church; not only occasionally, or from time to time, but every day, every hour—at all times; not calling into service a part of one's talents, or gifts, or substance, but laying everything wholly, entirely, absolutely at the Lord's feet—we say with this, which is only reasonable service, Christianity would be an irresistible force, and peace and gladness would soon reign throughout the earth.

ROWLAND HILL.

Sir Rowland Hill died last week in his 84th year. He was early celebrated as a mathematician, and conceived ideas with regard to postal reform. He was the inventor of the penny postage system, which has accomplished so much for Great Britain and the world. In 1837, when he proposed it, it was speedily approved by the nation and adopted by the Government, and he was employed to have it put into successful operation. From the first the plan succeeded, and while every other department of the Government went into arrears the Postal Department made a surplusage of revenue. Nevertheless an unfriendly political change threw Mr. Hill out of office. A public testimonial raised £13,000 for him, and he soon regained his position. On his retirement on account of ill-health, Parliament granted him £20,000, and his salary of £2,000 was continued to him for life.

He received many medals and other testimonials, and was made a Knight Commander of the Bath. He deserved all of his honors as a public benefactor.

DEATH OF REV. B. WAYNE.

The Southwestern Presbyterian contains the following announcement of the death of Rev. Benjamin Wayne of Napoleon Avenue church, New Orleans:

"On last Thursday morning we were startled by the intelligence of the death of Rev. Benjamin Wayne of this city. We had seen him a few days before in excellent health, anticipating an excursion to Mandeville, to fill a Presbyterial appointment, and the fact of his death seemed almost incredible.

"He had preached on Sabbath, August 17, and closed with more than usual impressiveness, exhorting the impenitent in view of the great uncertainty of life. Next morning, as he went into bathe, he plunged from the steps of the bath house and fell, his groin striking on the top of a broken post in the water. He fainted in getting out, but was at once taken to the house of a friend. Inflammation set in, and he died of peritonitis on Thursday morning, August 21st.

"He was an earnest and assiduous minister and a useful citizen. In the year 1857 he became a member of the Presbytery of New Orleans. At that time a little missionary enterprise was trying to hold itself together in the upper suburb of the city. It attracted his attention. They frankly told him there was no prospect of anything permanent. He asked them 'if there was no prospect for a minister who was willing to contribute two-thirds of his salary?' With that understanding he commenced his labors there. And there, against wind and tide, with self-denying toil, supporting himself by teaching in the public schools, he was laboring until the time of his death. By his untiring zeal, the Napoleon Avenue church—a neat, well furnished, solid brick church—was built and paid for. It will serve as a fitting monument to the memory of his devoted and self-denying life.

"The funeral services were conducted in the church. Addresses were made by Drs. B. M. Palmer, T. R. Markham and H. M. Smith, who had been associated with Mr. Wayne ever since his entrance into this Presbytery. Revs. James Beattie and J. W. Flinn took part in the exercises, which were concluded at the grave with a touching prayer by Dr. R. Q. Mallard.

"The day was stormy, much like that on which we interred the lamented M. W. Trawick a year ago, but the church was well filled with sympathizing friends."

METHODISM IN NORTH CAROLINA.

The following shows an improved prospect. It is from the Raleigh Christian Advocate:

The spiritual condition of the church, we think, is better than it has been for years. There is less liquor-drinking, less indulgence in worldly amusements, and more earnest workers in the church than there has been for sometime. It is true there are some who drink liquor and indulge in worldly amusements, and many who do not work at all, but we are satisfied from the reports made, that the number of each is less than heretofore. Then the financial condition of the church has been and is still improving. Our people are becoming more and more interested in the support of the ministry, as a general thing, and the financial outlook for the future is promising. Taken all together we are rejoiced to believe that our church in North Carolina is in better working condition than it has ever been. We are not standing still, we are improving. Let us see to it that we continue so doing. God has a grand work for us to do. Let us qualify ourselves for it. Let every minister and every layman, every woman and every child, find something to do in the church for God. If the Methodists of North Carolina would gird themselves aright and afresh for the conflict with sin and, in solid phalanx, charge upon the enemy in every stronghold of vice in the land, a new era would dawn upon the church and upon the State. We can accomplish wonders for God. Let us do it.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

We see our exchanges North generally congratulating themselves on increasing subscription lists, and our Methodist and Baptist contemporaries in this State are rejoicing in a like spirit. We trust our friends will determine that the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN shall keep pace with them.

The Jews propose to elect a chief rabbi for the Jewish congregations of the United States. Delegates from twenty-five congregations lately met in the city of New York for that purpose. Rabbi Malbin has been mentioned for the position, as one whose learning and eloquence could be made very effective in developing Judaism, but the meeting did not accomplish anything definite.

The Convocation of Canterbury, as is known, accomplished nothing with regard to the Ornaments Rubric. In answer to the Royal Letters of Business it has issued a schedule covering over fifty fools-cap pages and containing one hundred and forty-three recommendations touching forty-seven Rubrics. The Convocation of York also failed to agree upon any action in the matter of the Ornaments, and it is left unchanged.

In the Methodist Church there is what is known as the "holiness movement," a revival of the doctrine of perfection. One of the prominent speakers lately used this language:

"Many mistake the nature of sanctification in confounding purity of heart with maturity. Purity is something taken away from the soul; maturity is something added to us in more development and growth. A man may be a child in sanctification as well as in justification. Purity is an instantaneous work, and maturity is a gradual work."

We can readily take in that maturity is a gradual work, that is that sanctification is not a state, but a work of grace—but we are confused on that idea of purity. We would like to have the proposition made clearer.

The Roman Catholics of England are not growing in influence although increasing in numbers. There are a few Romanist members of the British House of Commons, but they are all Irish. A secular paper notes this:

"There is not a single Roman Catholic peer, except Lord Acton, who now is never heard from, whose utterances command attention, scarcely one even of those have changed their faith, whose voice is heard in the House of Lords. The dutiful Duke of Norfolk, a figure-head at meetings, has no reputation for ability; neither has the millionaire Marquis of Bute. It is this conspicuous lack of Roman Catholics in high places which has gone so far to neutralize the triumphs of Rome in the matter of converts. Moreover, this has been further lessened by the circumstance of the conversion of father or mother being by no means necessarily followed by that of children. The late Lord Dunraven joined the ancient faith; the present peer is Protestant. The Duchess of Buccleugh became a Romanist; her husband and all her children are Protestants. Again, the Marchioness of Lothian's change to Rome had no influence upon the religion of her son, the Marquis. A huge crop of curates and maiden ladies has unquestionably been garnered by Rome in England, but of the men who permanently affect opinion on national life, but a very small number."

The following account of the English Wesleyan Conference we copy from the Christian Union:

"The meetings of the Wesleyan Conference since our last report have been largely attended. Sixty candidates for the ministry have been examined as to their Christian experience and call to the ministry. The Stationing Committee has made its report for the coming year. The ordination service of the candidates, held August 7th, was crowded and very impressive. The service, adopted with slight changes from that of the Church of England, was read by the President the Rev. B. Gregory. A large number of ministers took part in the act of ordination by the laying on of hands. The charge was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Rigg. In the report on the examination of candidates, it was noted that there was a decline in proficiency in Hebrew and Greek. The Rev. William Arthur and the Rev. Frederick W. Macdonald were appointed a deputation to visit the Methodist Episcopal Church in this country. Reports show a total membership of 377,613 with 23,984 persons on probation. During the past year 40,152 new members have been received. The revision of the Liturgy gave rise to an animated debate. In many Wesleyan chapels Mr. Wesley's abridgement cannot be found, and the service of the Church of England is used almost without alteration. As the result of the discussion, the whole matter was referred to the next Conference, a committee being authorized to gather suggestions and get advice of counsel on the proposed revision in the meantime."

With regard to Romanism in New England the figures look startling enough, but the Christian Union shows that the growth is from emigration:

An examination of statistics shows a remarkable growth of Roman Catholicism in New England during the last thirty years. There are now connected with this church six dioceses, one arch-bishop, five bishops, 596 priests, 520 churches, eighty-one chapels, two colleges, thirty academies, 107 parochial schools, containing 33,609 pupils; nineteen asylums, seven hospital, and a Catholic population of 861,000. The growth in thirty years is indicated by figures which show an increase in that time of four dioceses, four bishops, 524 priests, 525 churches and chapels, twenty-nine academies, 107 parochial schools, twenty-three asylums, and 761,000 Catholic population. If these figures represented a spread of the Romish faith among a resident population they would certainly be startling, and much has already been made of them as indications of a remarkable church growth, and as prophetic of the future strength of the Romish church in this country; but it is significant that they nearly correspond with the increase of foreign population in New England in the same period of time. The Boston Weekly Advertiser estimates the increase of foreign population during this period, by immigration and by birth from foreign-born parents, at about 893,010. The spread of Romanism has been therefore, almost entirely among its own adherents.

Baboo Keshub Chunder Sen, is a man of very great learning, the leader of the Brahmo Somaj, and a man withal of very great influence among his people. He is one of those pitiable beings who are stretching out their hands towards the truth, but seem to be not able to grasp it. Groping he is in the dark, and yet the man who could utter such words as the following is surely not beyond hope. In the course of a lecture delivered by Chunder Sen in Calcutta a few months ago he asked "Who rules India?" What power is it that sways the destinies of India at the present moment?" And he then proceeds to give the following answer: "You are mistaken if you think that it is Lord Lytton in the Cabinet, or the military genius of Sir Frederick Haines in the field, that rules India. It is not politics, it is not diplomacy, that has laid a firm hold of the Indian heart. It is not the glittering bayonet nor the fiery cannon that influences us. * * * Armies never conquered the heart of a nation. No! If you wish to secure the attachment and allegiance of India, it must be by exercising spiritual and moral influence. And such indeed has been the case in India. You cannot deny that our hearts have been touched, conquered, and subjected by a superior power. That power is Christ. Christ rules British India, and not the British Government. England has sent us a tremendous moral force in the life and character of that mighty prophet, to conquer and hold this vast empire. None but Jesus—none but Jesus—none but Jesus ever deserved this bright, this precious diadem, India; and Christ shall have it."

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

Some sacrilegious wretch stole the communion service from the Presbyterian church in Pineville, N. C. There ought to be no difficulty in detecting the thief, as he must needs offer them for sale. We trust he will soon be captured.

The health of Rev. Dr. Charles Phillips still continues very poor. He has in consequence been compelled to resign the professorship of mathematics at the North Carolina University. Assistant Professor Graves has charge of the department for the present, and J. S. Manning, a recent graduate, has been chosen to take the place of Mr. Graves.

Fifth Creek church has enjoyed a delightful season of grace. Rev. Dr. Nall of Alabama had been supplying the pulpit through July. He commenced a protracted meeting on the 2d of August and continued till the 19th, preaching nearly every day at 9 a. m. and 7 p. m. to large congregations. Rev. E. F. Rockwell was present part of the time and rendered good service, as did Rev. Mr. Fulford of the Baptist church. The church was greatly edified, and twenty-eight persons (four of them heads of families) were, as we trust, led by the Spirit to embrace the Saviour and were received into the church. To thirteen of these the ordinance of baptism was administered. One suspended member was restored and two persons were received by certificate—in all thirty additions—and there is reason to believe that there will be five or six more at the approaching communion meeting. Some six or eight others who obtained a hope in Christ will connect with other churches.

COM.

A Wesleyan chapel with ritualistic services is among the recent religious novelties of England. The edifice has a transept and chancel. The pulpit and font are of Caen stone, beautifully cut, with shafts of Mexican onyx. The reredos is in seven panels, with canopied heads. In the chancel are stalls for thirty-six choristers, who are attired in black cassocks. It is known as the Chapel of St. John Manningham, Bradford.

THE ANNUAL COLLECTION FOR THE EVANGELISTIC FUND.

OFFICE OF HOME MISSIONS,
Baltimore, August 26, 1879.

DEAR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS—In reminding you that the time of this collection is the first Sabbath of September, we venture to ask that your contributions will be as large as your circumstances will allow. The General Assembly has authorized an effort to raise twenty thousand dollars, which is believed to be the smallest sum upon which the work can be conducted efficiently. This amount is more than two and half times as much as was raised last year, and it will require a real effort on the part of our Christian people to reach it. And yet, we feel sure, it can be attained if a collection is taken up in every church and our Christian friends will all give what they can.

The object of this collection is to promote the evangelization of our own land. It is believed to be the duty of the Church to extend the privileges of the Gospel to all the destitute places in our own bounds, and to give its light and knowledge, and ordinances and saving truths to all our fellow citizens. With this view the Presbyteries appoint evangelists and send them forth into fields which are wholly unoccupied, or at least very insufficiently supplied with the means of salvation, that through their instrumentality Christian families may be visited, Sabbath schools be gathered, churches be organized, the Gospel be preached and the institutions of religion be established. Much has already been accomplished by this agency, but much unoccupied ground yet remains. In one Presbytery in Texas there are seventeen counties, which, so far as is known, no Presbyterian minister has ever visited. These counties and other sections of the State are rapidly filling up with immigrants, who are generally poor and who ought to have the Gospel sent to them. So, too, in Arkansas, Louisiana, Florida and Mississippi, there are large territories which need to be occupied for Christ and the Presbyterian Church, while in the other States embraced in the bounds of the General Assembly, although they are more highly favored, there are many places where the light of Divine truth shines feebly, if at all. The work to be done is immense, and its importance cannot be over-estimated. Its claims upon you grow out of your relations to Christ and His Church, and to those whose wants we are now pleading. Ought not an effort to be made to save these perishing souls? Does not loyalty to Christ demand that His Gospel shall be given to them? Should not our love for the Church make us eager to extend its blessings to those who know them not? Have not our countrymen who are ignorant of the glad tidings of salvation, and who are hastening to an undone eternity, special claims upon our benevolent regard and compassion? Is there not necessity that the Church and its members shall awake to the great duty of disseminating the truth throughout our whole land, so that all its people may be brought under its influence and be led to know and serve God? All of you will doubtless give an affirmative reply to these inquiries, and we trust you will feel it a privilege to promote these great objects by giving as liberally as you can to this cause. The laborers are, some of them, already in the field. Others are standing ready to go as soon as the means for their support are secured.

The Executive Committee of the General Assembly look to you to say, by your generous gifts, that the work shall go forward until the whole land is possessed for Christ.

Yours in Christian bonds,

RICHARD MCILWAINE,
J. LEIGHTON WILSON, } Secre's.

North Carolina Medical Journal for August contains the usual number, perhaps we should say an unusual number, of articles of very great interest to the medical profession. Our time at the moment permits only to scan a few, and they are such as should arrest the attention not only of every physician, but of every citizen of the State.

The paper on the Use and Abuse of Alcohol, an abstract of the Address of Dr. J. F. Long, of Newbern, before the Medical Society of North Carolina is a powerful temperance appeal. It especially appeals to physicians for exceeding caution in their administration of alcoholic stimulants. The terrible evils resulting from thoughtlessness or indifference in prescribing such stimulants are set forth in the strongest terms. Dr. R. H. Lewis of Raleigh, conclusively shows in the paper on Spectacles in Youth, the importance of correcting defects in the visual organs of the young, before age renders these defects irremediable. The Doctor illustrates that frequently the general physical health is injured by non-attention to impairment in vision. The subject is worthy of the strictest attention.

Dr. R. L. Payne writes under the caption, There is Danger in a Kiss. This is a startling proposition, but Dr. Payne treats it as well known to physicians that various diseases are communicated by kissing. In fact, there seems no doubt that very many physicians do recognize diseases as being transmitted by kissing, but consider it useless to raise their voices against a prevailing fashion. Dr. Payne should be thanked for calling public attention to the evil. Why not discard a practice which has nothing but custom to recommend it?

HOME MISSION SOCIETIES.

In our last number we urged the formation of such societies in all the churches. Since that article was written, we have received contributions from two such societies. We also see in the NORTH CAROLINA PRESBYTERIAN that in the Presbytery of Orange an earnest movement is being made in this matter. To all such efforts we bid God speed. They are much needed to revive the interest of God's people in the work immediately dependent upon them, and which they are bound by every consideration to Christian duty to do. Nothing could promise better for the future of our Zion than a general awakening in all the churches to the obligation resting upon them to give the Gospel to our whole land. This movement ought not to be left altogether to the Christian women, but the male members of the Church ought to be interested and gotten to take part in it. We want a universal revival on this subject. Our whole communion ought to be stirred and all its members take part in this grand effort. We have plenty of strength to do a great work for God and our country, if we can only secure organization and get our Christian people to co-operate with one another and with the Assembly's work. The most efficient instrumentality yet discovered for inciting and propagating and maintaining interest on the subject, is through Christian women, but, while we look to them as the active workers, we want them to enlist the help of our Christian men, so that the full strength of the Church may be drawn out. It is highly important from every point of view, that as little delay as possible shall be carried on with zeal and liberality. "The field is white unto harvest." The laborers are ready. What we now need is the funds to send God's servants forth to gather fruit to the glory of His holy name. Let them be supplied, and with the Divine blessing, a good work will soon be done.—Missionary.

RIGHT WAY AND WRONG.

Two men, members of the Church, met with misfortune in their business. After having enjoyed long prosperity and lived in the decorous use of God's gifts, trouble beset them and they saw all their gains of former years fade away, and found themselves compelled to begin the world anew. One of them received his trial as a discipline sent of God, and in undoubting faith went on his way, serving his Master, who he was sure was still loving him. He even grew more devoted to every religious interest. His place was never vacant in the house of God. He made it a point to be present at every prayer meeting. He took a new interest in the affairs of the church, and so far as he had ability, he showed himself additionally liberal in the support and spread of the Gospel. An air of improved piety appeared in his countenance and life. He was growing into a better man. His friend took the other direction. He was soured. He attended church but poorly, forsook all the interest he formerly had in the work of the congregation, grew critical, severe, fault-finding, crotchety and disagreeable. His whole life changed into a contradiction to that he had formerly professed and practiced, so that he was as gruff a backslider as he had once been an exemplary believer. Now mark the result: The one grew strong in all good fellowship, and cheerfully devoting himself to the work of repairing his broken fortunes, received the confidence and help of his brethren, and finally secured for himself such a footing that he was safe against all contingencies of want and fear. The other repelled friendly sympathies, sank into indolence and sloth, and both as to business and character, lived a wreck and warning to all who knew him. The moral is, that if misfortunes come they ought to be received in a Christian spirit. If they are not, they will but thicken and increase till the life is lost under their burden.—United Presbyterian.

MONTHLY REVIEW MISSIONS.

We have intelligence from Greece as late as July 3. A letter from Mr. Sampson, published in our present issue, gives a very pleasing account of the condition and prospects of that Mission, and will be read with great interest by all who feel an interest in the Missionary work.

We have intelligence from Hangchow to the 23rd of June, and from Soochow to the 27th of the same. At the former place some of the missionaries had suffered a good deal from chills and fever. At the latter place, Mr. DuBose's eldest child has been seriously ill, but was much better at the date of our letter.

Intelligence has been received from Campinas as late as the 2nd of July. The missionaries and their families were well, but nothing of special interest connected with their work is reported. Mr. Lane was at the village of Tiete, on the 28th of June, on one of his evangelistic tours. While he found his work to be very laborious, he was, nevertheless, very much encouraged by the prospects of usefulness. Mr. Boyle was also engaged in the evangelistic work, but in a different section of the country from that occupied by Mr. Lane.

The journal of Rev. Mora Leandro, published in our present issue, gives an encouraging account of the prospects of the work in the country about Matamoras.—Missionary.

Rev. Charles R. Hemphill, late Professor in the Theological Seminary at Columbia, S. C., has left that city for a new home at the South-western Presbyterian University, Clarksville, Tennessee.

The Christian Observer notes that the post-office address of the Rev. T. E. Converse is changed from Bardstown to Louisville, Ky. He will, for the present, assist in the management of the Observer.

Rev. R. E. Cooper, pastor of the Rock Hill and Ebenezer churches in Bethel Presbytery, has a month's rest, as he has had each autumn for three years past. He has served his present churches twelve years.

Rev. A. H. Mecklin writes to the Christian Observer: "We have closed an interesting meeting at French Camps. We had five accessions to our church. We feel that our church has been blessed of the Lord."

Rev. S. M. Luckett writes to the Texas Presbyterian that Rev. Dr. H. B. Boude of Austin College preached twenty-one very fine sermons at Milford, Texas, during a protracted meeting of eight days. The church was greatly revived. Four persons were added on profession of faith and three from other churches.

Rev. Dr. J. B. Stratton has been residing at Narragansett Pier. The Southwestern Presbyterian says: "We are glad to learn that the health of Dr. Stratton has been greatly improved by his sojourn there, and that he will leave that place with his expectations of restored vigor fully realized. About the first of October he will start for home."

Rev. W. A. Alexander, licentiate of Central Mississippi Presbytery, and graduate of the last class in Princeton Seminary, has accepted an invitation from Lexington and Franklin churches, in Holmes county, Miss., and will enter upon his duties immediately. These churches have also signified their intention of giving him a regular call to become their pastor. His postoffice address is Lexington, Miss.—Christian Observer.

Rev. Thos. Drew of Chase City church, in Roanoke Presbytery, is on a visit to New York city and will remain a month. During his stay he will preach in one of the churches of the city. The Mecklenburg Democrat pays him this high compliment: "Mr. Drew has few superiors in the pulpit of the United States, and we have no doubt that his earnest, logical and eloquent sermons will meet with the appreciation of his Northern congregations."

Rock church, Greenwood, S. C., has been revived. Communion service was held on Sabbath, July 3d, after which, for several days, prayer meetings were held. Rev. John McLees, the pastor, was aided by Rev. Messrs. Porter and Sibley of the Methodist church, and by Dr. J. O. Lindsay of the Presbyterian church. The stores in the town were closed during these meetings, and nearly every one attended them. Mr. McLees was assisted by Rev. O. B. Stewart in a meeting held in another part of the above congregation on the 9th of August, ulto., at the Buchanan schoolhouse. The meeting lasted five days. Rev. John McLees, in writing to the Southern Presbyterian says: "The Spirit of God was poured out on the people, and a number were seen inquiring the way to Zion with their faces thitherward. On Wednesday, the 13th ultimo, the meeting was closed, as my own health was such that I could not attend the service, and Brother Stewart was also worn out. Thirteen persons professed faith in Christ at that place during the meeting, and others were deeply concerned about their soul's salvation. On last Sabbath three other members were added to the church in the village—making an addition of sixteen members in all."

Rev. A. J. Witherspoon has been visiting Baton Rouge conducting a series of religious services in the Presbyterian church, which is now vacant. He visited also very freely from house to house. He writes to the Southern Presbyterian: "I am much pleased with this people, and I wish to direct attention to this most interesting field of ministerial labor. The population of Baton Rouge is between seven and eight thousand. The town is 140 miles above New Orleans, on the east side of the Mississippi river. It is the first bluff from the Crescent city. There are refreshing breezes and pleasant nights. Water is good, both cistern and well. There are high table lands on the Baton Rouge side, and sugar plantations on the other side of the river. The population is intelligent. It is the site of the State University, Institute for the Deaf and Dumb, Institute for the Blind—all handsome buildings—the penitentiary, United States barracks, schools, male and female, public and private. The Constitutional Convention has decided that Baton Rouge is to be again the capital of the State. The Presbyterian church is a nice looking building, and the congregation include the most respectable people of the place. There are many interesting German families. The salary offered a pastor is $1,000, and I have been told that it is always paid. Baton Rouge seems to me to be a place very much after the order of Columbia, S. C., and that is one thing that makes me like it. Samuel P. Greves, W. Hubbs, J. O. McWhorter and J. Joor are the elders."

In regard to the Belton, Texas, camp meeting, Rev. C. H. Dobbs writes to the Christian Observer: "This meeting commenced on Nolan's Creek, one mile from Belton, Bell county, Texas, July 24th, and continued eleven days. A large concourse of people assembled from three to five times a day to hear the gospel. Presbyterians from Bell and the ten adjoining counties camped during the whole time upon the ground. Many pleasant associations were formed and old acquaintances renewed. The following ministers were present: A. J. Loughridge, H. E. Rose, J. M. Robinson, W. F. Gillespie, R. M. Loughridge, C. W. Peyton, S. A. King and myself. Considerable interest was awakened, and there were a number of hopeful conversions. The struggling cause of Presbyterianism in the county was greatly strengthened, and the heart of Rev. Mr. Peyton and his little band of workers cheered and encouraged. The meeting throughout was orderly; the attention was excellent. The business part was satisfactory; everything came to time; the hospitality of the good people unbounded; the water excellent and abundant; the arbor commodious, well seated; well lighted and densely shaded. The nights were lovely. Christ and him crucified was faithfully preached, and all saints seemed to be happy. How many were converted eternity alone will reveal; there was no excitement and no attempt to get up one.

The happiest results are following."

EPISCOPAL

The Bishop of the Diocese of New York is president, and Rev. Dr. Gallagher manager, of a society called the "Church Mission to Deaf Mutes." METHODIST.

A contribution of six thousand dollars has been received by Dr. A. W. Wilson, the Corresponding Secretary of the Southern Methodist Episcopal Missionary Society. Four thousand are for the erection of a Methodist church in Soochow, China, and fifteen hundred for a boarding school in the same place, and the five hundred for a contingency that may arise.

The records show that the Book Concern at New York has paid for objects outside of its own business since 1836, by order of the General Conference, the sum of $2,120,893 35. This amount is made up of the sum paid the Church South, the sum paid for the Bishops' salaries and traveling expenses, and dividends to the Annual Conferences.

THE TAYLOR GINS.—We are specially pleased to learn that the Taylor Gins sold by Messrs. DeRosset & Co. (see advertisement) are going off rapidly. In the belfry of the Episcopal church at Ellicottsville, N. Eventually it was carried to Troy and became the property of a well known bell founder of that city. It was there discovered by a member of the Ellicottsville parish, who purchased and gave it to the church. Its condition is sound and its tone still good.

In Gaston county, on 20th ulto., Mr. WM. B. FORD, aged 72 years.

At his home near Olney church, Gaston county, August 24, 1879, Mr. JOHN C. TORRENCE, aged sixty-seven years.

He was industrious and successful in his business, a blameless and useful citizen, a kind and generous neighbor, an affectionate husband, father and brother, a constant and sympathizing friend.

Early in manhood he professed faith in Christ and in August, 1849, was ordained ruling elder in the Independent Presbyterian church of Olney. When the reunion of the churches took place he became a member of the session of Olney Presbyterian church. He took great interest in the welfare of the Lord's household, and up to the very time of his death was a very valuable and efficient officer.

He rose on Sunday morning in apparently good health and a little while after breakfast was found reclining on a couch as if enjoying comfortable repose; but it was the still and breathless sleep of death into which he had passed at the call of that beloved Redeemer in whom he trusted, and whom his happy spirit now beholds and adores.

"My flesh shall rest in hope."

At the residence of her husband in Cameron, Moore county, after a protracted and painful illness, Mrs. ANNA JANE McINTYRE consort of Mr. D. McIntyre and daughter of Gen. A. D. McLean, in the 45th year of her age.

She leaves an affectionate husband, five children, an aged father and many relations and friends, to mourn her untimely end. Mrs. McIntyre was no ordinary woman. Reared by pious parents she was early led to see the vanity of all earthly things and seek an interest in Christ as her only hope. She joined the Presbyterian Church (Tirza) before she was grown, and up to the day of her death adorned her profession by a holy walk and Godly conversation. Having naturally a strong mind, which was highly cultivated, she was well qualified for the duties of after life. In her 21st year she married Mr. McIntyre a teacher by profession and entered with him upon their arduous and responsible duties. As a teacher she had few equals. It was not only her pleasure to train the mind but also to cultivate the heart, diligently laboring to instil into the youthful mind the principles of our holy religion. Possessing naturally a lovely disposition, rendered more lovely by grace, she never failed to gain the confidence and affection of her pupils and to exert her influence for their good. Indeed all who knew her loved her. As a Christian she was always consistent, zealous and active. She loved the Church of her choice its doctrines and precepts. Her pastor and family were never forgotten as evinced by frequent evidences of thoughtfulness and affection. Her last sickness was protracted and painful yet no murmur was heard; she had learned to suffer as well as to do the will of her Master. She had a strong faith and implicit confidence in her Saviour to whose care she felt she could safely commit the dear loved ones left behind. Her end was peace. Her death has caused a void in the family circle and in the little church recently organized, of which she was a zealous and active member. Her mortal remains were interred in the cemetery at Buffalo (to which church she formerly belonged), by the side of two dear loved ones gone before. The jewel is taken to be reset and shine with brighter luster in the Master's crown of joy and glory. It is the Lord let him do what seemeth to him good.

Charlotte Institute.

THE next session begins September 10th, 1879, and ends June 8th, 1880.

No Institute ever made more rapid progress in securing the confidence and esteem of its patrons than this one during the past session. Before the end of the scholastic year the number of its pupils, attracted by the well-earned reputation of the school, increased to 117, exclusive of the adult ladies who availed themselves of the superior advantages here given in the departments of Music, Art, and Modern Languages. In no respect is this Institute inferior to any other first-class boarding-school in the Southern or Middle States. Such testimonials as will satisfy an one as to the high standard and thoroughness of the instruction here are published in the catalogue. These testimonials are peculiarly trustworthy, inasmuch as they are given by gentlemen engaged in teaching in well known schools and colleges of the highest grade, and who are therefore qualified to express an opinion in regard to educational institutions.

The total expense for the half session or term will be $125. This amount includes board, with washing, fuel, lights, furnished room and servants' attendance, tuition in all the English branches, Latin, with either French or German, Calisthenics, text books and stationery for school purposes. Pupils are not permitted to incur additional expense without permission of their parents. Parents are thus assured that their bills will not be greater than they expected.

Special arrangements and special terms for young ladies who wish to take only Music, Painting and Drawing, and Modern Languages, severally or collectively.

THE BUFFALO LITHIA WATERS,

For Malarial Poisoning, Especially Hepatic Diseases and Malarial Fevers.

Testimony of Distinguished Medical Men:

MALARIOUS FEVERS.

Extract from Letter of Dr. Wm. T. Howard, of Baltimore, Professor of Diseases of Women and Children in the University of Maryland, of August 1st, 1873.

Dr. Howard compares these waters with those of the celebrated Greenbrier White Sulphur, West Virginia, and adds the following:

The Greenbrier White Sulphur Waters will be recognized by all informed upon such subjects as one of the most noted Mineral Fountains of the World.

"Indeed, in a certain class of cases, it is much superior to the latter. I allude to the abiding debility attendant upon the tardy convalescence from grave acute diseases: and more especially to the cachexia and sequels incident to MALARIOUS FEVERS IN ALL THEIR GRADES AND VARIETIES."

* * * * * * * * * * "In short, were I called upon to state from what mineral waters I have seen the greatest and most unmistakable amount of good accrue in the largest number of cases in a general way, I would unhesitatingly say the BUFFALO SPRINGS, in Mecklenburg county, Virginia."

Extract from Letter of the late Dr. Thos. P. Atkinson, of Danville, Va., Ex-President State Medical Society, dated August 15th, 1874.

"The Buffalo Lithia Waters have unquestionably displayed great power in the peculiar diseases of the warm, miasmatic regions of the South, which may be grouped together under the general head of Malarial Cachexia, covering Hepatic Engorgements, Enlargements of the Spleen, Jaundice, &c."

"It is not pretended that these Waters possess any anti-periodic properties, such as belong to Quinine—At the same time, however, it is unquestionably true, that in the intermittent and remittent fevers in a chronic form, they have in numerous instances, given relief in cases which had obstinately resisted all the anti-periodic drugs of the shops. From my experience with them, I feel fully warranted in saying that, with rare exceptions, whenever disease is found originating under malarial influence, a potent remedy may be found in this water."

Extract from a Letter of Dr. John C. Coleman, of Halifax county, Va., (prior to the War a surgeon of the U. S. Navy, now retired) dated near Scottsburg, Va., January 1st, 1879.

"Perhaps no claim made for the Buffalo Lithia Waters is more thoroughly established than that they are a powerful antidote to malarial poison in all its forms and varieties. In that large class of disorders, included in term Malarial Cachexia, embracing Engorgement of the Liver and Spleen, Jaundice, Indigestion, Dropsies and Neuralgias, of which the warm malarious districts of the South are so prolific, the action of these waters as a general rule is most decided and happy, and oftentimes astonishing. In Chronic Intermittent and Remittent Fevers, they are especially efficacious. I presume there is no season at these Springs in which some cases of this character do not find relief from these Waters, which have before baffled the healing art."

Extract from Letter of Dr. Alfred Plumber, of Manson, N. C., dated March 16, 1874.

"I have known the Buffalo Springs of Mecklenburg county, Va., for twenty-five years, and have sent many patients to them. In Chronic Intermittent and Remittent Fever, and in all diseases originating in malarial poison, I have found their action almost that of a charm. I have sent young ladies to these Springs so enfeebled from this influence as to be scarcely able to walk across a floor, and in a few weeks they would become so invigorated as to be able to dance half of every night."

These springs open for guests the 1st day of June. The water in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, $5.00 per case at the springs. Springs pamphlets sent to any address.

More wonder by far that your baby don't die;
No matter what ails me, no matter who's here,
No matter how hungry the "poor little dear,"
No matter if full, or all out of breath,
She trot's me, and trots me to death!

I love my dear nurse, but I dread that great knee;
I like all her talk, but woe unto me!
She can't be contented with talking so pretty,
And washing, and dressing, and doing her duty;
And that's very well, I can bear soap and water,
But mother, she is an unmerciful trotter!

Pretty ladies, I want to look at your faces,
Pretty cap, pretty fire, let me see how it blazes.
How can I, my head going bibity-bob?
And she trots me the harder, the harder I sob;
Oh mother, do stop her, I'm inwardly sore,
I hiccup and cry, she trots me the more
And talks about "wind" when 'tis she makes me ache:
Wish 'twould blow her away for poor baby's sake!

Thank goodness I'm still, oh blessed be quiet!
I'm glad my dear mother is willing to try it;
Of foolish old customs my mother's no lover,
And the wisdom of this, she can never discover;
I'll rest me awhile, and just look about,
And laugh up at Sally, who peeps in and out,
And pick up some notions as soon as I can,
To fill my small noddle before I'm a man.

Oh dear, is that she? Is she coming so soon?
She's bringing my dinner with teacup and spoon!
She'll hold me with one hand, in tother the cup,
And as fast as it's down, she'll just shake it up,
And trumpity-trump with the greatest delight,
Her heel is still going from morning till night.
All over the house you may hear it, I'm sure,
Trot, trotting!—Just think what I'm doomed to endure!

Little Johnny's Letter.

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN.

Little John one day took it into his head to write a letter to God. In France, where the scene of our story is laid, it is no uncommon thing to see women and children enter the churches with a letter in their hands, which they lay on the altar and then go quietly away. They believe God will certainly grant their requests if He has them before Him in writing day and night.

Johnny was then six years old, and wore pants cut off at the knee. He had light hair in great profusion, and clear blue eyes full of love: but they had often been dimmed with tears. His little jacket was finely made, but sadly torn; on one foot he wore a girl's shoe, on the other a boy's. They were both full of holes, and had lost their heels. The poor boy was cold and hungry; for it was a winter's night, and when it came into his mind to write a letter to God, he had had nothing to eat since the day before at noon.

I think you will wonder how he could have gotten his letter ready to send, seeing that he could neither read nor write.

In that part of the city of Paris, near a street corner, lived a public writer, or "editor," as such people are called by the French. For a small sum this man wrote letters for people who could not write themselves, and Father Bonin, as he was called in all the region round about, had written nobody could tell how many letters. He had been a brave soldier, but having been severely wounded in battle, he was unfit for further service. His wound, however, was not such as to prevent his getting a living by some quiet employment.

Johnny looked through the dingy window of his room, and saw the old soldier. "Good-day," said Johnny, as he entered the room; "I want to get a letter written."

"It will cost you ten cents," said Father Bonin.

"Little Johnny, who had brought no money because he had none, looked sad and made a bow, saying, "Then excuse me, sir."

Then he opened the door to go, but Father Bonin, who was pleased with his little visitor, called him back, saying, "Are you a soldier's child, my boy?"

"No," answered Johnny, "I am mamma's child, and nothing else."

"Oh, I understand," said the writer; "and you have not ten cents then."

"No; alas, I have not even one."

"Nor your mother, either? Oh, I see. And so you want a letter written so that you might get some porridge. Isn't it so, my boy?"

"That's just it," thought Johnny.

"Go ahead, then," said the old soldier; "half a sheet of paper and a little ink will not make me much poorer."

Johnny obeyed, and Father Bonin made ready the paper, dipped his pen in the ink, and began as elegantly as a writing master would have done—"Paris, Jan. 17, 1857,"—and then, on the next line—"To Mr.——what is the name?"

"Whose name?" said Johnny.

"Why, the name of the man to whom the letter is to be addressed."

"What man?"

"Why, the man you wish to supply you with porridge."

Johnny understood the old man at last, and replied, "It is not for any man."

"Oh, then it's for a lady?"

"No, it's not for any lady."

"Who ever heard of such a thing?' exclaimed Father Bonin, in anger: "Don't you know, then, for whom your letter is?"

"Oh, yes," answered the boy, weeping.

"Tell me, then, and let us go ahead."

Johnny's face was red as fire. It is no little thing to engage a public writer for such a correspondence. But he took courage and said, "I want to send a letter to the dear Lord in heaven."

Father Bonin did not laugh. He said very seriously, "I hope, my boy, you don't mean to impose on an old soldier of the line. So, face about! To the left, wheel! March!"

Johnny did as he was told. I mean, he turned on the heel that was on his foot, for his shoe had none, and was about to go.

When Father Bonin saw the dear boy so prompt to obey, he changed his mind again, and, looking sharply at the boy, said, "There is no need of misery here in Paris. What is your name, my little man?"

"My name is John."

"What! nothing more?"

"No, only John."

Father Bonin felt his eyes growing moist, and, to hide it, shrugged his shoulders. "What do you wish to say to God?"

"I should like to tell Him that my mamma has been asleep since four o'clock yesterday, and to ask Him to wake her, for I can't at all."

The soldier felt a heavy weight on his heart He was anxious about what the boy would say next, and anticipated something bad. So he asked him, "What more about the porridge?"

"Oh, she would like a little so much," said the child. "Before mamma fell asleep, she gave me the last piece of bread. She said two days ago, 'I am not hungry.'"

"How did you try to wake her?"

"I kissed her, as I always do."

"Did she breathe?"

A beautiful smile passed over Johnny's face. "I don't know; don't mammas always breathe?"

Father Bonin turned away his face, for two great tears were flowing down his cheeks. He did not answer the child's question, but said with a trembling voice, "Didn't you notice anything when you kissed her?"

"Yes, she was so cold. Oh, it was so cold at home."

"And did she shudder at the cold?"

"Oh no; she looked so beautiful! so wonderfully beautiful! Her hands were white and folded on her breast. She did not move at all. Her head lay back on her pillow, and she seemed with her half-closed eyes to be looking straight into heaven."

Father Bonin thought within himself, "How often have I envied the rich, though I have always had enough to eat and drink, but here is one who has died of hunger." Then he called the boy to him and lifted him on his knee, stroked his hair and said to him, "My child, your letter is written and sent, and has reached its destination. Take me to your mother's."

"That I will do gladly, but why do you weep?" asked the wondering child.

"I am not weeping," said the old soldier, covering the boy with kisses; "but you will weep, my poor child, my dear Johnny. Do you know, I love you as if you were my own child?"

"Oh, it is foolish in me; but I too once had a mother. It was long ago, but it seems as if it was only to-day that I stood by her dying bed and she bade me farewell, as she said, 'My son, be a brave man and a good Christian.' I have been a brave man, but alas, what a poor Christian!"

Father Donin arose with the child in his arms and as he pressed him to his heart he said, as if speaking to some invisible person, "Behold, mother, and rejoice. My friends may laugh at me, but where thou art gone I will go. More than this: I will also bring this little one to thee, and he shall never leave me; for his precious letter, which was never written, has received two answers; it has given to him a father and to me a son."

The poor woman, who died of hunger, woke no more in this world. Who was she? I do not know, nor can I tell what she endured. But there is a man in Paris still young. He is an "editor," but not in a miserable hut, like Father Bonin. He writes many beautiful things, and his name is widely known. But we love to think of him as the "little Johnny." Father Bonin is a happy and honored old man, and more than this, an excellent Christian. He has a large share in the success of his adopted son, his "little one," as he still often calls him, and when he related this story, he said, "I do not know who the postmaster is who takes charge of letters of this kind; but this I know, they always reach the right address."—The Watchman.

The Excavated Wonders of Pompeii.

Eighteen hundred years ago the city was full of life. Nearly 30,000 people promenaded its streets, and it was a scene of Roman luxury and voluptuousness. Its situation on the sea made it a most fashionable place of resort for the wealthy Romans, and the Emperor Claudius had his pleasure house there, and the great orator Cicero a residence. About one hundred years ago the entombed city was discovered, and immediate action was taken to excavate as much of the ruins as possible.

The work has been going steadily on, but not more than one-half of the city has yet been exhumed. Still, many acres have been dug over and miles of street have been brought to the light of day.

The city is now a perfect picture of a Roman city 1800 years ago. The streets are narrow, some of them not being more than eight feet across, but they are straight and regular. The pavement is composed of large flat stones or blocks of lava, and the deep ruts cut in them by the Roman chariots are clearly perceptible. At the crossings are large stepping stones for the use of the pedestrians, so as to keep their feet from the mud. Everything in the streets was silent and death-like. There were no human beings in the houses, no promenaders in the streets; all were deserted. The dwelling houses are generally small and one-storied.

EXHUMED WONDERS.

In one of the kitchens was found a fowl put into a skillet, and a stew pan containing a small pig for roasting, all prepared eighteen hundred years ago. In the "House of the Vestals," upon the door-sill, is the word "Slave,"—welcome. A mosaic with the representation of a fierce dog, with the inscription "Cave Canem," beware of the dog, is near the threshold of the "House of the Tragic Poet." In the streets are many shops which still have the signs over the doorways. In the baker's shop a batch of loaves was found which had been in the oven since the 24th of August, A. D. 79. The mill was turned by horse power.

TEMPLES AND FORUM.

The various temples that have been exhumed contain idols made of marble, silver and gold. Three hundred skeletons were discovered in the Temple of Juno all crowded together and burned beneath the ashes.

The amphitheater, which is about half a mile from the present excavations, is in a splendid state of preservation. It is built of stone, is in the form of the Coliseum at Rome, and was used for the gladiatorial shows. It is 430 feet long by 355 feet wide. The stone steps seat 14,000 spectators. Placards with the announcement of theatrical performances are still to be seen on the walls. The "Villa of Diomede," so called because a tomb bearing that name was found near by, and for this reason it was supposed to have belonged to a Diomede, is the one that has been rendered famous by Bulwer's description of it. It stands just outside the "Herculaneum gate," and the supposed owner was discovered in his garden with a bunch of keys and a purse filled with gold and silver coin in his hands. In the cellar of Diomede's house, huddled together in a corner, were found eighteen skeletons, mostly females, supposed to have been members of the family.

HUMAN SKELETONS.

Over 600 human skeletons have already been exhumed, but fortunately most of the inhabitants managed to escape, having heeded the warning of the burning mountain. Only the bones remain of the victims, the flesh having mostly perished, but now and then a little tuft of mouldy hair has been found clinging to the skull. The positions of the bodies in every possible form of contortion all indicate a violent death, one of agony and suffering. A miser was found grasping a bag of gold in his hand.

In one room a family group embracing each other in death, in another the bones of dancing girls mingled with the broken instruments of music, can be seen; in another place the skeleton of a cook at his place near the stove in the kitchen. Outside of the gates in his sentry-box stands a Roman soldier in complete armor, with the key to the city gate in his hand. After standing faithfully at his post for seventeen centuries, he was discovered "clad in rusty armor, the helmet on his empty skull and the spear in his bony fingers." In the city prison, not far distant, were found the prisoners, some with their "feet made fast in the stocks."—Christian at Work.

An Ancient Rose Tree.

Herr Lennie, a well known botanist of Hildesheim (Hanover), thus describes a remarkable rose tree (or rather climber, for it is supported against a wall of the church) growing in his town, and which was in existence when Christianity itself was little more than 7,000 years old, and, if tradition is to be believed, had even then been blooming nearly 300 summers. "The oldest known rose tree in the world," he says, "is one at present growing against the wall of the cathedral of this town (Hildesheim), remarkable alike for its extreme age and for the scanty nourishment with which it has supported itself for so many centuries. It varies but slightly from the common dog rose (Rosa canina); the leaves are rather more ovate, the pedicels and lower leaf surfaces more hairy, and the fruit smaller and more globular. The stem is two inches thick at its junction with the root, and the whole plant covers some 24 square feet of the wall. Bishop Hezilo, who flourished between 1054-1079, took special interest in this rose as being a remarkable monument of the past; and when the cathedral was rebuilt, after being burned down in 1061, he had it once more trained against the portion of the wall which had been spared by the fire. Tradition states that in the year of grace 814 the Emperor Ludwig the Pious, son of Charlemagne, was staying with his court at Else. Being desirous of hunting in the huge forest where now stands Hildesheim, mass was said by the imperial chaplain at the place of rendezvous. By some mishap, when the service was concluded and the party dispersed, the vessel containing the sacred elements was left behind. On returning to the spot the following day great was the surprise of the chaplain to find the holy vessel overshadowed by the tender branchlets of a lovely rose, which had sprung up in the night and now filled the air with the perfume of its flowers. The emperor shortly after arrived, and by his command a chapel was built, with the altar standing on the spot occupied by the roots of the rose, that very rose which is now blooming as freshly as though a single decade, and not a thousand years, had passed over its head." But, tradition aside, certain it is that the roots of the existing rose tree are buried under the altar of the cath dral, and consequently inside the building, the stem being carried through the wall to the outer air by a perforation made expressly for it.—Scientific American.

Influence of the Mind on the Body.

Andrew Crosse, the electrician, had been bitten severely by a cat, which on the same day died from hydrophobia. He seems resolutely to have dismissed from his mind the fears which most naturally have been suggested by these circumstances. Had he yielded to them, as most men would, he might not improbably have succumbed within a few days or weeks to an attack of mind-created hydrophobia—so to describe the fatal ailment which ere now has been known to kill persons who had been bitten by animals perfectly free from rabies. Three months passed, during which Crosse enjoyed his usual health. At the end of that time, however, he felt one morning a severe pain in his arm, accompanied by thirst. He called for water, but "at the instant," he says, "that I was about to raise the tumbler to my lips, a strong spasm shot across my throat; immediately the terrible conviction came to my mind that I was about to fall a victim to hydrophobia, the consequence of the bite that I had received from the cat. The agony of mind I endured for one hour is indescribable; the contemplation of such a horrible death—death from hydrophobia—was almost insupportable; the torments of hell itself could not have surpassed what I suffered. The pain, which had first commenced in my hand, passed up to the elbow, and from thence to the shoulder, threatening to extend. I felt all human aid was useless, and I believed that I must die. At length I began to reflect upon my condition. I said to myself, 'Either I shall die, or I shall not; if I do, it will only be a similar fate which many have suffered, and many more will suffer, and I must bear it like a man; if, on the other hand, there is any hope of my life, my only chance is in summoning up my utmost resolution, defying the attack, and exerting every effort of my mind.' Accordingly, feeling that physical as well as mental exertion was necessary, I took my gun, shouldered it, and went out for the purpose of shooting, my arm aching the while intolerably. I met with no sport, but I walked the whole afternoon, exerting at every step I went a strong mental effort against the disease. When I returned to the house I was decidedly better; I was able to eat some dinner, and drank water as usual. The next morning the aching pain had gone down to my elbow, the following day it went down to the wrist, and the third day left me altogether. I mentioned the circumstance to Dr. Kinglake, and he said he certainly considered I had had an attack of hydrophobia, which would probably have proved fatal had I not struggled against it by a strong effort of mind."—Cornhill Magazine.

Fungi in Man.

The human ear is sometimes attacked by a disease which shows itself in the form of a running sore; in many cases the tympanum is destroyed and hearing lost before the nature of the malady is discovered. The disease is due to the growth of a microscopic plant or fungus of the Aspergillus family. It especially thrives when, from any cause, the secretion of wax in the ear is stopped or hindered. The microscope is a valuable assistant in the discovery of this fungus.

Consumption, the most disastrous malady that afflicts humanity, is now said to be caused by a yeast plant that flourishes in the blood. The presence of this fungus in the blood is readily shown by the microscope, and now forms the subject of careful study among physicians.

Dr. Ephraim Cutter, M. D., of Boston, Mass., has devoted much labor to this subject, and, we understand, has recently produced microphotographs of the fungus with Tolles' remarkable 1-75 objective.

We believe that Dr. James H. Salisbury, of Cleveland, Ohio, was among the earliest to detect and describe this curious yeast plant of the blood.

CELEBRATED

LIVER PILLS,

FOR THE CURE OF

Hepatitis, or Liver Complaint,

DYSPEPSIA AND SICK HEADACHE.

Symptoms of a Diseased Liver.

PAIN in the right side, under the edge of the ribs, increases on pressure; sometimes the pain is in the left side; the patient is rarely able to lie on the left side; sometimes the pain is felt under the shoulder blade, and it frequently extends to the top of the shoulder, and is sometimes mistaken for rheumatism in the arm. The stomach is affected with loss of appetite and sickness; the bowels in general are costive, sometimes alternative with lax; the head is troubled with pain, accompanied with a dull, heavy sensation in the back part. There is generally a considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done. A slight, dry cough is sometimes an attendant. The patient complains of weariness and debility; he is easily startled, his feet are cold or burning, and he complains of a prickly sensation of the skin; his spirits are low; and although he is satisfied that exercise would be beneficial to him, yet he can scarcely summon up fortitude enough to try it. In fact, he distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred where few of them existed, yet examination of the body, after death, has shown the LIVER to have been extensively deranged.

AGUE AND FEVER.

DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, IN CASES OF AGUE AND FEVER, when taken with Quinine, are productive of the most happy results. No better cathartic can be used, preparatory to, or after taking Quinine. We would advise all who are afflicted with this disease to give them a FAIR TRIAL.

For all bilious derangements, and as a simple purgative, they are unequaled.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The genuine are never sugar coated.

Every box has a red wax seal on the lid, with the impression Dr. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS.

The genuine McLANE'S LIVER PILLS bear the signatures of C. McLANE and FLEMING BROS. on the wrappers.

Insist upon having the genuine DR. C. McLANE'S LIVER PILLS, prepared by Fleming Bros., of Pittsburgh, Pa., the market being full of imitations of the name McLane, spelled differently but same pronunciation.

PREVENT YELLOW FEVER!

It has been well proved that prevention is better than cure. A very simple and effective preventative for Yellow Fever and other fevers has been found in BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. They were used during last season in New Orleans very successfully. The common method of using them was to apply them over the stomach, changing them every week. They are one OF THE MOST ACTIVE ANTISEPTICS and seem to destroy the poison. One reason why they are of special value is that they stimulate the digestion, and thus enable the system to overcome the influence of the malarial poison. They are a cheap and almost certain preventative. Ask your physician about them. Benson's Capcine Plasters are a cure preventative and cure for chills and fever if worn as above. Price 25 cents.

A CLASSIC PICTURE.

The poet Horace sometimes presents a pic... to the eye as well as to the fancy in the ...arrangement of his words. What art in Ode ... book i., where he calls upon the queen ...Love to desert her wonted and favorite ...haunts and take possession of a new temple. ...Even in the next stanza he directs all her re... in her train to attend and encircle her ...while she removes to her new abode:

Fervidus tecum Puer et salutis,
Gratiæ zonis, properentque nymphæ
Et parum comis sine te Juventas,
Mercurius que.

Here are Cupid, the regular attendant upon ...Venus and her son, Puer; the Graces, three ...in number—Aglaia, Enphrosyne and Thalia ...—called also the three Charities, the personi... ...tion of grace and beauty, "maidens in the ...full bloom of life." The nymphs are very ...numerous female beings, very beautiful, con... ...stituting the attendants on the higher female ...deities. Juventas is Hebe, the personifi... ...cation of youth; and Mercury "as being the ...god of eloquence," that is, "of lively and en... ...tertaining conversation." These all form a ...most appropriate retinue for the Goddess of ...Beauty and Queen of Love. If we could, like ...the Grecian painter, select a cluster of beau... ...tiful females, and had all the world to select ...from, and all ages—if all the Helens, and ...Cleopatras, and Aspasias, and Phryaces that ...have descended from our first fair mother, ...in perfection of beauty,—could be brought ...together to grace the progress of the greatest ...queen that ever sat on a throne, the sight ...could not be more charming than that here ...presented to the imagination.

When the poet invites the Paphian God... ...dess of Love and Beauty, the Queen of Laugh... ...ter, the mistress of the Graces, to come, ...wafted by the zephyrs over the sea in her ...chariot drawn by doves, and her attendants ...crowned with roses and myrtle, to dwell in a ...beautiful temple prepared for her by her favorite ...Nymphs (the sweet one), her group of at... ...tendants are supposed to surround her just as ...their names surround the one verb in the ...middle of the sentence making the stanza.

COMMENTARIES ON THE BIBLE.

NO. V.

To Rev. L. C. Vass, Newbern, N. C.:

DEAR SIR: Continuing the notices of commenta... ...ries on parts of the Old Testament, Dr. Ham...mond, of England, who lived in the 17th ...century, invites brief notice. He wrote on ...the Psalms, part of Proverbs and the whole ...of the New Testament. It is not necessary ...to assign to the latter work any separate spe... ...cial notice. Dr. H. is one of the best speci... ...mens of the older puritan divines. He was ...evidently a scholar of no mean attainments, ...and brought his knowledge of the Hebrew, ...which appears to have been full and thorough, ...to the explanation of the Psalms and a few ...chapters of Proverbs, with excellent success. ...His exegetical skill is more specially mani... ...fested in tracing the historical as well as cur... ...rent meaning of words. It is not a reflec... ...tion on his ability, in expounding the Mes... ...sianic Psalms, to write that he rather inclines ...to accept them, at least in part, as having ...primary reference to David and secon... ...darily to Christ; of which, is a striking speci... ...men his interpretation of the second. But ...the writers, and some of great eminence, ...have adopted as already shown, this treacher... ...ous scheme. To the exposition (with a para... ...phrase) of the New Testament he brings ...much evidence of great scholarship of high ...order. In short, the readers of our day may ...spend much time far less profitably in exam... ...ining Hammond than the writings of many ...of the terms far better known and admired in ...our day.

Dr. Horne, Bishop of Norwich in the last cen... ...tury, has left a work on the Psalms, which has ...ever held a high reputation for its eminently ...pious and practical character. It is clear ...and decided on the Messianic Psalms, find... ...ing in this primary scope and purpose, the ...Spirit of the New Testament. While some ...would class him among those who find Christ too ...often by straining passages of Scriptnre, though ...not conceding the justice of the criticism, ...it is safer to accept it as creditable, than the ...opposite characteristic of many more modern ...expositors, of finding Christ no where. Bishop ...Horne has presented in his preface decided ...evidence of great knowledge of the principles ...of sound and discriminating criticism, as ap... ...plicable to the interpretation of the Psalms: ...and in the work itself has given us rather re... ...sults than processes of study. Perhaps any ...one who cannot afford to purchase many ...books will find this work a most desirable aid ...in interpreting this inspired liturgy of the ...church of all ages.

15. Bishop Horsley, of St. Asaph's, was ...nearly cotemporary with Bishop Horne. He ...has left a work on the Psalms, and also one ...on Hosea. Both works present some instances ...of critical skill in interpreting the Hebrew. ...But the remarks are in a very literal sense. ...only "Notes." These volumes both rather ...supply hints of important topicks deserving ...study, than give, either much aid in inter... ...preting or in training the student to that ...work. While the works of this author have ...a value in the history of exegesis and exposi... ...tion of the Scripture, they are, by no means, ...comparable with Horne in evincing the abil... ...ity of the author to instruct his readers.

10. Henderson on Isaiah, Jeremiah, Eze... ...kiel and the minor Prophets. Dr. H. is well ...known as an eminent dissentiug minister of ...London, and one specially distinguished as a ...preacher and pastor, as well as a learned ...scholar in Oriental languages and in Greek ...literature. With conceded and great ability ...to interpret the word of God, it is much to ...be regretted that he has been led, as a literal... ...ist, to mar in a great degree the otherwise, ...sound and scholarly views which he gives on ...the meaning of the text he proposes to ex... ...pound. He is very rich in giving a "synop... ...sis criticorum" on passages of special diffienl... ...ty, and the student will derive great assist... ...ance, both in verbal criticism and grammati... ...cal interpretation. He has made extensive ...use of his knowledge of other Oriental lan... ...guages, in elucidating the words of the proph... ...ets. His peculiar views of the principles by ...which they are to be interpreted cannot do ...away with the value of his verbal exegesis. ...It is by no means meant that his translations ...are always safe guides. His work on Isaiah ...has become known very extensively through ...the frequent references and quotations made ...by Dr. J. A. Alexander, and the owner of ...this last work will do well to procure a copy ...of Henderson's. His Introduction to Isaiah ...is a mine of information, exceedingly valua... ...ble, when it does not find an application, ...often strained, to sustain his peculiar theories. ...The work on the minor Prophets has a spe... ...cial value, as being one of very few which ...have made those valuable and difficult por... ...tions of the Old Testament a subject of criti... ...cal examination and pertinent exposition.

Yours truly, B. M. SMITH.

MAY WOMEN PREACH?

To those who receive the Word of God as ...their rule of faith and practice this is not a ...question of custom or expediency, but of in... ...terpretation. In 1 Cor. xiv: 34 we have from ...the inspired pen of the Apostle Paul, "Let ...your women keep silence in the churches, ...&c." It is argued by some that this restric... ...tion had reference to the Corinthians alone, ...and hence it is written "your women." This ...cannot be the proper interpretation, for the ...Apostle writes in 1 Tim. ii: 11, "Let the woman learn in silence, &c.;" clearly a gen... ...eral command. In 1 Cor. xiv: 34, the Greek ...is so paragraphed, and some of our scholars ...so punctuate it, as to read "as in all churches ...of the saints let your women keep silence in ...the churches," i. e. let your women conform ...to the custom in all the churches of the ...saints, and this view agrees with what comes ...after; in the 35th verse the Apostle goes on to ...say as a reason for the silence imposed upon ...'your women;' for it is a shame for ...'women,' or as the earlier manuscripts read, ...'a woman' to speak in the church. This ...change from the definite to the indefinite ...shows that this prohibition was intended to ...be binding on women in general, and there ...can be no grounds for referring this restriction ...unto a few bad, bold women in the Corin... ...thian church.

It is held by some that the meetings in ...which Paul enjoins silence upon women were ...merely of a business character. The connec... ...tion plainly points to their religious charac... ...ter. The passages show they were religious ...meetings. See 1 Cor. xiv: 26, 36, "the word ...of God," "psalm," "doctrine," "revelation," ...and "interpretation" are under consideration, ...and 1 Tim. ii: 8 to 15, "prayer, faith, love ...and sanctification, with sober-mindedness," ...are the themes; in both cases religious ...topics and exercises, not business concerns.

The opinion that these restrictions had ...reference only to synagogues or other and ...particular church buildings is not tenable, for ...women are enjoined to keep silence in the churches, a general command, and the word ...translated church and churches means "reli... ...gious assembly," and not merely a building. ...Another view is that only so much silence is ...required of women as good order and woman... ...ly subjection demand. Against this stands ...the positive injunction "Let your women ...keep silence in the churches;" "it is not ...permitted unto them to speak; it is a shame ...for a woman to speak in the church."

It is claimed by others that this prohibi... ...tion had reference only to senseless speaking, foolish talking, in the church—all Christians, ...male as well as female, are elsewhere exhort... ...ed against foolish speaking, not merely in the ...churches, but anywhere and everywhere. If ...foolish speaking was the point of this prohi... ...bition, why is it not implied that the women ...were permitted to speak if they would utter ...sensible thonghts? The usual meaning of the ...word translated speak is not to babble, but to ...speak; 1 Cor. ii: 7 it is used when one speaks ...the wisdom of God; 1 Cor. ii: 4 wisdom of the ...spirit; Heb. i: 1, 2 it is used for the speaking ...of God. Trench, the great student of words, ...says that all those contemptuous uses of the ...word in classic Greek, as to talk at random, ...&c., are foreign to the New Testament usage ...of the word.

Others would make this restriction refer ...only to women asking questions publicly upon ...points of doctrine, and in confirmation they ...cite "let them ask their husbands at home." ...We admit that the prohibition includes this, ...but insist that it goes beyond and includes ...all public speaking on the part of women in ...the exercises of the sanctuary. But does not ...this interpretation prove too much and cut ...off women from the work of the Sabbath ...School? Certainly not. It is clear from the ...whole connection that the reference is to ...the exercise of gifts as public speakers in the ...assembly of the saints, public debates, discus... ...sions, exhortations and preaching—the func... ...tions of a public official, a teacher of religion. ...In this sense no matter how much our mod... ...ern lights may differ from them, it is plain ...that the Apostle Paul, guided by divine in... ...spiration, did not believe in women preach... ...ing.

PRESBYTER.

DANCING FOR EMPTY MINDS.

It is justly remarked, that a merely repres... ...sive policy, where no innocent substitute for ...vicious amusements is offered, may more ...probably repel than reform the youth of our ...Church. There is a trait of human nature ...which the wise pastor should study. We ...usually speak of man as "a social being." ...The mass of human beings scarcely deserve ...so elevated a description, and should rather ...be termed gregarious. The gregarious in... ...stinct in them is potent. They shun solitude, ...and earnestly crave the presence of their kind; ...but not converse with their kind. For, in fact, ...ordinary people have not intellectual re... ...sources enough to furnish anything that de... ...serves the name of conversation, except for a ...small fraction of the hours they crave to ...spend together. To be compelled to keep up ...intelligible conversation the whole time ...would be to them more irksome than the sol... ...itude from which they flee. Here is the true ...source—so far as the non-intellectual amuse... ...ments. People need something which they ...may do together, so as to provide for the in... ...stinct of gregariousness. This solution is ...verified in the case of the old house wives, ...who spend a long summer day in each other's ...presence, with little social community save ...their occupation of knitting. It was verified ...around the planter's fireside, in former days, ...when children and servants pleasantly spent ...the long winter evening in the common task ...of "picking cotton." It is verified in the ...long sederunts of whist-playing old ladies and ...gentlemen. The communion in the mild ...excitement of their game gives play to the ...gregarious appetency without taxing their ...vacant minds for any other contribution to ...the mutual interconse. The same solution ...accounts for a large portion of the interest in ...the more decent dances of our fathers. Often ...have we seen young fellows at social gather... ...ings, with minds too unfurnished for sus... ...tained converse, detained in the parlors in ...part by the unsatisfied gregarious instinct, ...yet insufferably "bored." But at last the ...music enters, and they are immediately re... ...vived. Here now is something which they ...can do in common—a social occupation which ...brings them into a gregarious union, to ...which their heels are competent, if their ...heads are not.

The problem for the parent, then, should ...be, not overlooking this trait, to find social ...occupations which may satisfy it, and yet ...may be innocent, and instead of aggravating ...the incapacity and leading downwards, like ...the dance, to deeper mental vacuity and posi... ...tively vicious sentiments, may instruct while ...they please and unite. Might not a holy in... ...genuity find a sufficient variety of such gre... ...garious occupations? One suggestion is that ...of parlor vocal music, both social and sacred; ...another is the time-honored usage of reading ...aloud. Let the selections vary from "grave ...to gay," while never coarse or demoralizing; ...and let "them who are strong bear the in... ...firmities of the weak," by yielding their at... ...tention in turn to the simple matter which ...may interest without fatigning even the ...juvenile and the vacant mind. Thus the ...temptation to less safe amusements may be ...obviated, and the social hours of the young ...be made enjoyable, without being made dan... ...gerous.—R. L. Dabney, in Southern Presbyterian Review.

PROTESTANTISM IN FRANCE.

No student familiar with the history of ...France in the seventeenth century can fail to ...recognize the rapid growth of Protestantism ...which was then apparent there, especially ...among its substantial middle class; nor can ...the unprejudiced student of the later history ...of that unhappy country overlook the intil... ...mate connection between the eradication of ...French Protestantism and the wretchedness ...of the France of Louis XV. The Protestants ...of France, including thousands of its most ...intelligent, industrious and virtuous citizens, ...perished in the St. Bartholomew massacre, ...or were driven into exile on the revocation of ...Henry of Navarre's famous act of toleration, ...known as the Edict of Nantes.

On the 1st of November, 1685, the year of ...the Revocation, Lady Russell quotes in one of ...her letters the statement of her sister, then in ...Paris, that of 1,800,000 Protestants in France ...not more than 10,000 were left, and these ...would soon be converted by the dragoons or ...perish. Remembering that the base intoler... ...ance of Louis XIV was only the last act of a ...century of persecution, it is doubtless true ...that at one time the number of Protestants in ...France was so high as 1,800,000; and such ...freedom as England allowed the Nonconform... ...ists would have made half the whole popula... ...tion Protestant, if not Evangelical, at the ...present day. But we rather accept the esti... ...mate of 1,000,000 as the number affected by ...the revocation of Henry IV's edict in the year ...1685, or one-twentieth of the population of ...France as it then was. But that twentieth, ...as Richelieu, and even Mazarin, more than ...once acknowledged, included no little pro... ...portion of all that was best and noblest in the ...country. Richelieu's reply to the Protestant ...ministers who presented an address to him on ...the surrender of La Rochelle was honorable ...to both—"Gentlemen, I am glad to receive ...you, if not as an ecclesiastical body, at any ...rate as men of letters, whose learning and ...talent I much esteem." Not only in learning, ...but in trade and manufacture, and not only ...in ordinary pursuits, but in politics and the ...army, the fact that the Protestants so far ex... ...celled their poorer Roman Catholic brethren ...has been assigned as a stronger motive in ...urging on Louis XIV to his base and ruinous ...national policy of intolerance, even than re... ...ligious antipathy.

The result was that, from first to last, about ...300,000 Protestant exiles from France found ...refuge in England. To Holland and Prussia ...many more went in search of a home and ...freedom to worship God. Each of those Pro... ...testant countries may thank the Grand Mon... ...arch for the gift to them of France's best ...sons. It was indeed at a costly price to ...herself; for when the terrible crisis of her ...Revolution came, the want of wise, temper... ...ate, virtuous leaders, such as their sons might ...have supplied, was one of the grand sources ...of France's sufferings and cruel Reign of Ter... ...ror. It is difficult to over-estimate the bene... ...fits with which they repaid the lands which ...gave them a home. What they did for schol... ...arship in Prussia, which owes to them the ...culture that resulted in the Berlin Academy; ...what they did for manufacturing industry in ...Holland, which Philip II had tried to strip ...of the Netherlanders as Philip III effectually ...deprived Spain of the Moriscoes—all that and ...more they did for England, introducing new ...manufactures, giving a fresh impetus to lib... ...eral thought and honest Protestantism, and ...by the learning of some of their divines, ...healthfully stimulating theological research. ...The present Archbishop of Canterbury, in ...addressing a congress of his clergy in the ca... ...thedral, pointed with just pride to the chapel ...in the Metropolitan Cathedral of Canterbury ...which had been appropriated to the use of ...the Huguenot refugees. Their clergy in many ...cases conformed to the Church of England, ...and added to its strength at a critical period; ...their soldiers and statesmen aided William III ...in the great constitutional revolution; and ...many distinguished names in English letters ...and science perpetuate the evidence of Hu... ...guenot descent. Spitalfields in London still ...retains interesting traces of the colony of ...Protestant French refugees who there intro... ...duced the manufacture of silks. Picardy ...Place in Edinburgh perpetuates the site of ...the village of French silk weavers whose des... ...cendants can still be traced.

In Scotland and Ireland, as in England, in ...India as in the United States, in Canada, and ...in the more recent colonies, are to be found ...those who trace their descent from the noble ...refugees who, from Charles IX—aye, from ...the death of Louis XII—to Louis XIV, found ...an asylum for religion's sake in Protestant ...England.

It is indeed the proud boast of England ...that she has been the ark of freedom for the ...persecuted victims of oppression for centuries. ...It may be worth recalling in this connection ...that England owes her present Premier, the ...Earl of Beaconsfield, to the same intolerant ...absolutism which expelled the Jews as well as ...the Moriscoes from Spain. The first writer ...to attempt satisfactorily to trace the refugees ...was M. Weiss, whose "Histoire des Refugies Protestants de France" appeared in 1853. The ...third of its six books is devoted to the Hugue... ...not families in Great Britain. But before ...that Mr. Southerden Burn, secretary of the ...commission for collecting non-parochial reg... ...isters, had extracted from them a catalogue ...of all the congregations, Walloon and Dutch, ...as well as French, to whom this country had ...given an asylum from the times of Henry ...VIII.

The Bouveries, the great Romilly, Arch... ...bishop Trench, Brunel, Dupont, Ronbiliac ...the eminent sculptor, De la Beche the geolo... ...gist, and indeed a long roll of distinguished ...names in all departments of high achieve... ...ment, in letters, in science, in politics and ...diplomacy, its arts, manufactures, and all ...else, prove how England has been repaid an ...hundredfold for the welcome given to our ...Protestant brethren in their hour of trial.—P., in Weekly Review.

"HE NEVER GIVES."

This remark was made in regard to a church ...member in good standing, in the community, ...and free from scandal in the church. Don't ...he pay pew rent? Yes; but that he pays for ...a seat for himself and family. That is no ...more giving than when he pays for his Sun... ...day clothes. Does he put nothing in the col... ...lection boxes when they are carried round? ...Yes, a little, very little, and he hides it in his ...hand, and reaches near the bottom so the ...amount cannot be seen, and the man that ...carries the box says it is always a nickel or a ...penny. Is he a member of the church? Yes, ...and goes to the communion regularly. Is he ...able to give? Certainly he is. He is prosper... ...ous in business and lives in good style. What ...is the difficulty in his case, do you suppose? ...Is he a hypocrite? Probably not. Is he a ...Christian? There is reason to fear that he is ...not; that he is deceived. Deceived how? The ...love of money is probably the root of the evil ...in his case. Don't your pulpit sound forth ...truth in regard to giving of our substance to ...God and his cause? Yes, but it don't reach ...him. Do you believe he thinks he is a Christ... ...ian? I don't believe he thinks much about ...it. In all probability he expects clearer views ...and hopes in future, and is living in a care... ...less state. Is there any hope for such people? ...There is some hope, of course, but much less ...than for such as are outside of the Church. ...Such a feeble reliance upon past experience, ...along with a consciousness of sin and negli... ...gence, must constantly enfeeble and pollute ...the conscience, until it is harder to reach than ...in the case of the openly wicked. Is there ...nothing that can be done to save such people? ...While there is life there is hope, while they ...wait upon the means of grace. Ought such ...people to be in the church? The church ...would be better off without them, but if they ...were told their duty plainly, and under pres... ...sure were to do better, it would not really ...improve their spiritual condition; and to turn ...them out would be no better; besides, giving ...should be from the heart, and anything like ...force work would be of no real advantage. Is ...the pulpit as faithful as it ought to be with ...such people? Perhaps not, and yet there is ...enough said to show them their sin and dan... ...ger, if they would but heed the warnings they ...hear. What hope is there, then, for them? ...The only hope is in the outpouring of the ...Holy Spirit in the heart. Vain is the help of ...man. Ought there not to be special prayer, ...then, for the help of the Spirit? No doubt if ...ministers, in addition to their faithful preach... ...ing of the truth in regard to giving, would ...pray earnestly that God would show the people ...their failures in this respect, a change might ...be expected. Oh, is it not sad that there are ...so many in the Church who have a name to ...live while they are dead? Indeed, it is. The ...only hope is in help from on high.—Herald and Presbyter.

"AS A SLEEP."

With eyes close sealed in slumber,
With quiet breath and slow,
With dreams one cannot number,
And visions none can know,
The long years overtake us,
And leave us on the way,
Till one shall pause to wake us
To an immortal day.

We dream of radiant Pleasure
That mocks at sad-eyed Pain;
Of love no man can measure,
And glory sought in vain.
Of all the past has taken,
Of all the future brings;
Of lost hopes, aims forsaken,
The heart's most precious things.

Sometimes before the dawning,
We start from troubled dreams
To catch half hints of morning
In faint and fitful dreams.
And hard is the believing,
When thus we almost wake,
That "as a sleep" is living,
Which only death can break.

PRAISE YOUR WIFE, MAN!

For pity's sake, give her a little encouragement. It won't hurt her. She made your home comfortable, your hearth bright and shining and agreeable—for pity's sake, tell her you thank her, if nothing more. She don't expect it. It will make her eyes open wider than they have these ten years, but it will do her good, and you too. There are many women to-day thirsting for words of praise—the language of encouragement. Through summer's heat, through winter's toil, they have drudged uncomplainingly, and so accustomed have their fathers, brothers and husbands become to their monotonous labors, that they look for and upon them as they do for the daily rising of the sun and its daily going down. Home every day may be made beautiful by an appreciation of its holiness.

TO BREAK OFF BAD HABITS.

Understand clearly the reason, and all the reasons why the habit is injurious. Study this subject till there is no lingering doubt in your mind. Avoid the places, the persons and the thonghts that lead to the temptation. Frequent the places, associate with the persons, indulge the thonghts that lead away from temptation. Keep busy; idleness is the strength of bad habits. Do not give up the struggle when you have broken your resolution once, twice, ten times, a thousand times. That only shows how much need there is for you to strive. When you have broken your resolution just think the matter over and endeavor to understand why it was that you failed, so that you may be on your guard against a recurrence of the same circumstances. Do not think it a little or easy thing that you have undertaken. It is folly to expect to break off a habit in a day, which may have been gathering strength in you for years.

LITTLE THINGS.

Springs are little things, but they are sources of large streams; a helm is a little thing, but it governs the course of the ship; a bridle-bit is a little thing, but we know its use and power; nails and pegs are little things, but they hold the parts of a large building together; a word, a look, a smile, a frown are little things, but powerful for good or evil. Think of this, and mind the little things. Pay that little debt; if it is a promise, redeem it; if it is a dollar, hand it over. You know not what important events may hang upon it. Keep your word sacred; keep it to the children—they mark it sooner than any one else.

TROUBLE.

All trouble is not borrowed; neither is it the result of a depressed condition of mind. How, then, shall we meet this real trouble, that is the heritage of life across which sin and death are evermore casting their shadows? There are those who have sought to battle alone with trouble; but out of every such trial, however bravely borne, there comes only the sense of loneliness and loss, which is cheerless and without comfort, like a stately palace with the lights gone out; its chambers, that once echoed the sound of happy voices, now silent as the grave. There are others who try to forget their troubles, after the manner of a certain tribe of savages in Africa, who bury their dead in the silence of the night, and then driving cattle over the newly stirred earth, seek to obliterate every sign of the burial, and go away, never more to mention the name of the departed. Alas! when men try to overcome trouble in these ways, how futile are all their efforts. In contrast, how blessed is the hope and comfort which, in the day of trial, is revealed in the heart that trusts God and flies to divine sources of refuge and help! Our heavenly Father does not keep His children from troubles. They often fall with overwhelming severity upon them, but He is always near to them, and in His own good time transmutes them into blessings. Every page, almost, of the Bible has a word of cheer and comfort for those in trouble. Happy is that man whose life has verified, as so many have done, the words of the apostle: "Tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope." This is to have the soul, taking root in the midst of earthly trial and trouble, blossom forth in the beauty and strength of an immortal hope.

COME NEARER.

But have you come to Christ already and found relief? Then come nearer, nearer still. The closer your communion with Christ the more comfort you will feel. The more you daily live by the side of the Fountain the more you shall feel in yourself "a well of water springing up into everlasting life," (John iv: 14). You shall not only be blessed yourself, but be a source of blessing to others. In this evil world you may not perhaps feel all the sensible comfort you could desire. But remember you cannot have two heavens. Perfect happiness is yet to come. The devil is not yet bound. There is "a good time coming" for all who feel their sins and come to Christ, and commit their thirsting souls to His keeping. When He comes again they shall be completely satisfied. They shall remember all the way by which they were led, and see the need-be of every thing that befell them. Above all, they shall wonder that they could ever live so long without Christ, and hesitate about coming to Him.—Canon Ryle.

DEATH SCENE.

A sister of Francis Ridley Havergal, whose death occurred a few weeks since, says of her: "God seemed, at the last, to permit unusual agony, during which her peace and joyful confidence never once failed. I believe it was to convince gloomy, foreboding Christians that Fannie's joy in life, as in death, was not from her naturally bright temperament—it had a far deeper source." Of her last moments this sister gives the following touching description: "Then came a terrible rush of sickness. When it ceased the nurse gently put her comfortable, when she nestled down in the pillows, exclaiming, 'There, it is all over now. Blessed rest!' She folded her hands, one over the other, on her breast; and now, with Stephen's gaze, she looked steadfastly on the King's face, for nothing else could have reflected such a glorious, unearthly radiance into her eyes. For ten minutes we watched that meeting with her King, and nurse said her face looked so expressive, as if she was already talking with Him. And then, instead of groans, came a glad, almost cooing sound, 'O! O! He's come at last!' Then she tried to sing again, and one sweet high note did come, 'He—.' It died away, and with gentlest ebbing her breath ceased, and we saw she was gone. I could only whisper, 'Glorified.'"

WOMEN.

Love and appreciation are to a woman what dew and sunshine are to a flower. They refresh and brighten her whole life. They make her strong-hearted and keen-sighted in everything affecting her welfare of home. They enable her to cheer her husband, when the cares of life press heavily upon him, and to be a very providence to her children. To know that her husband loves her, and is proud of her, and believes in her; that even her faults are looked upon with tenderness; that her face, to one, at least, is the fairest in the world; and the heart which is to her the greatest and the noblest, holds her sacred in its inmost recesses above all women, gives her strength, and courage, and sweetness, and vivacity, which all the wealth of the world could not bestow. Let a woman's life be pervaded with such an influence, and her heart and mind will never grow old, but will blossom and sweeten, and brighten in perpetual youth.

CALVINIST AND ARMINIAN SAILORS AGREED.

Dr. Duncan was in Leghorn, Italy, when two godly shipmasters came to the port—the one from Leith, the other from England—the one a Presbyterian, and the other a Wesleyan. The Wesleyan came and asked him to preach in his ship. "Oh," said he, "I could not do that; for you see I am a Calvinist and you are an Arminian, and I might say something to injure your feelings." "Sir," was the reply, "what we wish you to do is to come and preach against the devil." That is certainly a Catholic platform. Calvinist and Arminian should always be agreed to preach against the devil, and in the name of a common Master.

A PLEA FOR THE BOYS.

Mothers teach their daughters from the earliest days to keep house, tend dolls, receive miniature guests at miniature tables, to drink miniature tea, and perpetrate miniature chat. Why is the boy deprived of his work-shop, counting-room and state-house, or their equivalents? Pens and paper, needles, scissors and thread coax the embryo women to activity. Why should the embryo man be left to the flies and molasses cup, or the kettle steaming on the stove, and be called a fool besides. Get him a box of tools; it may be full of hints to you, a gimlet won't bore at the handle, of course, but it will do far more to fathom a boy's nature than rods of birch or rattan, or hard names and despondency. Talk about undistribution of brains, indeed! Give a hearing to the boy; the hungry, anxious, troublesome boy; who wants to do something but don't know how.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN.

Madame Revel, wife of Dr. Revel, Professor in Florence, is dead. Dr. Revel is one of the most prominent ministers connected with the Waldensian Church, and Mrs. Revel has been very active and very useful in her labors in the same connection.

Rev. M. Willis, D. D., LLD., long and intimately connected with the Presbyterian Church in Canada, died in Edinburgh, Scotland, on the 19th of August, in the 80th year of his age.

The Rev. Robert Chambers, formerly of Whitby, Canada, has accepted a commission from the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions to go as a missionary to Erzeroum, Eastern Turkey.

Professor Bruck, a Protestant, has been elected "Rector Magnificus" of the six-century old University of Vienna. He is the first Protestant who has held that office.

The title of the new magazine, which is announced as to be issued in the interest of the Evangelical party of the Church of England, will be The Churchman. It will be conducted and contributed to by the leading men, both lay and clerical, of the party it will represent.

A party of 3500 pilgrims left Paris recently for Lourdes. The number is double as large as that of last year, and the increase is attributed, it is said, to the religious ferment against the Jules Ferry bill.

A telegram from Rome says the Pope's health and strength are rapidly decreasing. The physicians insist on an immediate change of air, but the Pope refuses to entertain the proposal, and absolutely forbids his own brothers or any of the cardinals to press the subject.

Great Britain has eight societies for the conversion of the Jews. On the continent of Europe there are in different localities about a dozen more. About 250 agents are in the employ of these various societies. The aggregate income of the societies is about half a million dollars. No branch of missionary effort brings in such meagre returns. It is estimated that the cost of converting each Jew, as yet reached by the operations of any of these societies, is about $1,000.

More than two hundred opium smokers have been cured of their deadly habit within six months at Dr. Osgood's hospital, in connection with the Foo-chow Mission of the American Board. There is now a great demand by opium smokers for admission to the hospital.

The Free Church of Scotland has sent a lady, Miss Waterston, to Central Africa as a medical missionary. She is the third woman who has had the courage to undertake the long journey from the coast, to settle among the savages in the vicinity of the great lakes.

The Antonelli law suit is once more a figure in the Italian courts of justice. The Countess Lambertini, it is said, purposes applying to the Court of Appeal for the revocation of the sentence, basing her plea on new evidence, and revealing her mother's name. This lady, it is declared on authority, is married to a Roman gentleman, by whom she has several children."

There has been some correspondence in one of the denominational newspapers as to the income of the Wesleyan ministers. It is not generally known that there are allowances for children, house, &c., in addition to stipend, which, even in poorer circuits, brings up the total income of the Wesleyan minister to something like £200 to £250 a year, or its equivalent.

This mission is about to receive a valuable addition to the number of its workers in Miss Waterston, who made South Africa her home about twelve years ago. She joined the band of missionaries at Lovedale, then, as now, under the superintendance of Dr. Stewart, and for seven years has conducted with marked success an enterprise all her own—the training of Kaffir girls.

Intelligence has been received of the unexpected death, on July 15th, of the beloved wife of Rev. Dr. C. S. Valentine, of Jeypore, Rajpootana, India. Her death is not only a severe blow to Dr. Valentine, who is doing a good work in Jeypore as a missionary, but to the sacred cause of missions in general. This devoted Christian lady made herself singularly useful amongst the natives of Jeypore, where her memory will be fondly remembered.

In three towns of the department of Allier, in France, where ten years ago there were about sixty Protestants, there are now nearly 1,000, all of them being proselytes. At Montargis, the birthplace of Admiral Coligny, a year ago there were between forty and fifty, now there are 150. At Chateauroux a Roman Catholic officer was recently buried with great pomp, and in his will was found a clause leaving money to build a Protestant place of worship. Wherever there are 200 or more Protestants without a church they now receive aid from the State. At Valenciennes, where twenty years ago there were only forty, there is now a church with a membership of 250. At Lyons, the second city in France, and a stronghold of Roman Catholicism, three mission rooms were nightly crowded, while in Paris are conducted twenty-two mission stations, with an average weekly attendance of 8,000.

The Vienna Neu, Freie Presse prints an ordinance issued by the Imperial Police Directory of Krakau, offering a reward for the discovery and seizure of a certain lady, who has just made her escape from the Norbertan convent of nuns. It appears that she was received by the nuns last November, under the pretence that she was a voluntary convert from Judaism to Christianity. Her name is given as Roche, Ruchel, Rebecca, or Helena Fisher, or Fischl; she has varied these names in various places; is twenty-five years old, and professes to be the daughter of a Jewish Rabbi. She was distinguished in the convent for her remarkable sanctity. It appears from the police report that she has played the same trick of conversion elsewhere, and the authorities conjecture that she is now repeating the curious trick at some other convent.

ON BUSINESS PRINCIPLES.

Certainly the work of the Church ought to be conducted on business principles, and quite as certainly it often happens that such principles are set at nought, if not at defiance. In fact the utter disregard in ecclesiastical affairs, of what are recognized as the plainest common sense rules of business is sometimes amazing. An instance of sound procedure we have at hand from an exchange:

"The First Congregational church of Grand Rapids, Mich., executes the Lord's business on business principles. They have retained their present pastor, Rev. J. Morgan Smith, sixteen years. During this time the pastor has never had occasion to inquire about salary. On the 15th of every month the amount is placed to his credit in the bank. The church has steadily increased in numbers, until it is the largest of the denominations in the State, with a membership of six hundred. The church has, during these years, also built and furnished, free from debt, a new house of worship, seating 1,200 people. It has assisted in erecting the second church of the city, and a third building for a mission school. This summer the church gave the pastor a three months leave of absence, salary continued. The Sunday congregations have been fully sustained in size during the pastor's absence, and even the mid-week services have not declined in interest or numbers during July and August."

Business principles as applicable to the Church and as recognized by the world are not always identical, we hasten to say, though in the matter of contracts between man and man the same practice is frequently inculcated, for different reasons. The fulfilment of contracts, from a worldly point of view, is necessary to establish credit, and from such a view, that "honesty is the best policy" is a maxim entirely sound. Financial credit is serviceable to the Church likewise, and should be secured for its benefit, though the duty of fulfilling contracted obligations rests on a principle infinitely higher than any policy. That principle is the love to our fellowmen enjoined in the Scriptures, which finds its exercise in doing unto others as we would that they should do unto us.

Outside, or apart from Christian tenets, the only principles of business recognized as strictly correct are such as are expressed by the phrases "Look out for number one," "No friendship in trade," and the like. They accept utter selfishness—what will result in personal advantage or gain, irrespective of any other considerations—as the prime and governing motive, while Christianity utterly repudiates the sentiment; indeed Christianity is not only in opposition to this actuating principle of the world but at extremes with it.

It is not our purpose to follow out this line of thought. However far apart may be the sentiments on which action is based, and however certain it is that employing worldly means sometimes secures desired results at such a sacrifice as to render them accursed—despite this, it is true that the recognized principles of procedure in ordinary business affairs are very often entirely proper, and ought to be adopted in the work of the churches. As the Church must have its plans involving the use of secular or material means, so it must have its policy in which maxims of worldly prudence or wisdom are allowed due influence. Due influence, we say, for under no circumstances can any results justify the employment of means, or the use of modes, contrary to the teachings of the Scriptures. We cannot afford to ignore common sense, and set aside the laws of cause and effect in our ecclesiastical operations.

Church work ought to be prosecuted with zeal and earnestness not less than that bestowed upon secular pursuits. All that is done as mere matter of form is worse than trifling. No extensive secular enterprise is content to have its stockholders or officers meet, transact routine business and adjourn. In all such matters coming together means business. Resolutions are not in name only resolves; they are a basis for action and usually map out work.

But in nothing perhaps is the Church more unbusinesslike than in its arrangements (in general), if it may be said to have any arrangements, for the supplying of vacant churches. A settled law of business is that where demand exists, supply must be speedily found, and the thing wanted and the person wanting must be brought together as directly and as promptly as possible. These considerations project and build our railroads, sustain our telegraph lines, support the postal system, and by furnishing advertising keep up and carry on our newspapers. Scores of churches, even in our branch of the church alone, are vacant, and scores of ministers, capable and willing, are without charges, and so it always is. Vacant churches do not know where or how to get supplied, or after a few fitful efforts to secure a pastor, subside into a state of resignation or indifference. Ministers cast about very much at random, and finding no way open, go to school-teaching, or pursue (and who can blame them) any secular calling that promises to yield a support. He who shall devise a plan by which the churches needing pastors and the pastors needing churches can be brought together speedily and directly, will confer an inestimable benefit upon the Church and be fully entitled to its eternal gratitude. The subject is not new, nor has the necessity been entirely overlooked; but it is worth all the thought that can be given to it. We would be glad to have it discussed.

THE TUNKERS.

Our friends, the Tunkers, have lately held an annual Council at Broadway, Va. They are a peculiar people, not so much in that they believe in immersion as the only mode of baptism, as that they require the candidate to kneel and be plunged in head first, and that they have various other curious customs. They believe in washing each other's feet, and in the late meeting they were exercised on a "query" asking that liberty might be granted to practice the single mode. The single mode is where one person washes and another wipes the feet of a brother; in the double mode both exercises are performed by one person. The question was deferred to next year. The rule in church matters is to decide all matters by unanimous consent, consequently minorities control. A very interesting discussion was on the dress of the brotherhood. Some of their newspapers—they appear to have several—have been using "unkind phrases" as to the clothes, calling them "straight jackets, round-tailed coats," and the like, and have referred to the "idolatrous-clothes religion." A report was made requiring the wicked editors to make acknowledgment of their errors. Two of the editors objected to the report as being in the nature of a verdict and condemning the accused without a hearing, but the moderator was equal to the occasion, and decided that it could not be a verdict until it was passed. A committee of supervision was appointed to see that the editors of church papers admit no articles assailing the doctrines or practices of the Brotherhood.

The query asking that the wearing of hats by ladies be not made a bar to membership was not adopted, and the rule against hats remains in force.

This year the Council was free from the distracting questions of many past meetings, viz: Whether coats shall be worn with a standing or rolling collar, and whether baptism in a pool is valid.

The Tunkers were founded in 1708 in Germany, by Alexander Mack. Many of them, under persecution, came to America between 1719 and 1729, and here they have flourished to some extent. They are most numerous in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Maryland, Virginia and Indiana, and number 500 churches and 50,000 communicants. In some respects they are very like to the Quakers. They dress very plainly and talk precisely, and will not fight nor take any oaths; they observe the Lord's Supper, however, which the Quakers do not. They will not go to law, and until recently the taking of interest on money was not allowed. They anoint the sick with oil for recovery, and in baptismal immersion, in connection with dipping (even while the person baptized is in the water), they lay on hands and pray.

At one time in Germany they had a monastic order; celibacy was considered a virtue, but the members of the order might marry if they wished. It is claimed that they had a Sunday school, organized forty years before Raikes organized the present general system, and that it was continued thirty years.

DEATH OF JUDGE KERR.

Judge John Kerr died at his residence in Reidsville, N. C., on the 5th inst. He was born in Virginia in 1811, but to North Carolina he gave the services of a noble life. He was a brilliant orator and an able counsellor at law. As a politician he was not successful, though he once represented his district in Congress. Perhaps the independence of thought, and the inflexibility of manner which characterized him, detracted from his popularity before the masses. At the time of his death he was a Judge of the Superior Court of North Carolina. But in the retrospect of Judge Kerr's life, all earthly honors fade before the fact that he was an humble servant of Christ—a working Christian. He was an ardent Baptist, but we have never heard him charged with aught that could reasonably offend those of different views. The writer of the following extract from the editorial columns of the Wilmington Morning Star knew Judge Kerr intimately, and writing truly, writes from the heart as well:

"John Kerr is dead. A great heart has ceased to beat. A noble, magnanimous soul has passed from this world. There never lived a truer man. He hated meanness and he loved his friends. During the last years of his life he was full of Christian zeal, and often delivered religious addresses that were marked by the deepest unction and pathos and beauty and eloquence. He leaves a dependent wife and children. The Father of the widow and orphan will watch over them.

"'Never to mansions where the mighty rest,
Since the foundations came a nobler guest.'"

MEETINGS OF PRESBYTERIES.

Presbytery of Montgomery met on August 27th, at Locust Bottom, Va. The Richmond Dispatch says: "Rev. W. R. Coppedge was elected Moderator; clerks, Rev. J. C. Dinwiddie and ruling elder L. W. Vermillion, of Giles county. Licentiate W. B. Arrowwood, of Mecklenburg Presbytery, North Carolina, was received under care of Presbytery. Calls were placed in his hands from Walker's Creek, Pearlsburg and Hoge's chapel, in Giles county, and arrangements made to ordain and install him as pastor of those churches. Rev. W. T. Richardson was heard in behalf of the Central Presyterian, and resolutions adopted commending that paper to the patronage of the churches. A colored church, organized at Lynchburg, was taken under care of the Presbytery. Rev. A. H. Price stated that he had ceased to labor in Franklin county, and licentiate W. M. McPheeters was directed to occupy that field. Presbytery decided in favor of a division of the Synod of Virginia into two or three synods, expressing its preference for the division into three."

Presbytery of Roanoke met August 27th at Briery church. An overture was received from the session of Drake's Branch church asking, "Whether an elder or deacon may not demit his office just as a minister, according to chap. XII., sec. 3, of the Rules of Discipline, if fully satisfied in his own conscience that God has not called him to the office?" Upon the recommendation of a committee consisting of Drs. Peck, Alexander, and Wharey, the overture was answered in the affirmative.

Resolutions were unanimously passed condemning the traffic in ardent spirits, and declaring it to be the duty of pastors and church sessions to warn church members against it.

A permanent Sabbath committee, as recommended by the General Assembly, was appointed. Rev. H. A. Brown, Dr. H. C. Alexander and elder W. W. Read constitute the committee.

A pastoral letter on the subject of the Sabbath was adopted and ordered to be printed and circulated.

A committee was appointed to organize a church at Birch Creek chapel on the second Sabbath in October.

NOTES AND JOTTINGS.

The Central Presbyterian church in St. Louis continues to furnish the papers with news items. The last is that after the congregation consented to sell, the trustees of the Unitarian congregation declined to buy, and so the matter stands at present.

The falling off of receipts into our treasury has reached a point that requires us to seriously expostulate. Crops are coming in now and we must ask for remembrance by our friends. Many persons dislike to receive personal reminders through the mail, and we certainly dislike to send them, but we will be compelled to do so, if we cannot have a prompt response to this appeal. Please send any arrears at once!

The last New York Legislature passed a law prohibiting such public performances as knife and sword playing, shooting apples or balls from the heads of persons, and the like—that is such as are dangerous to the performers. It also requires managers of public resorts, such as Long Branch and others, to provide surf or life-boats for securing bathers in time of danger. Hunting, trapping and the like on Sunday are forbidden, and other wise regulations of a similar character have been made.

Some who are much younger than Dr. Jeter, of the Religious Herald, will appreciate the truth of the following remarks by him. The subject is worthy of deep thought:

"In nothing has there been so striking a change among Baptists, within the range of my observation, as in religious conversation. We have now much talk on topics, more or less closely connected with religion. We hear much of plans for usefulness, the doings of conventions, the merit of preachers, the qualities of books, the progress of churches, and the like; but we rarely hear a conversation on personal piety. That was the almost universal topic among our fathers. Wherever and whenever they met, they conversed of their experience—the dealings of God with their souls. Children would listen with great interest to the accounts they gave of their conversion, their doubts and fears, their joys and hopes, and their conflicts with temptation. The young were strongly impressed with the reality and importance of religion by these unstudied but very sincere conversations, which were not unfrequently accompanied by tears."

There is no such thing as religion tolerated in Spain, that is evident from what is transpiring there. The Secretary of the Evangelical Continental Society reports one of its agents as being tried "for burying a person, at the request of the relatives, in a cemetery which the priests claim as their exclusive property; another one is being tried for holding meetings in a village to which he had been invited." The latter has been tried twice before and sentenced to fine and imprisonment, and his present trial is on appeal. A colporteur was imprisoned for holding religious service. At Camunas the Protestant pastor and the Catholic priest are alike persecuted. The villagers stated to the former that though they liked him personally they had sworn to destroy the Protestant cause. The Catholic had to leave. The Protestant says he will remain at his post to the end, though the whole community is greatly excited and the peril to him and his family is very great. He has a Sunday school attended by thirty-four children and six adults; besides this he preaches and distributes many copies of the Bible.

NEWS NOTES.

We specially invite news from all quarters for this column.

Rev. P. P. Winn writes to us under date of September 3rd: "On last Monday night we closed a very interesting meeting at Troutman's Depot, six miles south of Statesville. The venerable Dr. Nall came on the Monday preceding, and preached twice every day for a week. Brother Anthony, of the Lutheran Church, and his people, cordially united with us in the services, part of which were held in the Lutheran Church, and part in a public hall where I preach monthly. The Lord blessed the preaching of His word. God's people were revived, and several, we trust, brought to a personal interest in the Saviour. Brother Nall impressed himself upon us as a man "mighty in the Scriptures." He is to begin a meeting at Unity Church, in Rowan county, on next Friday. May the Lord bless his preaching there.

REVIVAL AT STEELE CREEK.

An interesting and successful revival of religion has been progressing for the past week in Steele Creek Church, in this county. The pastor, Rev. John Douglas, has been assisted by Rev. J. Lowrie Wilson, of York, and Mr. Trenholm, of Chester, and services have been conducted day and night. The church building, which is a very large one, could not seat all who attended on last Sabbath. Twenty-one were received into the church on examination and three on certificate. All of the meetings have been well attended and a deep interest was manifested throughout. We rarely ever hear sermons that surpass those preached by Messrs. Trenholm and Wilson, who conducted the services on Sunday, and at which time the pastor also administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Steele Creek is now probably the largest and most intelligent congregation of the Presbyterian Church in this section of the South.—Southern Home.

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY,
VIRGINIA, September 4, '79.

Editor N. C. Presbyterian:

DEAR SIR: Last Monday, the evening of the 1st of September, was an important epoch in the history of this beloved "school of the prophets." It was the appointed time for laying the corner-stone of the new library building which is now being erected at this place. A large number of persons were present to witness the exercises of the hour. The stone was laid under the direction of the Masonic order. Solemnity was given to the occasion by prayer and the singing of a hymn, peculiar to the order, with a very familiar old tune. After they laid the stone and tried the square, level, &c., they poured upon it corn for nourishment, oil for joy, and wine for refreshment. When these exercises were concluded all repaired to the Seminary chapel to hear an address by Rev. Dr. B. M. Smith. The address was very interesting and appropriate, embracing a brief historical sketch of the Seminary, and setting forth the object contemplated in erecting a building for the library.

The number of volumes now in the library is about 11,000, and the books from first to last have been selected with very great care, the object being to train the mind, and so furnish it with the truth of God's word that all who leave this school may be well prepared to proclaim the Gospel with power, in purity and simplicity. The capacity of the building which will soon be erected will be conveniently about 30,000 or 35,000 volumes if filled. Some matters of very great importance have been taken into consideration in the plan of this house: First, as to heating comfortably in winter; secondly, as to ventilation in summer; and third as to light.

The windows will be constructed to afford the very best light, and in addition there will be a skylight.

The library building and library are for the present generation, not only, but for generations to come. It will be open from early forenoon till late in the day, and all who will may spend their time in acquiring knowledge. Especially any who wish to inform themselves on religious or moral subjects will find this institution useful. The books in general are standards for reference, though many are for attentive and thorough study—text books and the like.

At Union Seminary the Bible is the supreme text book. All of the studies accord to its teachings. The purest Calvinistic doctrine—rather the strictest Presbyterianism—is presented, defined, illustrated and enforced upon the mind, in harmony with its revelation in the Scriptures. The Synods of Virginia and North Carolina have cause to be thankful to God for such a noble institution of learning as Union Seminary; an institution than which none can furnish more competent professors, or purer knowledge. Let us continually thank the Giver of all good for this great blessing.

All the students have not yet returned. When all are in their places there will be nearly or quite as many as last year; at present forty-four students are here.

Hampden-Sidney College opened to-day, with about forty students. Parents could not do better than to send their sons to this institution. L. A.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

The Preacher and Homiletic Monthly is again at hand. We had not received this magazine for a month or two, and really thought it had discontinued its visits. We are free to say we miss it when it fails to appear, for though we cannot agree to all that all of the sermons as published contain, there is very great variety, and the editor's views appear to be sound. The present number contains sermons by Dr. McCosh, Dr. Van Dyke, Dr. Tyng, Horatio Bonar and many others, Studies in the Book of Revelations, Science in the Pulpit, by Rev. John Moore; Expository Preaching, by Dr. Wm. M. Taylor—besides the usual standing departments, such as, Queries and Answers, Preachers Exchanging Views, Sermonic Criticism, &c. Several new features of interest will be added to the new volume, which commences with the next number. Rev. Dr. Cuyler, unsurpassed as a writer, will furnish a monthly series of articles full of suggestions to preachers; Dr. Deems will write on the Preacher's Work; Dr. W. M. Taylor will continue his articles on Expository Preaching. Clergymen subscribing before October 1st can get the magazine for $2. The price is $2 50. Address and remit to I. K. Funk & Co., 21 Barclay street, New York.

We return our thanks for a copy of Dr. A. R. Ledoux's Annual Report of the North Carolina Agricultural Experiment Station for 1879. A rapid glance shows that it is a very interesting and highly valuable work, particularly to the farmer. The analyses of seed and of commercial fertilizers are particularly valuable.

The North Carolina Farmer, published monthly at Raleigh, by J. H. Ennis, at $1 per annum, is exceedingly low priced, considering the number, the variety and the value of the articles it contains.

Webster's Speeches: The great orations and speeches of Daniel Webster, with an introductory essay on "Daniel Webster as a Master of English Style," by Edwin P. Whipple, with a new portrait. 8vo.; cloth $3.

A really valuable work, to be published Sept. 15. The publishers, Little, Brown & Co., Boston, Mass., claim that this is the first good collection of Webster's best speeches, which has been furnished in one volume at a popular price, and they further say: "To bring the masterpieces of our great statesman and orator into more accessible form, so cheap that they can be owned in every American household where good books are read, the publishers have issued a large octavo volume of nearly 800 pages, containing the speeches which have especially given renown to the name of Webster. The fact that the subjects are such as not now to excite party criticism, only gives them the more value as noble and permanent specimens of statesmanlike statement, argument and eloquence. In respect to mere diction, the volume commends itself to every young student and professional man as a model of style—clear, terse, strong, bright, inspiring. Every word which Webster uses is thoroughly alive with the forces of his mind and character. However vehemently men may have disagreed with his opinions, nobody ever questioned the fact that he so understood the art of writing English that his place is among the foremost of the prose-writers of the United States. The preparatory essay on "Webster as a Master of English Style," by Edwin P. Whipple, is an interesting and critical examination of the elements of style and matter which make these speeches so much more readable to-day than those of other great orators of former generations."
